"Yes, I be," she replied with great energy; then turning to her companion she added in an explanatory voice, "I thought I'd wait till Bill went out. Let him vote first, then I'll go." Then turning to her visitor, she said: "I've had all the rights I've wanted all my life—a right to work, I mean. I've fetched coal and wood, and done my housework and sewing, and brought up my children, and now if there's anything else to get, I'm going to have it. I didn't care much about voting on this school question, but when it comes to voting on prohibition, I'm there."

"Then you don't believe in the license law?" inquired her visitor.

"No, I don't believe in the license law, and I'm going to vote against it the first chance I get. Now I'm going to vote for school-committee, if that's all they'll allow me to do. Talk about woman being the weaker sex," she went on with scorn ineffable in voice and manner, "talk about woman being the weaker sex—why I've seen a great big man, well as any could be, eat his full allowance three time every day, without the least trouble, so weak that he couldn't get round the corner without going into the grocery to get a drink. Going to vote? Yes, I guess I be!" And she did.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company. Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York. 43-1y.

Resolved, By the General assembly of the State of Ohio, that our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to vote in favor of the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to remove the duty on paper imported into this country to be used in printing books, periodicals and newspapers.

The resolution was laid on the table and ordered printed. The great interest shown in the matter has attracted the attention of the General Assembly, and the pressure being brought to bear by the newspapers and publishing-houses is so great that it is probable the bill will be brought up at an early day and passed.

CAPT. RUCKER'S column, pursuing Victoria's band of hostiles in New Mexico, has met with a reverse. The savages opened fire on the troops in a canon, and the latter retreated, losing several men and all their bedding and supplies.

GOV. HOYT, of Wyoming Territory, has made himself very much disliked. Charges are made reflecting severely upon his moral character. A few nights since a large party of men hauled a heavy cannon in front of the Governor's residence, at Cheyenne, and stationed it at the gate, pointing outward. The American flag was displayed thereon; also two placards reading: "The Governor must be protected at all hazards; women must be respected regardless of color." This display of warlike material caused great excitement among the Cheyennites, and there was talk of making an assault upon the Governor's forces and capturing the gun. There is intense feeling throughout Wyoming against Hoyt. The entire press, with only two exceptions, demands his immediate removal.

THE Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company has bought the St. Joseph and Des Moines narrow-gauge road, and will change it to a standard-gauge road and extend it to Mount Ayr, Iowa. F. H. BOWEN, of Dubuque, Iowa, adopted a rather novel method of putting an end to his life. He asked for a pail of water that he might bathe his feet before retiring to bed. This was supplied him, and his wife retired to her own chamber, leaving him alone. Next morning, on opening his room door, she was horrified to find him dead. He had taken the pail of water and placed it underneath the side rail of the bedstead, then rolled back the tick. He removed two of the cross slats of the bed, climbed upon the bedstead, thrust his head through the aperture into the pail of water, and was discovered in this position. Mr. Bowen was a newspaper writer of considerable ability.

A MARION (Ohio) dispatch gives an account of the discovery of perpetual motion by William S. Obern and William T. Hyett, of Marion county. The truth of the discovery is vouched for by leading citizens. It consists of a large iron wheel containing a large number of slides, inclined planes, etc. It will start itself. Obern is a miller by trade and Hyett is a mechanic. They have been working at the machine for some time. A model has been made and sent to Washington for a patent.

GENERAL.

FOR the first time in the history of the Roman Catholic Church an Archbishop of that organization has been removed from office and his effects turned over to a coadjutor. This is the fate imposed upon Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, by Pope Leo XIII. The deposed prelate, whose sin was in having maladministered funds intrusted to his keeping, goes into retreat at a convent in Brown county, Ohio.

WASHINGTON.

AS THE Committee on Ways and Means does not appear inclined to take up the bill reducing the duty on paper, Mr. Fort says he will endeavor to have the measure passed some Monday under a suspension of the rules. The paper manufacturers are confident that it will be impossible to pass the bill.

THE House Committee on Commerce has decided to report Mr. Henderson's bill regulating inter-State railroads, with a recommendation that it pass. This measure is intended as a substitute for the Reagan and McLean bills.

THE Secretary of the Treasury is considering a proposal to so change the signal code on the rivers as to give descending steamers, in fact as well as in theory, the right of way.

THE Superintendent has decided that women are eligible for appointment as census enumerators....A Washington dispatch says the Senate Committee on Elections has taken a vote on the Ingalls case, but has decided to keep it secret for the present. It is learned, however, that there will be two reports, and that the report of the Democratic majority is not likely to be satisfactory to either party in the Senate. The finding, it is said, of the resolution will be that no act has been discovered which warrants the unseating of Ingalls. But the majority will criticise Kansas election methods very sharply, and intimate that, in their opinion, some corruption was used to secure Ingalls' seat, but that he (Ingalls) knows nothing of it.... The Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department decides that land-grant railroads cannot deviate from the lines of route originally located without subjecting themselves to the charge of building a different road. It is admitted that some deflections may be necessary, but substantial compliance with the act of location will be insisted on.

THE House Committee on Indian Affairs have agreed to a bill which provides that no more Indians shall be located in the Indian Territory except by the consent of Congress in every case.

He would prefer his place in the Senate....A Sherman club has been organized in New York....Bayard is the favorite Presidential candidate among the Harvard students.... A Blaine club has been formed in Washington. ....Ben Hill has written a letter in which he says if Gen. Grant is the candidate for the Presidency this year he will not carry a Southern State.

THERE was a somewhat notable political gathering in New York the other evening. It first took the shape of a banquet, in honor of Senator John P. Jones, of Nevada, given at Delmonico's by ex-Senator S. W. Dorsey, of Arkansas. Fifty-one prominent Republicans, including Senators Conkling, Don Cameron, Booth, Windom, and Allison, were present. The party resolved itself into a sort of caucus after the dinner, when it was found that forty were for Grant and eleven for Blaine for President.

SENATOR DAWES has been selected to preside over the Massachusetts Republican State Convention at Worcester, April 15, to elect four delegates-at-large to the National Convention, and the Hon John E. A mine had been laid directly under the dining-room of the Winter Palace, at St. Petersburg, and the explosion was so timed as to involve the destruction of the entire family had they entered the room at the usual hour. A brief delay, however, saved the lives of the imperial occupants, although five soldiers were killed and thirty-five were more or less injured.

THE new Russian expedition against the Turcomans will be divided into three columns, Gen. Skobeleff commanding the main army, numbering 20,000 men.

REGARDING the famine in Ireland, a Dublin dispatch reports: "Accounts from the country the past few days have been more hopeful. There is much suffering, but no starvation, except in far-off islands, to which relief is being sent without delay or stint. In parts of Donegal the want is great, but the Dublin Mansion House fund has been made promptly available. Agrarian agitation may be said to be completely at an end. Attempts to get up meetings of the sort recently have all failed....A Milan newspaper says the Austrian Government has asked Bismarck if he would oppose Austria should she ever find it necessary to take measures hostile to Italy, and that the Chancellor has replied that he would not.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

The Senate was not in session on the 13th inst., and in the House very little of general interest was transacted. On motion of Mr. Torrey, the Senate amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill were non-concurred in. Mr. Wells, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back a bill making an appropriation of $125,000 for the support of certain Indian tribes during the present fiscal year, and it passed. A resolution was adopted calling for information in regard to an inter-oceanic canal. Mr. Price offered a resolution calling for information as to whether any railroad company other than the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company has made application for the right to use the Government bridge over the Mississippi river at Rock Island, which was adopted. The House then went into committee on the private calendar.

The Senate was not in session on Saturday, Feb. 14, and in the House only talking for buncombe was indulged in. Three or four set speeches were delivered, mostly upon the finance question, hardly any one being present except the speakers.

In the Senate, on Monday, Feb. 16, Messrs. Windom, Blaine and Withers were appointed a conference committee on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill. Nearly the whole session was consumed in discussion of the 5 per cent. Military Land Warrant bill, Mr. Allison making a long argument in favor of the bill, and Mr. Edmunds opposing it.... In the House, the morning hour having expired while bills were being introduced, Mr. Weaver demanded the regular order, and the Speaker immediately recognized Mr. Goffroth, as Chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to move to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution for a session Wednesday night for the consideration of pension bills. This brought forth a protest from Mr. Weaver, but the Speaker adhered to his ruling. Bills were introduced: by Mr. Townshend (Ill.), to repeal the duty on medicines; by Mr. Henderson, reducing the duty on iron and steel; by Mr. Richardson (S. C.), to return to the producers of cotton the tax collected by the Government which has been declared by the United States Supreme Court to have been illegally collected; by Mr. Persons, admitting free of duty machinery for manufacturing cotton fabrics; by Mr. Keifer, granting pensions to certain sailors and soldiers of the late war who were confined in the so-called Confederate prisons; by Mr. House, requesting the President to open negotiations with certain foreign Governments relative to the importation of tobacco into their dominions; by Mr. Baker, amending the statutes prohibiting the employment of convicts in the manufacture of such articles as may be brought in competition with skilled labor; by Mr. Frost, to repeal certain sections of the acts relative to the use of Marshals and Supervisors at the polls. On motion of Mr. Bragg, the Senate bill for the removal of the body of the late Gen. George Sykes from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, N. Y., was taken from the Speaker's table and passed. Discussion upon the lottery bill, forbidding lotteries in the District of Columbia, occupied the remainder of the day.

Many petitions were presented in the Senate on the 17th inst., from railroad companies, against the reduction of the duty on steel rails. Mr. Saulsbury presented a majority report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Ingalls case. The report finds that bribery and corruption were employed to secure Mr. Ingalls' election, but that there is no evidence that Ingalls authorized such improper acts, or that they, in fact, secured his election. Mr. Cameron (Wis.) presented a minority report, signed by Hoar, Logan and himself, concurring in that part of the majority report which exonerates Ingalls, but expressing the opinion that, when the report states corruption was employed, it should in justice state what was proved, that such means were employed in opposition to his election. The reports were ordered printed. Mr Randolph introduced an amendment to the Fitz-John Porter bill, authorizing the President to appoint Gen. Porter a Colonel of infantry, with commission dating from 1861. Mr. Logan presented a resolution sending a naval vessel to Ireland with relief. Mr. Jones presented a memorial of the Union Soldiers' Association of New Orleans, asking the Senate to reject Kellogg as Senator from Louisiana. Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. Thurman, for the construction of a building for the use of the United States at Toledo, Ohio; by Mr. Vest, for the improvement of the Missouri river at St. Charles. The bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury to employ additional clerks to facilitate the transaction of pension and other business was taken up, and, after a long discussion, passed. The 5 per cent. Land Warrant bill was considered until adjournment. John S. Stidger, Third District of Iowa, was rejected as Census Supervisor.....In the House, the District of Columbia Lottery bill was considered and laid over. The House then resumed consideration, in the morning hour, of the bill regulating the removal of causes from State to Federal Courts, and Mr. Knott spoke upon the bill, which went over. The remainder of the day was passed in committee of the whole upon the revision of the rules.

The joint resolution passed the Senate, Feb. 18, which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to employ a naval vessel or charter a ship for the purpose of transporting to the famishing and poor of Ireland such contributions as may be made for their relief. Mr. Thurman, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely the Senate bill extending the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Courts, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. The Military Warrant bill was debated the whole day....In the House, a bill was introduced by Mr. Morton, fixing the duty on malt at 25 cents per bushel. Mr. Wood reported the Refunding bill, and it was made the special order for the first Tuesday in March. Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to secure a more uniform collection of duties on imported sugars. The bill to regulate the removal of causes from State to Federal courts was debated in the morning hour. Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the unanimous report of the committee in regard to the charges made against Mr. Acklen, of Louisiana. The committee found that Mr. Acklen did present such a report as alleged, but they make no recommendation, not having been instructed to do so by the House. Considerable discussion ensued as to whether any further action should be taken in the matter by the House. The House finally referred the Acklen matter to the Judiciary Committee, to investigate and report what further action, if any, is necessary.

SHERMAN.

His Replies to the Senate Finance Committee.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.

The statement of Secretary Sherman to the Senate Finance Committee in secret session has been printed from the stenographer's notes. The following five questions were asked:

1. What reason, if any, is there for refusing to pass a bill authorizing the receipt of legal tenders for customs duties?
2. Why should not the trade-dollar be converted into a standard dollar?
3. What has been the cost of converting the interest-bearing debt, as it stood July 14, 1870, to what it is now, including double interest?
4. The effect of the abolition of the legal-tender quality of greenbacks upon the paper currency.
5. The necessity for a sinking-fund, and how it is managed.

Secretary Sherman's answers are contained in quite a large pamphlet, of which the following is a brief summary:

To the first inquiry Secretary Sherman, in substance, answers: The United States, by act of Feb. 25, 1860, provided that the duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, and that coin shall be reserved as a special fund for the payment of interest on the public debt and the notes of the United States. There is no objection to receiving legal tenders for customs so long as legal tenders remain at par. The department can keep up this practice only as long as parties holding interest obligations are willing to accept the same notes in payment therefor. If from any cause the legal tenders should depreciate below coin, the Government would be required to pay the interest on the public debt in coin, and if customs dues were payable in legal-tender notes the treasury would have no gold supply. Referring to the statement in the annual report of December, 1878, that on the 1st of January he would receive United States notes for customs dues, Secretary Sherman says he now concludes that it would be better to leave the law as it is, leaving the Government the right to demand payment in coin for customs dues, and the individual the authority to demand coin for interest of the public debt. In other words, he thinks that to pass a law authorizing the receipt of legal tenders for customs would be to substitute for a fixed contract between the Government and the holder of its obligations a mere order of the Treasury Department. He would have no objection to a law with this provision: "As long as treasury notes are redeemable into coin at the sub-treasury in New York." The Attorney General, it appears, has expressed the opinion that the treasury technically could treat the note as a coin certificate. The legal-tender notes are now only received in the nature of a coin certificate. Inasmuch as Congress has not dissented to this construction of the law, Secretary Sherman considers that he has a right to continue to receive the legal tenders for coin. Secretary Sherman thinks a law passed in the following form would remove the objection: "That to receive legal-tenders for customs dues would violate obligations to creditors. Notes thus received will in every instance be deposited with the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer of the United States, as are other collections of such duties, to be redeemed from time to time in coin on Government account as the convenience of the service may demand."

In response to the question why the trade dollar should not be converted into a standard silver dollar, Secretary Sherman said: "There is no objection, in my mind, to provide for exchange of the trade dollar for the standard silver dollar. The only point is whether the trade dollar shall be treated as bullion or as a coined dollar of the United States. Now I am clearly of the opinion that it ought to be treated as so much bullion issued at the expense of the merchants for their convenience and benefit, and without profit to the United States, and, therefore, not entitled to any preference over other bullion; and we might say not so much, because it was issued to private parties for their benefit and at their cost, but stamped by the United States merely to enable the coins to be used to better advantage in a foreign market. I have not, therefore, any objection to the bill, if you allow the United States to pay the same for these trade dollars as for other bullion."

As an answer to the question "What effect the legal-tender quality of the greenbacks will have on our paper currency?" Secretary Sherman refers the committee to his last annual report.

The expense of refunding $500,000,000 of 5-per-cent. bonds was $2,500,000.

Mr. Sherman's answer to the inquiry as to the sinking fund contained nothing new on the silver question. He referred the committee to his interview with the House Commerce Committee last year.

PAPER DUTIES.

A Proposition to Repeal Taxes on Soda-Ash and Knowledge.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.

There has been no action taken with respect to the Fort bill reducing the tariff on paper. Mr. Fort says that he has recently received a number of letters from persons interested in the manufacture of paper, most of them protesting against his bill. He has received marked newspaper articles severely criticising his bill, but those are merely from high-tariff localities. Some of the papers, however, have been undergoing a change of heart on the question since its agitation was begun.

Mr. Fort has talked with several members of the Ways and Means Committee, who look with favor on his bill. It is likely that the committee will report the bill favorably to the House, after which its fate will, of course, be uncertain. If the committee does not report it to the House, Mr. Fort will offer it under a suspension of the rules, if he can get the floor for that purpose, and force a vote on it.

Mr. Fort has had some communication with paper-men, who claim they have put up the price because of the heavy duty on the material, such as soda-ash, entering into its manufacture. Still this duty is no higher than it was when they were selling paper much lower than now. There is no duty on rags and some other ingredients of paper, and that on soda-ash is what it has been for years. Mr. Fort argues that, if the duty on soda-ash makes the cost of paper high, then to take off that duty will help the paper man and enable them to make it more cheaply. Mr. Fort says the duty is a clear profit to the manufacturers. The cost of transportation of foreign paper to this country, he thinks, would be ample protection to the manufacturers here. Indeed, if the duty were entirely removed, the paper men would make a comfortable profit. The bill does not touch any of the fancy papers, and only affects that needed for books and newspapers.

SENATE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Synopsis of the Testimony Elicited by the Voorhees Committee.

Green Ruffin, a middle-aged colored man, from Wilson, N. C., and formerly the slave of ex-Member of Congress Thomas Ruffin, testified that he left North Carolina early in December and went to Indianapolis, and was now "aimin' to get back and jis die dar." This exodus "was 'bomination on his race." J. B. Sypax, who resides near Arlington, Va., and who was once a member of the Virginia Legislature, was called, and stated that in the testimony which he intended to give he would charge Senator Windom with originating the exodus, but as the Senator was absent he requested the committee to postpone the examination until the Senator could be present.

R. C. Badger, of North Carolina, a prominent Republican politician, stated that he had made a close study of the negro character before and since emancipation; that the race was slowly and gradually improving, and growing more thrifty and self-reliant. When the war ended both whites and blacks were bankrupt; but they have since slowly emerged from that condition of poverty. The blacks do not get strict justice in the courts, as they are more easily convicted—convicted on weaker testimony, for larceny, than the whites. He did not believe there was any good reason for the exodus from North Carolina; that the blacks could not compete with the white laborers of Indiana, and he felt satisfied they were going to a state of starvation when they emigrated to the State of Indiana. Referring to the educational facilities in North Carolina, he said the blacks were afforded the same common-school facilities as the whites. John B. Syphax, a Virginia colored politician, who had promised to show that Senator Windom was the originator of the exodus movement, was placed in the witness chair, and, somewhat to the surprise of the committee, he absolutely knew nothing, except that Mr. Windom introduced a bill in the Senate to encourage the emigration to the North of Southern negroes. Mr. Windom asked the witness if they had a lunatic asylum in Virginia, and, being informed by Syphax that they had, inquired further, "How did you escape from it?" After considerable badinage had passed between the Senator and witness on the subject of lunacy and lunatics, Syphax retired.

A Glacier in Colorado.

A gentleman who has, during the past two years, traversed the mountains in the vicinity of Leadville, and penetrated almost every one of the secret recesses informs us that there is within twenty-five miles of this city one of the most interesting curiosities of nature—a veritable glacier, presenting all the characteristics of the glaciers of Switzerland, both in magnitude and motion, its progress being gradually down the gulch. The scene of this curiosity is located in the Mosquito range, about fifteen miles north of the pass. Our informant states that he first discovered it about three years ago, while out on a prospecting tour. It was then nearly a mile in length, and at the bottom of the gulch presented a sheer precipice of ice not less than 150 feet in height. Later in the season the place was visited again, when it was found that the great mass of ice had melted until at its face it was not more than 100 feet high, the loss from the surface reducing its length to about half a mile. Again, early the following year, the place was visited, and the glacier was found to have regained its bulk, showing that the accumulation of ice and snow during the winter was about one-third its gross bulk. The rocks on the sides of this immense mass of ice show the marks of attrition, proving beyond all controversy that the glacier is in motion. Indeed, the earth at the foot of the glacier, heaved up in great masses, shows that it is gradually moving down the gulch into the valley. During the summer a large stream of water flows from the face of the icy cliff. Our informant is of the opinion that the glacier, as it progresses out of the deep gorge in which it formed will slowly melt away, and that it will not last many years. It is out of the way of ordinary travel, and the route to the scene is exceedingly difficult, to that it is not likely to be visited by prospectors and hunters.—Leadville Herald.

Warning to a Policeman.

While defendant in a case in the Tennessee Supreme Court, a constable, was conveying to jail a prisoner convicted of assault and battery, and committed to jail, the prisoner attempted to escape. To prevent the escape defendant, after giving the prisoner notice to halt, shot and killed him. Held, that the homicide was not justifiable. In cases where the person slain is arrested or held in custody for a misdemeanor, and he fly or attempt to escape, it will be murder in the officer to kill him, although he cannot be otherwise overtaken. Yet under some circumstances it may be only manslaughter, as if it appears death was not intended. It is considered better to allow one guilty of a misdemeanor to escape altogether than to take his life.—Albany Law Journal.

Must Answer Their Questions.

The penalties for obstructing the census takers, who begin their labors on the first Monday in June, are severe. The law says:

"All persons above the age of 21 years who shall refuse to furnish the information required by the Supervisor or enumerator shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $100, to be recovered in an action of debt. President, Directors or other officials of private corporations who refuse to furnish information required of them are made liable to a penalty not to exceed $10,000."

Try.

The late Gov. Steele, of New Hampshire, once said of his fellow-townsman, Mr. John Smith, of Peterboro: "To him I owe more than I can express. * * * He taught me to believe that there is nothing impossible—nothing that a willing mind and active hand cannot accomplish. I yet seem to hear his voice reproving me for saying, 'I cannot do it!' 'Why don't you try?' he would say, 'and not stand there looking as if you were in a trance.'"

IT is proposed to change the name of Central Park, New York, to Irving Park, in honor of Washington Irving.

A Smart Boy.

A young man called on his intended, and while waiting for her to make her appearance he struck up a conversation with his intended brother-in-law. After a while the boy asked:

"Does galvanized niggers know much?"

"I really can't say," replied the much-amused young man.

And then silence reigned for a few moments when the boy renewed his conversation.

"Kin you play checkers with your nose?"

"No, I have never acquired that accomplishment."

"Well, you'd better learn, you hear me!"

"Why?"

"'Cause Sis says that you don't know as much as a galvanized nigger, but yer dad's got lots of stamps and she'll marry you anyhow; and she said when she got hold of the old man's sugar she was going to all of the Fourth of July percessions and ice-cream gum-sucks, and let you stay at home and play checkers with that hollyhock nose of yourn."

And when Sis got her hair banged and came in, she found the parlor deserted by all save her brother, who was innocently tying the tails of two kittens together and singing:

Oh, I love the Sunday school.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

Commander Gorringe, who has charge of the transportation of Cleopatra's Needle from Egypt to New York, has again been heard from on the subject of the emblems discovered at the foundation of the monolith. He is firmly convinced that they are undoubtedly Masonic, and that they unmistakably prove the Egyptian origin of Masonry.

The discussion as to the advisability of doing criminals to death by electricity has received a practical contribution from a musician named Bruno, who, on passing the battery used to supply the electric lights of the Holte Theater, in Birmingham, England, carelessly placed his hand on the wire, and received the full shock of the current. He fell unconscious, and died in a short time.

Tweed's horse-palace is rivaled by a stable belonging to Baron Rothschild, of Vienna. He has a favorite horse, for whose accommodation he has had a special loose box built at a cost of $12,000. This elegant room forms part of a new stable which cost $80,000, and which has marble floors; encaustic tiles, painted by distinguished artists; rings, chains and drain-traps of silver, and walls frescoed with splendid hunting scenes from the pencils of eminent animal painters. The Baron's annual income is, fortunately, $1,600,000.

Appearances are deceitful. So thought the grave digger at a funeral in Ottawa, Ontario, who, after he had thrown the third shovelful of earth on the coffin, was startled by the dead man's kicking off the top of the coffin, and making a terrible to-do about the situation he was in; and so did two of four impromptu pall bearers who picked up a man that fell dead on the streets of Leadville, and were carrying him to the station, when he sprang to his feet and, felling two of them to the ground and wrenching himself free from the other two, fled up the street.

Lawyer Clinton's little bill of $250,000 against W. H. Vanderbilt is a fair sample of the greed of many attorneys. Mr. Clinton defended Vanderbilt in the suit brought by the other children to break the "Old Commodore's" will. Probably the actual legal services performed in the case were not intrinsically worth more than $5,000, and, if Mr. Vanderbilt had stipulated with his counsel on the start, he would have undertaken the defense for that sum. But Mr. Clinton probably sized his client's pile and put in a bill accordingly. Mr. Vanderbilt very naturally refuses to pay the bill.

John C. Robinson, known as the lightning proof-reader, has just died in New York. In deciphering manuscripts he was a marvel. He read Richard Hildreth's, Horace Greeley's, Count Pulaski's, Gerritt Smith's and other crabbed manuscripts almost at a glance. When Mr. Greeley was unable to decipher one of his own written sentences he referred it to Mr. Robinson, who made out its meaning. In the canvass of 1866 a letter from Mr. Greeley was sent to the night editor of the Tribune. It inclosed an editorial article favoring the election of a well-known Republican who was running on an independent ticket. It was the night before election. The article was put in type. The manuscript fell under the eyes of Mr. Robinson. "That's not the old man's handwriting," he said. He was so confident that it was a forgery that the article was suppressed. So skillful was the forgery that on the following day Mr. Greeley said that, had he not known differently, he would have taken it to be his own handwriting. Mr. Robinson's rapidity in reading a proof-sheet was unparalleled.

The employment a few weeks ago in Scotland of a clairvoyant to discover the bodies of the victims of the Tay bridge disaster does not appear to have been rewarded by success. An experiment, however, as singular, if not more so, was, according to the Annual Register of 1767, tried in April of that year, at Newbury, in Berkshire, with the view of discovering the body of a child drowned in the river Kennet, and, strange to say, it answered the purpose. At the inquest held on the body it was stated "that, after diligent search had been made in the river for the child with no favorable result, a two-penny loaf, with a quantity of quicksilver put into it was set floating from the place where the child, it was supposed, had fallen in, which steered its course down the river upward of half a mile, before a great number of spectators, when, the body happening to lay on the contrary side of the river, the loaf suddenly tacked about and swam across the river, and gradually sank near the child, when the child and loaf were immediately brought up with grapples ready for that purpose."

Mr. Parnell, says the Springfield Republican, impresses himself upon those who meet him as a genuine man, interesting as men with missions and the conviction that they must be accomplished always are. Like most foreigners he at first strikes an American as rather illy dressed, seems worn by his prodigious labors and taking but a languid interest in his immediate surroundings, though bearing the stamp of a well-bred gentleman. But 33 years old, Mr. Parnell has been five years in Parliament. Questioned as to his work the tremendous energy of the rather pale young man shines out. His eyes light up a scholarly, clean-cut face, and in language moderate and finely chosen he presents his cause. It is evident that he believes in his work, and has sufficient appreciation of its magnitude to be willing to wait confidently for large results. He is not an extremist. His methods differ entirely from those of the anti-slavery agitators, and he is by no means a typical Irishman. He has the English deliberation, the style of conversational declamation which is heard in Parliament, and never rants. He makes no threats and does not talk of bloodshed or revolution; but seeks by fair means to create a just public opinion which shall shame England into giving the Irish people a chance to own land and make homes of their own.

The Emperor of China is just now in a serious difficulty. Young though he is, he has already to maintain some seventy women on his establishment in various capacities, and, like every other gentleman who has ladies under his protection, the duty devolves upon him of clothing them. This would be a comparatively easy task were the seventy fair ones of a reasonable turn of mind. But, unhappily for the peace of the Brother of the Sun and Moon, their extravagance is pronounced to be beyond all bounds. Two hundred and fifty thousand taels, which is more than half of the land tax of the empire, were expended last year in silk, satin, gauze, velvet, red and gilt paper, and pearls. It is said that one dress which is in possession of an Empress was covered last year with seed pearls worked in so peculiar a fashion as to have cost a fabulous sum. With respect to this robe there is trouble ahead. The Empress is aged, though the dress is new. If she die, according to custom, it must be burned, supposing it to be in her possession at the time of her demise. She refuses to part with it, and the idea of this wastefulness, coupled with the prospect of increased extravagance in the coming year, trouble the owner of the vermilion pencil exceedingly.

A True Fable.

A wolf, who was known among his friends as sagacious, swift, sly, and enduring, and who seldom went to bed hungry, one day met a woodchopper's son in the forest. Hostilities between boys and wolves had been suspended for a short time on account of a campmeeting in that neighborhood, and the wolf and the boy therefore sat down on a log to discuss the weather and draw each other out on the transformation theory.

The wolf never had a fair chance to look a boy over. His rule had been to eat them first and look them over afterward. He now observed that his companion was twice as handsome as he was, and the fact rankled in his jealous mind. He forgot that he had been differently graded by nature in the beginning, and he began casting about to see how he could get even. He finally made up his mind that it was the boy's red coat which made all the difference, so he carelessly observed:

"I don't suppose you'd like to part with that old patched coat of yours, would you?"

The boy was up to string-games and balloon ascensions, and so closed with an offer to lend the wolf his coat for a week if the latter would guide him to a den where three young foxes could be secured.

As soon as the wolf secured the coat he wrapped it around him and declared the truce between the wolves and the boys at an end. That had been his little game from the start. Sounding his war-howl, the wolf summoned his friends to help make bologna of poor Tom, but as the eager brutes came up they went for the red coat and the boy went for a tree.

No wolf has any business wearing a boy's outfit, even if it would add to his beauty, and this one was soon clawed into bag-strings and his bones hung on a jack-pine for the wind to fool with.

Looking down from his perch in the tree, the boy remarked:

"In the first place, don't try to play a swine game. In the second place, don't go on the principle that everybody else is a fool."

MORAL:

Preserves won't last without sugar, and your neighbor has just as much right to keep chickens as you have to keep a dog.—Detroit Free Press.

A Lesson.

Old X. lectures his nephew, a confirmed gambler. "Then you never played, did you, uncle?" "Yes, once, in 1847, at Baden. A gentleman whom I didn't know proposed a game of ecarte at 10 francs. I was weak enough to agree; he lost ten games." "Then you must have won 100 francs." "Yes, I won them, that is so; but I might have lost them, and I have never touched a card since; it was a lesson."

FARM NOTES.

A stock-keeper reports curing many bad warts on cattle and horses, during several years, by application to each of "one good daub of tar."

California cultivates Brazilian artichokes, which yield 400 bushels to the acre. They are fine for stock, but are difficult to get out of the ground when once established.

A writer in the Garden says that if potting soil is placed for a day or two in the hen-yard every particle of it is dug over, and all grubs and eggs of insects are picked out.

Buckwheat-straw, which heretofore has been considered of little value, has of late been utilized by some of the Western farmers by chopping it fine and adding meal to it. A small quantity fed to stock occasionally would be relished, no doubt.

Prof. Shelton, of the Kansas Agricultural College, favors September calves, because, dropped in that month, they escape the trying heats of summer, can be pushed during the winter with grain, and in spring are ready for grass as soon as it appears.

A good test of the hardiness of any variety of forest trees is found in the ripening of its seeds (fruit). If a tree does not perfect its seeds in a given locality, it is good evidence that it is not sufficiently hardy to be generally cultivated in such sections.

Bees Wintered on Summer Stands.—"I have wintered on summer stands ten years and have not lost a colony. My plan is to drive stakes around and within six or eight inches, then fill in hay or straw, and cover over to keep rain out."—E. D., Godfrey, Iowa.

Seeding Clover with Millet.—"In June, 1778, I mixed two quarts of clover seed with four to six quarts of millet, as near as I can recollect, and sowed it on about one-fourth of an acre, from which I had taken a crop of potatoes the previous year. The ground was plowed and harrowed before sowing, and the millet and clover dragged. I not only obtained a good crop of millet, but a perfect catch of clover.—E. M. Potter, Kalamazoo, Mich.

To Keep Wells Pure.—A correspondent of the Inter Ocean, writing from Battle Creek, Mich., says that he purified his well of water, which was so subject to many worms, bugs and other insects as to render it almost unfit for drinking, by placing in the well a couple of good-sized trout. They have kept perfectly healthy, and have eaten up every live thing in the water. In the winter season crumbs of bread or crackers are thrown in. The water is perfectly pure and sweet.

Green Manure.—"My success has been very gratifying in sowing corn, oats, buckwheat or rye for plowing under instead of clover. For this purpose I use one or the other of the crops according to the time of the year for sowing, and taking into the calculation the length of time the crop could occupy the land. All these crops, however, could be grown and plowed under within the time required for growing the one crop of clover. In this contains the main advantage of their use over clover as a renovating crop."—Henry Ives, Batavia, N. Y.

Dry Cows.—It is a common practice among some dairymen to give their cows, when dry, but scanty living. When a cow ceases to give milk, or is dried up, any feed is considered enough for her. I think this is a great mistake, and the result is a diminished product of milk, both in quantity and quality, when she does come in. There is a large draught on the system to sustain the calf while the cow is carrying it; and to keep the cow in a good condition good feed is as important as when she is giving milk. It is my opinion that one dollar's worth of feed when the cow is dry is worth one and a half dollars after she comes in. An animal in poor condition cannot digest as much food as an animal in good condition. If the cow is poor when she comes in she will not digest enough food to support the system, and, at the same time, to make a large quantity of milk.—Monthly Bulletin of the American Jersey Cattle Club.

Farmers Who Are Wide Awake.—Farmers who are wide awake and given to investigation don't sow so much wheat to the acre as they formerly did, and they don't sow it so deep. The great, heavy harrows of ten or twenty years ago are not now employed by them in covering seed, and the drill, which can be depended on better, is becoming universally popular. In broadcast sowing, after the ground is thoroughly prepared, the Thomas smoothing-harrow covers the seed deep enough. A Wisconsin writer gives the result of an experiment in planting at different depths—on the surface, one-fourth inch, one-half inch, three-fourths inch and so on to several inches. That on the surface lay two weeks before sprouting; that one-fourth to three-fourths inch deep came up in four or five days, and so on, getting later as the depth increased. The last to come up was planted three and a half inches deep, and was fourteen days in reaching the surface. At the end of six weeks that planted one-fourth to one-half inch deep stood far ahead of the rest.—Michigan Farmer.

Uses of Paper.

So accustomed are we to the use—and abuse—of paper, that we hardly realize its immense importance and value. We are all, high and low, rich and poor, benefited by it. It is almost as necessary to our comfortable existence as the air we breathe, the food we eat, or the water we drink. It is the medium by which we bring those near who are distant from us, and by which we intercommunicate wishes, plans, purposes and business one with another. It makes educational facilities practicable; it furnishes the books we read, and with which we transact all commercial business; it becomes the messenger which gives us our daily, weekly and monthly news and public comment; it represents our money values, and, with the aid of the printing press, passes as a moneyed currency in nearly all civilized lands. The commercial world, the literary world, the mechanical, manufacturing and mercantile worlds, and others of less importance, would be almost valueless, and of but little account, without the ability to command the use of a sheet of paper. It is voice, hearing and eyesight to humanity.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Never use skewers, as they allow meat juices to escape.

Never touch lettuce with a knife, as it impairs the flavor and destroys the crispness of the leaf; always tear it apart with the fingers.

Roots and tubers must be plump, even sized, with fresh, unshriveled skins, and are good from ripening time until they begin to sprout. All green vegetables should be very crisp, fresh and juicy, and are best just before flowering.

Ladies doing their own marketing will do well to remember that young poultry may be told by the tip of the breast-bone being soft and easily bent between the fingers, and when fresh by its bright, full eye, pliant feet and soft, moist skin.

Speaking of pigeons, if a cook can draw her birds without mangling or soiling them, and then compare them so as to combine an inviting appearance with an enjoyable flavor, she proves that she has pursued her art with taste and discretion.

Fresh poultry may be known by its full, bright eyes, pliable feet, and moist skin; the best is plump, fat, and nearly white. The feet and neck of a chicken suitable for broiling are large in proportion to its size; the tip of the breast bone is soft and easily bent between the fingers.

To boil eggs properly place them in a dish having a close cover; pour over boiling water, [illegible] from [illegible]. Eggs cooked in this way are more delicate and digestible than when allowed to boil in the old. The heat of the water cooks them slowly to a jelly-like consistency, leaving the yolk harder than the white.

Beef should be of a bright red color, well streaked with yellowish fat, and surrounded with a thick outside layer of fat. Good mutton is bright red, with plenty of hard white fat. Veal and pork should be of a bright flesh color, with an abundance of hard, white, semi-transparent fat. Lamb of the best kind has delicate, rosy meat, and white, almost transparent, fat.

The American Poultry Yard says: Poultry requires skillful carving. The requisites are grace of manner, ease in the performance, a sharp knife of medium size, a perfect knowledge of the position of joints and the most complete mode of dissecting. Etiquette teaches us that the carver retains his seat while carving, managing his hands and elbows artistically, etc. Common sense teaches us that the carver has far better control over the platter while standing, is more at ease, the knife is less liable to slip, and with the majority of carvers the table-cloth is likely to escape with fewer soiled spots.

Why He Reformed.

Edward Delancey was an old-timer, and he looked it every inch of him as he scraped his boot sole to his honor in the Police Court.

"Back again?" said the magistrate, looking up and recognizing him. "We haven't seen you for many a day."

The prisoner tried to suppress a hiccough, and murmured very solemnly: "No more you have, sir, no more you have. I've been a much-altered man lately. You wouldn't know me for the last six months."

"Indeed. Given up drinking, then?"

"Not a drop of liquor did I taste in all that time, sir. Honor bright."

"You don't mean to say you gave up loafing," said his Honor, in surprise.

"Not a day's work did I lose, sir. Up early and at it right smart till night. Oh, I did not waste my time, depend on it."

"Goodness me, what a reform!"

"Reform! You may well say that. No one saw me out o' nights gallavantin' round. No, indeed, I went right home when work was over, and kept to my room all night. I didn't take even a stroll."

"Wonderful!"

"And, beside, I've got to be quite gentle. I didn't harm a fly all that time. Some fellows were mighty rough on me, too, and ordered me about pooty sharply. But I didn't raise any rumpus; I didn't say a hard word to 'em at all."

"Why, you have been quite a Christian."

"Indeed I have. You wouldn't believe it, but I've been to services regularly every Sunday, and I've got heaps o' tracts given to me."

"Well, wonders will never cease," said his Honor, hesitating to sign the commitment. "But where have you been all the time?"

Honest.

A Vermont pastor attempted a little personal labor by way of remonstrance with one of his parishioners who seldom attended worship, and whose morals were very questionable, and who, withal, was not overstocked with knowledge or brains. He replied in the usual form: "O, I am honest, and love my fellow-men." "Very well," replied the pastor; "but you ought to love God, also." "O, I do," he replied; "I love God and my fellow men, and everything God has made, except these 'tarnal spotted adders." The pastor subsided.

Some men saw by a railroad time-table at Warsaw, Ark., that a certain train was not to stop there. They offered to pay the station agent well if he would somehow get them aboard, but he said it could not be done. Then they tied a rail on the track, which stopped the train, sure enough, but wrecked it so effectually that it could not start again.

DIPHTHERIA.

How to Prevent the Spread of the Dreaded Disease.

The following circular is issued by the Boston Board of Health, for the purpose of more widely extending the knowledge of a few well attested facts concerning diphtheria, and reminding all persons that greater care should be exercised to prevent the spread of this much-dreaded disease. Its cautions and directions are good for every locality. Diphtheria is contagious and infectious, and may be easily communicated, either directly or indirectly, from person to person. It may be conveyed directly in the act of kissing, coughing, spitting, sneezing, or indirectly by infected articles used, as towels, napkins, handkerchiefs, etc.

The poison clings with great tenacity to rooms, houses, articles of furniture and clothing, and may occasion the disease, even after the lapse of months. Diphtheria attacks all classes, at all ages, and at all seasons of the year. By preference it attacks children and those who are debilitated from exposure to filth, dampness or foul air from whatever source.

When a case of diphtheria occurs in any family, the sick person should be placed in a room apart from the other inmates of the house, and should be nursed, as far as possible, by one person only. The sick-chamber should be well warmed and exposed to sunlight and well aired; its furniture should be such as will permit of cleansing without injury, and all extra articles, such as window and table drapery, woolen carpets, upholstered furniture and all hangings, should be removed from the room during the sickness. The physician and nurse, as a rule, should be the only persons admitted to the room.

Visitors to the infected house should be warned of the presence of a dangerous disease therein, and children especially should not be admitted. All clothing removed from the patient, or [illegible] boiling water, or in a tub of disinfecting fluid (8 oz. sulphate zinc, 1 oz. carbolic acid, and 3 gallons water) by the nurse before being carried through the house or handled by any other person. They may be soaked in this fluid for an hour, and then placed in boiling water for boiling.

It is better not to use handkerchiefs for cleaning the nostrils and mouth of the patient, but rather soft rags, which should be immediately thereafter burned. All vessels for receiving the discharges of the patient should constantly contain some disinfecting fluid. Water closets and privies in the house should be disinfected daily with a solution of copperas—two pounds to a gallon of water. Every kind and source of filth in and around the house should be thoroughly removed, and disinfectants freely used. Cleanliness tends both to prevent and mitigate the disease. Drains should be put in perfect order, and ventilated by a four-inch straight pipe extended above the highest point of the roof of the house in every instance, terminating at a distance from any chimney or other ventilator. Children in the family should not attend school or mingle with other children until the patient has wholly recovered, and all infected articles have been disinfected.

On the recovery or death of the patient the most thorough disinfection should follow. The room and all articles in it should be at once subjected to the fumes of burning sulphur as follows: Close the room tightly and burn two and a half pounds of sulphur to each one thousand feet of cubic space. After four or six hours open the room and expose it to the air and sunlight for a week. Anything that can be boiled without injury may be so treated. The walls and ceilings should be dry rubbed or lime-washed, and the floors washed with soap and water, to which may be added a little carbolic acid. When death occurs the body should be immediately placed in the coffin, with disinfectants, and the coffin tightly and finally closed. No public funeral should ever take place at the house where the patient died, nor elsewhere, unless the coffin remains hermetically sealed.

Tramps and Their Signs.

Jim Ward, who signs himself "Chief," writes to the Troy Times: I have just returned to your city, after a tour of exploration down South lasting several months, and reading in your paper an article on tramps and their marks, I desire to be allowed, as an old veteran of that "honorable" body known as "the tramp organization," to correct a few mistakes. I claim that the tramps were the originators of the mystic marks which have so frequently adorned fences, gate posts and doors, although it is possible that soap agents—members of another branch of the tramp organization—have since adopted these marks for business purposes. When tramping was good—and that was some years ago—it was understood by us that all houses where the inmates were good for food, clothing or money were to be marked in order to give us little trouble when we wanted anything. Where only a meal could be obtained, this fact was indicated by a small square; where a fellow would get the grand bounce an X expressed it, and for clothing he was directed by XX. Money houses were marked $; a house where the inmates were [illegible], was marked by a great big D. But at the present day tramps are not guided by these marks, as there are few houses where tramps are regularly fed. The tramp bore is now played out, but whatever may be said against the tramp it cannot be denied that he has made his mark in this world.

A Wooden Watch.

A North Carolina paper, the Abingdon Standard, has the following: "Some time ago Mr. E. A. Johnson, of Johnson Brothers, jewelers, of this place, made a plain, open-face, wooden watch that attracted a great deal of attention, but was subsequently eclipsed by Mr. Doriot, of Bristol, in a watch somewhat more elaborate in design. Not to be outdone, Mr. Johnson put to work on another watch, and has turned out a handsome double-case stem-winder and stem-setter, every piece of which, save the main and hair springs and crystal, are of wood and made entirely by his own hands. Even the springs to the cases are made of wood. It keeps splendid time, and is sufficiently strong to be used as a pocket time-keeper. It is of ordinary size, and when ornamented, as he expects to do, will be a handsome tribute to his skill and ingenuity.

Power of a Growing Tree.—Walton Hall had at one time its own corn-mill, and when that inconvenient necessity no longer existed, the millstone was laid by in an orchard and forgotten. The diameter of this circular stone measured five feet and a half, while its depth averaged seven inches throughout; its central hole had a diameter of eleven inches. By mere accident some bird or squirrel had dropped the fruit of the filbert tree through this hole on to the earth, and in 1812 the seedling was seen rising up through the unwonted channel. As its trunk gradually grew through this aperture and increased, its power to raise the ponderous mass of stone was speculated upon by many. Would the filbert tree die in the attempt? Would it burst the millstone? Or would it lift it? In the end the little filbert tree lifted the millstone, and by 1863 wore it like a crinoline about its trunk, and Mr. Waterton used to sit upon it under the branching shades.

How Trout Hear Noises in the Water.—Prof. E. D. Cope, a well-known naturalist, controverts in the Forest and Stream Seth Green's allegation that trout cannot hear. The professor says that there is a nerve at the base of every scale on a trout, at the point where the scale is united with the skin. All these nerves, from the base of every scale, lead to a large ganglion situated on the center of the forehead of the fish below the eyes. Nerves from this ganglion communicate to the internal ear. These nerves, at the base of each scale, are formed to receive vibrations in the water. Any vibration in the water reaching the scales of the fish is thus communicated to the internal ear. If the trout were in a flume, and one of the timbers that supported the flume rested in the running water on the ground, the vibrations of this running water on the ground would be carried by this timber to the flume and to the water in it, four feet above. The ear of the fish would separate and take cognizance of the difference in the vibrations, as the human ear in the air distinguishes the difference between the voices of friends. Prof. Cope's explanation is complete in scientific detail, and is made clear by a drawing of the scale, ganglions and internal ear.

Interesting Facts.—The tomb of Edward I., who died in 1301, was opened Jan. 2, 1770, after 463 years had elapsed. His body was almost perfect. Canute (the Dane), who crossed over to England in 1017, was found 1779, by workmen who repaired Winchester Cathedral, where his body had reposed nearly 750 years, perfectly fresh. In 1569, three Roman soldiers, fully equipped with warlike implement, were dug out of a bed of peat in Ireland, where they had probably lain 1,500 years. Their bodies were perfectly fresh and plump. In the reign of James II. of England, after the fall of the Church of Astley, in Warwickshire, there was taken up the corpse of Thomas Gray, Marquis of Dorset, who was buried the 10th of October, 1530, in the twenty-second year of Henry VII.; and although it had lain there seventy-eight years, the eyes, hair, flesh, nails, and joints remained as though it had been newly buried. Robert Braybrook, who was consecrated Bishop of London in 1381, and who died in 1404, and was buried in St. Paul's, was taken out of his tomb, after the great fire in 1666, during the repairs of the cathedral, and, although he had lain there no less than 262 years, his body was found firm as to skin, hair, joints and nails. The Convent de St. Domingo was lately demolished in search of treasure supposed to be concealed there, and the body of Prince Rodrigues taken out, who had been buried alive in 1565, exactly as when placed 250 years before. His daughter, 2 years and 6 months old, was lying at her father's feet, and as perfectly preserved as himself. The position of his hands shows that he was suspended by the body and neck till he died. Marks of the cord and of the burning iron are deeply recorded on various parts of the body. His hair and beard are firm, his skin natural in hue and texture, without the least trace of decomposition in any part.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 26, 1880.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

The Courier is opposed to the constitutional amendments. We don't believe it can tell why in its own language.—Republican.

That which the Republican does, or does not believe, is of little consequence in an intelligent community. "Its own language" condemns it.

* * *

The democrats are asking that the law which gives ex-Union soldiers the position of policemen in the District of Columbia be repealed, and that ex-rebels be appointed. How does this set on the DeKalb soldiers' stomachs?—Republican.

It is not likely that ex-soldiers will be greatly worried concerning the above badly mixed item; there is not a sensible person in the county who would not pronounce it a willfully told lie.

Committee Meeting.

Pursuant to call, the democratic central committee of DeKalb county met at the court-house at 10 o'clock a. m., Feb'y. 20. Every township committeeman was present except Mr. Joseph Sewell of Franklin, who was prevented from attending by the death of a relative. The meeting was called to order by W. L. Blair, chairman. Theo. Reed and W. H. Dills were appointed secretaries. There being a number of prominent democrats present from each of the several townships, a motion was made and carried permitting all democrats present to take part in the proceedings. The chairman submitted several matters of importance with suggestions, asking that the same be duly considered, after which the meeting adjourned until 1 o'clock p. m.

The meeting was called to order at the appointed time, when the subject of primary elections was brought up for discussion. After a full and free expression, pro and con, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the subject of holding primary elections instead of delegate conventions for the nomination of county officers be referred to a committee of five, which committee shall carefully consider the propriety of making the proposed change, and if such change is deemed advisable, said committee shall prepare a plan or system for conducting such primary election and report the same to the next democratic county convention for adoption or rejection. Provided that no action of this committee shall in any way affect the campaign of 1880.

The chairman named the following persons to constitute the committee named in the foregoing resolution: Theo. Reed, B. D. Thomas, Jas. A. Barns, W. L. Blair and S. S. Shutt.

After some discussion of the proposition to change the number of delegates to the county convention, the meeting decided to leave the representation as heretofore established, viz.: One delegate for each ten democratic voters.

The following resolution relative to the selection of township committeemen was read and adopted:

RESOLVED, First, that the democrats of the several election precincts meet in caucus on the next to the last Saturday in March, 1880, and biennially thereafter, for the purpose of nominating township officers to be voted for at the April election; also, that they at the same time choose a chairman (who shall be ex-officio the member of central committee of the county from that precinct) and a secretary and such other officers as they deem proper; and at the same time transact such other business as may come before them, and recommend to the county central committee such matters as they may think fit.

Second, That each local committee, immediately after such township meetings, shall forward to the chairman of the county central committee a copy of the proceedings of such meeting, together with the postoffice address of each officer and nominee.

Third, That in the month of April, after said elections, said local committeemen shall meet in Auburn, upon the call of the chairman of the county central committee, for the purpose of electing a chairman, a secretary and a treasurer and such other officers of the county central committee for the next two years as they may deem proper, and for the performances of such other duties as devolve upon the central committee.

Upon motion of Jas. A. Barns, the delegates from DeKalb county to the democratic state convention at Indianapolis, June 9, 1880, are requested, in case of a division of opinion among the delegates, to cast the vote of the delegation pro rata.

The large attendance and good feeling manifested in the meeting, leads us to believe that the democrats of DeKalb have decided upon an active and energetic campaign. All agree that none but good and strong men shall be placed upon the county ticket—men who will unite the party and who can command the support of all who believe in democratic principles. The county is democratic by a decided majority, and if harmony prevails the entire county ticket is sure to be elected.

The new committee will meet on the call of the chairman some time during the month of April. In the meantime put forward the best men in the party for township officers and be sure to elect them.

The Constitutional Amendments.

Below we give the proposed amendments to the constitution of Indiana as they have been agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses of the general assemblies of 1877 and 1879, and by an act of the last general assembly, approved March 10, 1879, these said amendments are to be submitted to the electors of the state of Indiana for ratification or rejection at an election to be held on the first Monday in April, 1880. The law providing for the submission of these amendments to the electors of the state enacts that the "secretary of state shall procure ballots of blue paper, on each of which shall be printed the proposed amendments, and below each amendment shall be printed the word 'Yes' in one line, and in another line the word 'No;' that any qualified elector may vote for or against any amendment by depositing one of said ballots in the ballot-box. If he intends to vote for any amendment, he shall leave thereunder the word 'Yes,' and erase the word 'No' by drawing a line across it, or otherwise. If he intends to vote against any amendment, the word 'Yes' shall in like manner be stricken out and the word 'No' left; and if both words are allowed to remain, without either of them being so erased, the vote shall not be counted either way." These amendments are designated by numbers, and are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9, numbers 7 and 8 having failed to receive a majority of votes of both branches of the last general assembly.

It is reported that the ex-sheriff of Paulding county, whose term only expired a few weeks ago, is behind $5,000; that is, he is short that much in his settlement. It don't pay to be sheriff of that county if this is an honest showing which of course is, as the ex-sheriff is a democrat.—Republican.

It is also reported that the office of treasurer of Marion county, Indiana, has been filled by republicans for fifteen years, and that every treasurer holding that office during the time given, has retired from the office a defaulter. It pays to be a republican treasurer of Marion county.

Democratic National Convention, Cincinnati, June 22, 1880.

The national democratic committee met at Washington City last Monday, and decided to hold the national convention at Cincinnati, on Tuesday, June 22, 1880. We are well pleased with the selection, as it points to a western man as the nominee. Jewett's friends were evidently on the ground.

Ex-Representative Saylor, of Ohio, presented the claim of Cincinnati in a very eloquent manner. In extending to the committee a cordial invitation and request that they hold the next convention in Cincinnati, he did not wish to detract at all from other cities; "but," he added, "whatever advantages either of the cities which have been heretofore mentioned may possess, Cincinnati can duplicate them in some respects, and in others more than duplicate them. The facilities by which Cincinnati can be reached are not surpassed by the facilities of any other place. So far as the accommodation of the convention is concerned, he maintained that no other city presented the advantages of that city. "Luxury and comfort," he said, could be extended to all the delegations. Music hall, the building which it is proposed to occupy, has recently been erected. It will seat 4,500, and has an entertaining capacity of 7,000. He spoke of several halls which could be appropriated and used as headquarters and committee rooms. He was authorized to say to the committee that Cincinnati will bear all expenses, provide headquarters and committee rooms for every state free of charge, and do all necessary printing. The gentlemen of the committee would be properly entertained, and the expenses of conveying them and their families to and from the city would be borne by Cincinnati. He said it was the intention of Cincinnati to make the national democratic convetion a No 1. convention, whereas, if it should be held in Chicago, it would, now that the date is fixed for June 22, be a third convention (the republican and greenback conventions preceeding it). In concluding he said: "As Cincinnati named the man in 1856, so will she name him in 1880."

Harris, of the Ohio delegation, corroborated the statements that there would be no increase in hotel rates, and pledged himself to be personally responsible for the assertion.

—We are in receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of the "Medical College of Fort Wayne;" but owing to the fact that we didn't get it until the morning after the performance came off, we have concluded not to go last Tuesday evening.

—Dick Edgerton, accompanied by his charming smile, was a caller at this office last Friday. Dick splits himself in two pieces and distributes them in Fort Wayne and Hicksville, though we have reasons to believe that the part with the heart in it dwells always at Fort Wayne.

—The report of school No. 9, Jackson township, the correspondence of Alpha from Newville, and the list of presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McGee, at their wedding anniversary last week in Garrett, have all been crowded out of this issue. They will be found on the first page next week.

—Brother Tom Starr, editor of the Hicksville News, was in our little city a few hours Friday; he was on his way to Defiance, via Auburn and return, and made a pleasant call on the Courier. Tom has done a good work in Hicksville, and we think he is in every sense worthy of all the prosperity the News can carry.

—Conductor Covert, of the Fort Wayne and Jackson road, thinks it would be a good scheme to have a little office in one end of the train, where the passengers would have to step up and whack up. This would at least relieve conductors of having to answer twenty-seven thousand questions every time they pass through the train.

—The Garrett Hearld man's sensitive, pure nature was apparently greatly shocked by a recent item in the Courier. We had forgotten about him or we shouldn't have written it. Probably, though, if the Herald contained an occasional item of home news, instead of stale jokes and almanac rehash, we shouldn't have forgotten its existence.

—Tom Bell, at Allen's livery barn, is prepared to treat sick horses in all the various phazes of disease peculiar to this noble animal. He has had many years' experience in the handling of horses, and therefore has the knowledge which is only gained by practice. He has several sick horses now under treatment, and has room and time for more. Terms reasonable.

—Two empty box-cars standing on the side-track at the Jackson depot undertook, last Saturday afternoon, to beat a freight-train down to the junction; at the end of the switch, however, there was trouble. The train insisted on its right of way and bounced the two cars off the track, doing about $100 damage. The unruly cars were put back and told to stay there, nobody else being to blame for the mishap.

—Last Thursday, at about noon, down near the Presbyterian church, Fred. Clark struck a "bonanz"; he found a hair-pin and beautiful set of bangs—with girl detached—and he has been mad ever since because he didn't find the girl instead of the bangs. The young lady who is thus unfortunately separated from her fore-top can find the same at this office, where we have put it in a big safe, under a combination lock.

—Billy Little was away up on his "dig" last Friday. In consideration of a two-dollar bill he agreed to haul a load of wood for the Neoteric's, and he did so; but he had to thrash two men in the transaction—one on whose place he got the wood, and the other who ran into his wagon on the road. Then, to cap the climax, he came near having to thump the whole Neoteric club before he could obtain his well-earned ducats; but he got 'em, all the same, and all's quiet along the B. & O.

—Two haggard and destitute old women, aged 70 and 80 years, in company with a boy about 18 years, took refuge from the wintery breezes in a box-car at the Jackson depot, Monday night last, and came near freezing to death. In the compassion of his heart, Frank Copper built a big fire in the depot and invited them to thaw out, until, having in some way obtained means, they boarded the Tuesday noon train for Angola. They were indeed a forlorn looking trio, and would enlist the sympathy of a street-lamp in whose light they might chance to pass.

—That excuse for a newspaper, the Republican, printed at Auburn, thinks "it would be funny to see the Courier prosper if Hank Little didn't write its 'funny' articles." As far as the envious and willful misrepresentations of the above-named blacking-box label are concerned, the Courier doesn't care a fig; lies don't cost anything, and therefore the Republican deals extensively in that line of goods. But we started out to suggest that folks who dwell in glass tenements shouldn't throw bowlders. Hank Little isn't in the newspaper business now; he got disgusted with it not long since; he used to work in the Republican office, and there hasn't been any readable matter in that sheet since he left; if his labors could be handed in C. O. D., he might again be induced to furnish the brains for that establishment, but, like the rest of humanity, he prefers remuneration for his services.

—A gentleman of leisure, with his insides too profusely lubricated, stumbled into Joe Abright's at about 11:30 o'clock—or perhaps twelve—last Monday night. This not being Mr. Abright's reception hour, he mildly inquired what the gentleman would have; but receiving no definite response he remarked, "Well, if you'll just wait till I get my pants and boots on, I'll endeavor to ascertain your wants." At the conclusion of this gentle insinuation the intruder took a giraffe step from the house therein to the sidewalk thereout, closely followed by Joe, who collared him and turned him—not inside out, but—over to Marshal Scott. It proved to be a clear case of mental delusion, occasioned by too much tampering with the "flowing bowl," as the fellow was in search of a hotel. He spent the night in the "jug" and was next morning turned loose on a cold unfeeling world.

THAT HAZZARD-OUS NOTE.

Its Final Disposal at Indianapolis.

Last Saturday a number of our citizens left for Indianapolis, for the purpose of settling the only remaining trouble consequent upon the crookedness of the wily George Hazzard. The trial of the case took place in the United States court last Monday, the suit having been brought by the First National bank, against Hazzard, Lanning, Ensley and Cuppy. The witnesses for the bank were Messrs. Jacob Walborn, W. H. McIntyre, Guy Plumb and Isaac Hague, while those on the defense were John L. Davis, H. C. Peterson, G. W. Gordon, R. D. Tefft, J. E. Rose, T. J. Cuppy, A. Robbins, Nick Ensley, and W. H. Dills. The following synopsis of the case, taken from the Indianapolis Sentinel, gives the sum and substance of the transaction:

"The suit was commenced on a note for $1,000, made payable to Lanning, who endorsed it over to the bank, which suit was begun eighteen months since. Attorney Harris represented the plaintiff (the bank) and General Harrison was counsel for Ensley and Cuppy. Ensley set up in answer to the complaint that his name was forged to the note. The bank then accepted about 25 per cent. of Cuppy, and took judgment against Hazzard and Lanning.

It was stated to a Sentinel reporter yesterday, by a reliable citizen of Auburn, that after the bank had bought this note, and when Hazzard was brought back he paid $17,000 to the bank, a part of which sum was applied to this note. They afterward brought suit on the note, and denied that Ensley's name was forged to it. As for Hazzard, his transactions from the first are of the queerest character, and would be interesting matter for a novel. The manner in which the bank was instituted, the procurement of signatures of the men of the town by Hazzard, the manner in which he tried and partially succeeded in satisfying the bank bonds, are all of the sharpest kind of practice."

We understand that the above account from the Sentinel is slightly in error in some of the details of an immaterial character. However, as this is the wind-up, it is to be hoped that the excitement will quiet down; that better feeling will be engendered, and that all will endeavor to repair the injury that has been done in our midst. We are also informed that the bank and parties concerned in this last affair have acted most magnanimously towards themselves and others, and now "Let us have peace."

Republican District Convention.

Agreeable with the call of the republican state central committee, delegations from the several counties composing the 12th congressional district met at the court-house in Auburn, yesterday, the 25th inst. The meeting was called to order by H. C. Peterson, of DeKalb, and W. C. Glasgow, of Lagrange was chosen as permanent president. James U. Miller, of the Steuben Republican was elected secretary, and all other republican editors present, assistant secretaries. Glasgow, on taking the chair delivered himself of an exceedingly windy oration, probably prepared for the occasion; in other respects he made a fair presiding officer.

Nominations for two delegates to the republican national convention at Chicago being next in order, the following persons were named:

Judge Wm. Clapp, of Noble county; C. K. Baxter, of DeKalb; S. P. Williams, of Lagrange; John W. Baker, of Whitley.

The first ballot being informal, resulted as follows:

Clapp, 59; Baxter, 47; Williams, 32, and Baker, 10.

The first formal ballot resulted in the election of Clapp and Baxter by the following vote: Clapp, 72; Baxter, 43; Williams, 25, and Baker 8.

For alternate delegates but two names were presented, viz: Samuel Bates, of Steuben county, and Capt. Newman, of Lagrange, who were elected by acclamation. A resolution to instruct the delegates to the state convention from this district to use their influence to secure the appointment of R. M. Lockhart, of DeKalb, as a delegate to the national convention from the state at large, was introduced. Inasmuch as DeKalb already had one delegate, there was opposition to the resolution, and it was withdrawn, and a similar one adopted in favor of Hon. J. S. Collins, of Whitley. Robert Stratton, of Allen, was elected chairman of the district committee and ex-officio member of the state central committee.

The time and place for holding the congressional nominating convention was left to be fixed by the district committee. The meeting adjourned.

Carr's Corners.

—Come to the literary Tuesday evenin

—Cyrus Weaver is at present lying very low with consumption.

Silas Hogen has returned from Michigan, and reports times prosperous.

—A son of John Shugars has been quite sick for several days, but is slowly improving under the care of Dr. Alyn.

—William Carr has contracted for timber with Sheets & Thomas to the amount of three hundred dollars, for railroad ties.

—Hampton Miller, from Pleasant Lake, is at present buying several car loads of stock from this vicinity. His efforts thus far have been successful.

—Last Thursday evening there was a very pleasant party at Stephen Martin's. Everybody present expressed themselves very much pleased with the reception given.

—The literary society last week was quite interesting. The question discussed was: "Is compulsory education just." John Neff was general of the affirmatives, while Uncle Jefferson lead the negatives. The general came out victorious.

MURPHY.

St. Joe.

D. H. Murray and G. H. Munn, of Newville, were in town Friday.

—Some of the office-seekers are again looking up their interests before the spring elections. Anything from supervisor up will do.

—The railroad question is again exciting some of the Newvillians; but this time it is two roads—one east and west, and another north and south.

—Two of our prominent men were wont to speculate in February wheat, and now they are at a loss to know on which side of the columns to put the $30—profit or loss.

—Engine No. 346 of the B. & O., going west, flew the track at this place Monday morning, which delayed train No. 19 and the local some time. No damage was done, except to the souls of some of the train men, who came near swearing themselves blind.

—The recklessness with which a few of our worthy (?) church-members disregard the rules of the church is surprising in the extreme. Last Sunday we observed several of these pious and would-be prominent church-members busily engaged in loading logs on a train. Verily, "Money is the root of all evil."

—Through the influence of the sisters in the church at this place, quite a reformation has begun among the tobacco-chewers of St. Joe, several having dropped the habit on account of words spoken by the ladies. Whenever men and boys claiming to be gentlemen cannot sit one hour in church without depositing puddles of tobacco-juice on the floor, we think it about time that some such steps be taken, and the ladies have fought a good fight.

To Whom it may Concern.

This is to Certify, That my wife, Eliza Rice, has been afflicted with a troublesome cough for more than seven years. I have expended a large amount of money with the best physicians in the country, and for the many remedies advertised to cure all diseases of the lungs, with but little satisfaction or relief, and she was daily becoming more discouraged, and her cough growing worse. It had become apparent to me that something must be done for her immediate relief, or it would soon be too late. About this time, January 19, 1879, Dr. White's Pulmonaria was highly recommended to me and I at once purchased of our druggist, Mr. J. S. Powell, six bottles for five dollars, which was guaranteed to cure her cough or money would be refunded. I am pleased to inform my friends and the public generally that she was greatly relieved by the first few doses, and continued to grow better until she was entirely cured by the use of this valuable medicine. It has performed all that is claimed for it, and I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are afflicted with consumption, coughs, etc. My wife and myself can be consulted at any time in regard to the above wonderful cure.

LEWIS RICE.

Hoopeston, Ill., October 5, 1879.

For sale by Casebeer & Matheny.

Waterloo, Iowa, Jan. 23, 1879.

I was taken with an acute attack of rheumatism last fall, and confined to bed. At first I employed a physician, without benefit; then sent to Wangler Bros'. drug store, and obtained a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, the use of which soon gave me relief, and cured me of the attack. I can safely recommend it to all suffering with Rheumatism.

Respectfully,
Matt McDermott, I. C. R. R. shops.

Mr. Neidher, Taylorville, Pa. writes: „My mother, an old lady of sixty years, suffered for thirty years with rheumatism, to such an extent that she was at times entirly lame. We procured from Messrs. Ludwig Bros. druggists, in Scranton, Pa. a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, used it according to directions, and saw our efforts crowned with perfect success. Mother was relieved."

Mr. Philip Kemlinger, an old subscriber of our paper, and well known in the whole surrounding country, informed us the other day that his wife, who for two years had suffered with rheumatism in the shoulder, during which time she had been treated by several physicians without success, had been completely cured by a single bottle of St. Jacobs Oil.—Bucyrus, Ohio, Courier, Feb. 13, 1879.

WHY NOT?

BY ALVIN C. CASWELL.

In spring time when the warbling
Of the birds is heard alway,
Shall we not enjoy their singing
In the balmy air, I pray?
Why not?

When flowers their leaves unfolding
Bursting into nature's bloom,
Shall we not, the hours beguiling,
Thus enjoy their sweet perfume?
Why not?

In summer when hill and valley
Are arrayed in living green,
When the days are warm and sultry,
We'll enjoy the cooling stream.
Why not?

When the dewdrops kiss the flowers
As they raise their tiny heads,
We will seek the rosy bowers
By some guardian angel led.
Why not?

In autumn, when the leaves are falling,
And mosquitoes fill the air,
When luscious fruit is ripening,
We'll partake of dainty fare.
Why not?

When the music of the water
Laughing comes from brook and stream,
Then the golden harvests totter,
May we not of plenty dream?
Why not?

In winter, when cold and chilly,
And the snowflakes fill the air,
We will help the poor and needy—
They shall of our bounty share.
Why not?

When the hoary frosts of winter
Blanch the fields and fill the air,
When the Christmas dinner's ready,
May I meet my loved ones there.
Why not?

TRAWVILLE, Ill.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

BY HARRIET E. S. CHESSY.

"'Over the hills to the poor-house.' There, that is just my case," said old Mrs. Williams, taking off her glasses and laying aside the paper that contained the poem alluded to.

"Not quite so bad as that," replied the neighborly friend whom she addressed.

"Well, I expect it will come to that; next month I have got to be toted down to my daughter's, in Jersey. You know I stay two years with Betsy, here, and then two years with Emily. I have done that ever since my son moved off West. He said at the time he went I could go with him, but he knew that would be impossible, with my feeble health, so it was safe to make me the offer. When our farm was sold in Jersey, he took the money, came here to York State, bought a farm, the one adjoining this where Betsy now lives, and had the deed made out in his own name. He had no right to do it, of course; and why the girls and I allowed him to is now a mystery to me; for they should have shared equally with him, and I been allowed the use of a third; and, then, my two boys in California should have had something. But we were all so foolish as to allow that selfish Cal to get it into his own hands. The girls got married, or I cannot say how they would have got along, and I am left on their hands."

"Don't he send you any money to help yourself with?"

"No, not a cent; he has got a wife that would prevent his doing that, if she could, even if he were inclined to. She treated me shamefully the little time I lived with her, before they moved West. She little realized or cared how hard I worked to help earn the property she was then living on. With house work, dairy, six children—one of whom died when he was 12 years old—to take care of, never having any hired help within doors, but one or two hired men to cook for a good part of the year, I generally had plenty of work to do. For months together, in spring and summer, I arose at 4 in the morning, and was so hurried through the whole day that I could not find time to sit down long enough to comb my hair until 9 in the evening. And after that hour I often had about an hour's work to do before I could retire. We always had a good deal of company, too, and a schoolmarm and schoolmaster to board five or six weeks, each, during the year; for it was then the fashion for teachers to board around, particularly in the rural districts. I know I thought it something of a tax to put up teachers' and children's dinners so many weeks in the year, and what I remember as one of my worst tasks was going around into the cold rooms in winter—for we never kept but one fire—and making up five or six beds. It is almost a wonder the little children did not freeze, sleeping in those great cold rooms; but I did my best to try to keep them comfortable, going around to their rooms every night and tucking up the bed-clothes, until they were fairly grown up. My husband used to tell me I made a slave of myself for my children, but I did it with a free will, and would do the same again if I were to live my life over again. When my little boy died I know I nearly mourned myself to death; and then how glad I was I had always tried to make him so happy and comfortable. And then, when the other two boys went off to California, I was glad I had been so good and motherly to them. They were young, one 16 and the other 18. It seemed almost like burying them to let them go; but their father thought it might be the best for them in the end. But he did not live long enough afterward to know whether they were successful or not, having died in less than a year after they went. They have now been there six years, have both married, and write that they do not much more than make a good living."

"Don't they ever send you any money, either?"

"No, they don't know but I have plenty to be comfortable, as I have never written them about Cal's unkind behavior."

"I should write and tell them about it, Mrs. Williams, for I should say he is the greatest scamp outside of prison walls."

"Only selfish, Mrs. Blandon, that is all," replied the poor old lady, tears gushing from her eyes.

"Well, do your two California boys write you kind and frequent letters?"

"They do not write very often, having families of their own to care for, but write kindly, though not as I do to them."

"I am glad I never had any children, Mrs. Williams. I believe my money serves me better."

"If you had them you would find them inexpressibly dear to you."

"No doubt I would, but I would want them all girls. I believe a daughter is a daughter all her life; and a son is a son till he gets him a wife."

"My daughters are very kind to me," said the old lady.

"And their husbands?" asked Mrs. Blandon.

"Well, Betsy's husband is a good sort of a man, you know, and is kind in his way. But the one in Jersey, Emily's husband, would rather I were anywhere else than there; ten to one if he speaks to me after I get there; but I have to go, or else, 'over the hills to the poor-house.'" Here the poor woman burst out crying. "But Emily likes to have me with her, and I think I do her a great deal of good by taking care of the children, and doing the light work, but he—well, I suppose it would be better if I were dead and out of the way, and I sometimes think the end is not far off."

"I hope it is a good ways off," said her friend, "and, now that I have heard your story, which is really a pitiable one, I will make you an offer. You know, Mrs. Williams, I am quite alone, with the exception of the servant girl I keep, and am sufficiently well off to give somebody a home; and now, if you will come and live with me the ensuing two years, instead of going back to Jersey to encounter sour looks, you shall be perfectly welcome. Indeed, I will consider it a favor to have you with me, as I am in want of your genial company; and it always was my nature to want some one around me to pet a little."

Mrs. Williams caught hold of the lady's hand and raised it to her lips, so delighted was she at the proposal made to her. "I will come," she said, "and try to make you just as little trouble as I possibly can—oh, thank you—thanks."

"Do not mention the word trouble again in connection with your coming. I am not sure but it is a wholly selfish act on my part; I want your company."

"Well, I will try to be as agreeable as an ignorant old woman like me can be."

"All but the ignorant, Mrs. Williams; you are as good company as I want."

The terrors of her tour to Jersey now over, the old lady was the happy of happiest. Betsy, too, was pleased at the thought of having her mother so near her. Mrs. Blandon lived in a pleasant, grand, old house, luxuriously furnished, for she was wealthy. The grounds in summer, with their flowers, fountains, graveled walks, quiet lawns, and singing birds, seemed like a paradise to old Mrs. Williams' former way of living. Then, hearing no words but the kindliest, besides having been promised shortly after she went to live with Mrs. Blandon that she always should have a home with her, she was constantly in a frame of mind to offer thanks to God for giving her so good a friend. Thus, after raising up her children, a stranger proved the greater friend to her.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

What Saved Jackson.

Mr. S. Park Baker, of Youngstown, N. Y., after having read a current account of the Jackson-Dickinson duel, thus writes to a friend in Kentucky: There is one feature about this duel with Dickinson, however, that seems a little peculiar, and that is that Gen. Jackson, who was a very spare man in his person, should have been dressed in a loose-fitting gown or coat, so that his antagonist could not readily tell the location of his body. Dickinson aimed right, and if Jackson's body had been where Dickinson supposed it was, and where, perhaps, the coda duello would say it ought to have been, there is no just reason to doubt that Gen. Jackson would at that time have "passed in his checks," for the ball from Dickinson's pistol would have struck his heart beyond any doubt, according to the account of the duel. Now, the criticism and point I make in the character of "Old Hickory," in respect to this duel, is this: Having dressed himself in a manner to deceive Dickinson as to the precise location of his (Jackson's) body, and, having received Dickinson's bullet without any serious injury, it was not a just and fair thing in Jackson afterward to take deliberate aim at Dickinson and kill him. No matter what the provocation was on the part of Dickinson which led to the duel, it seems to me that, having resorted to what was then considered an honorable method of settling the difficulty, they were each bound to give the other fair play, and the only excuse or justification I can find for Gen. Jackson for his deliberate and premeditated killing of Dickinson is the fact that perhaps, upon general principles, Dickinson ought to have been killed for slandering so upright and estimable a woman as the wife of Gen. Jackson. In reading an account of this fight I am reminded of the duel between John Randolph and Kentucky's most illustrious citizen, Henry Clay, in 1826, only the termination of this duel was not so disastrous as the former, and yet it might have been if Mr. Clay had not, to some extent, been deceived as to the location or position of Randolph's body, for it was stated by some one that Mr. Clay remarked after the duel was over that he might as well shoot at a pair of tongs as at Randolph.

Ascent of Vesuvius.

Henceforth Vesuvius may be ascended by means of a railway which is 900 meters in length. The line has been constructed with great care upon a solid pavement, and it is believed to be perfectly secure from all incursions of lava. The mode of traction is by two steel ropes put in movement by a steam engine at the foot of the cone. The wheels of the carriages are so made as to be free from any danger of leaving the rails, beside which each carriage is furnished with an exceedingly powerful automatic brake, which, should the rope by any chance break, will stop the train almost instantaneously. One of the chief features of the undertaking was the water supply, but that has been obviated by the formation of two very large reservoirs, one at the station, the other near the observatory.

A CHINESE EMPEROR'S LIFE.

Studying With Whipping-Boys and Sleeping Watched by Handmaids.

[From the Hong Kong Daily Press.]

The sons of the Manchu Emperors (hwang-tsz) undergo from their tenderest youth a system of the strictest education. Rising at about 3 o'clock in the morning, they first take their lesson in Chinese literature, under the superintendence of the only tutor, who has the title of shih-fu or "master." The tutor rises from his chair as soon as the imperial pupils enter, and receives from the latter a courtesy (ts-ch'ien), which is then returned in the same form. The tutor takes the seat of honor, and when the lesson is learned the pupil brings up his book, deposits it before his teacher, and returns to his seat to repeat the task by heart. If the lesson is not learned the tutor requests a eunuch in attendance to bring the ferule (ch'ing-pan) and makes a show of administering correction. But each imperial pupil is accompanied by eight fellow-students (pwan-tub,) known in the Manchu language as ha-ha-chu, who study the same books as their young master. When it becomes necessary to admonish the latter more seriously the ha-ha-chu are beaten with the ferule vicariously; but when the imperial pupil acquits himself well they are, on the other hand, commended or rewarded. A recalcitrant and obstinate Prince is, as the last resort, actually himself flogged, though probably only nominally, by the teacher, or taken before the Emperor, who directs a eunuch to pinch his cheeks (ch'ih pa jou). The late Emperor T'ung-chih was frequently tweaked in this way by order of the Empresses.

The Chinese lesson occupies two hours; after this come the Manchu and Mongol lessons in composition, given by the teachers who enjoy the less honorable title of se-fu, and who are obliged to meet their pupil at the door and make the first obeisance. Then come lessons in various spoken languages—Manchu, Mongol, T'angat, and in local Chinese dialects. After these come courses of instruction in foot and horse archery (ma-pu-chien), athletics, fencing, putting the stone, etc. (kung-tau-shih), under the guidance of a class of instructors called an-ta. The whole of the young Princes' day is taken up with mental or physical exercises, and they retire to rest at a very early hour. At suitable intervals their meals are weighed out for them, and on no account are they allowed to indulge in the pleasures of the table. At the age of 15 they must marry.

The Emperor sleeps with eight handmaids (ch'ang-tsai) sitting upon his bed and sixteen others (ta-ying) underneath the bed, all of them girls from the imperial household (nei-wu-fu). Their function is to keep watch over his Majesty, and they are not allowed to sneeze, cough, spit, or utter any sound. The movements of the Emperor after waking in the morning are signalized by a clapping of hands on the part of the eunuch on guard. Once a year—on New Year's day—the Emperor and Empress preside at a grand banquet, the Empress sitting on the Emperor's left hand. This is the only occasion during the year on which the Emperor can see his wives together, and compare their respective merits. The Empress presents articles of food (k'e-shih) to the eunuchs, who receive it from her Majesty on their knees, and the Emperor performs the same politeness to the women. The Emperor is spoken of and to as hwangchang—"Majesty"—by all but the members of the inner banners, who use the term "chu-tsz"—"dominus." The Emperor, Empress and concubines are all called by the eunuchs "fo-ye," or "chu-tsz," that is, "Buddha" or "dominus," and the imperial Princes "ye"—the latter term equivalent to "sire." They are spoken of as "ako."

The three inner gates of the imperial apartments are never entered even by eunuchs, and, of men, only eunuchs are allowed to pass the fifth gate, which is watched by a corps of imperial guards (shi-wei), who are authorized to strike the shins of even the highest officer who may approach without giving the word. If an inmate of the female apartments wishes to purchase anything, or to communicate with the outer world, she must send a handmaid to sound the iron plate (tien), or the clapper (bang-tsz), with which the harem is provided, on which the head eunuch approaches to inquire who is in want of assistance. Having learned who calls he dispatches the under eunuch especially attached to this department, who addresses the handmaid and takes her orders, either verbally or on a slip of paper.

The Cabinet Ministers (chun-chi) rise every morning at 2, present themselves at court at 3 a. m. and are then received in audience. Their meals are served up gratis from the Emperor's pantry, and the whole day is spent at the palace until 4 p. m. on "off" days, and till 6 p. m. on days when there is military business to discuss. Thus the only time they can call their own is from, say 5 p. m. to 2 a. m. If indisposed, of course they may obtain leave of absence, which must frequently be a great boon. The chun-chi never return the calls of any but the most distinguished provincial officers, and even then this is done on the way from the palace.

The Noble Red Woman.

A man living in Goodwin canon says that while near an Indian camp the other day he was attracted by groans and screams in the wickiup, and going to it he found a squaw who had just given birth to twins. While he was standing there the squaw, without paying any attention to him, deliberately picked up one of the infants, and, setting her teeth into its throat, fairly choked it to death before his eyes and before he could interfere. Upon questioning her as to her reason for killing the infant, she replied: "Two papoose, no good; one, heap plenty," and that was all he could learn from her about the matter. This practice is a common thing among the Shoshones, and but one of a pair of twins, always the male, is allowed to live. The method used by the squaws in carrying their babies in a basket on their back makes it inconvenient for them to attend to two, and so a choice is made, and one of the pair disposed of.—*Eureka (Nev.) HOW HE CAME TO GET MARRIED.

It may be funny, but I've done it. I've got a rib and a baby. Shadows departed—oyster stews, brandy cocktails, cigar boxes, boot-jacks, absconding shirt buttons, whist and dominoes. Shadows present—hoop skirts, bandboxes, ribbons, gaiters, long stockings, juvenile dresses, tin trumpets, little willow chairs, cradles, bibs, pap, sugar-teats, paragoric, hive sirup, castor oil, Godfrey's cordial, soothing sirup, rhubarb, senna, salts, squills and doctor's bills. Shadows future—more nine-pound babies, more hive sirup, etc., etc. I'll just tell you how I got caught. I was always the darndest, most tea-custard bashful fellow you ever did see; it was kinder in my line to be taken with the shakes every time I saw a pretty gal approaching me, and I'd cross the street any time rather than face one; 'twasn't because I didn't like the critters, for if I was behind a fence looking through a knot hole I couldn't look at one long enough. Well, my sister Lib gave a party one night, and I stayed away from home because I was too bashful to face the music. I hung around the house whistling "Old Dan Tucker," dancing to keep my feet warm, watching the heads bobbing up and down behind the window curtains, and wishing the thundering party would break up so I could get to my room. I smoked a bunch of cigars, and as it was getting late and mighty uncomfortable, I concluded to shin up the door-post. No sooner said than done, and I soon found myself snug in bed. "Now," says I, "let her rip! Dance till your wind gives out!" And, cuddling under the quilts, Morpheus grabbed me. I was dreaming of soft-shell crabs and stewed tripe, and was having a good time, when some one knocked at the door and woke me up. "Rap!" again, I laid low. "Rap, rap, rap!" Then I heard a whispering, and I knew there was a whole raft of gals outside. "Rap, rap!" Then Lib sings out, "Jack, are you there?" "Yes," says I. Then came a roar of laughter. "Let us in," says she. "I won't," says I; "can't you let a fellow alone?" "Are you abed?" says she. "I am," says I. "Get up," says she. "I won't," says I. Then came another laugh. By thunder! I began to get riled. "Get out, you petticoated scarecrows!" I cried; "can't you get a beau without hunting a fellow out of bed? I won't go home with you—I won't, so you may clear out!" And, throwing a boot at the door, I felt better. But, presently, oh, mortal buttons! I heard a still, small voice, very much like Sister Lib's, and it said, "Jack, you have to get up, for the girls' things are in there!" Oh, Lord, what a pickle!

Think of me in bed, all covered with shawls, muffs, bonnets and cloaks, and twenty girls outside the door waiting to get in! If I had stopped to think, I should have died on the spot. As it was, I rolled out among the bonnet-wire and ribbons in a hurry. "Smash!" went the millinery in every direction. I had to dress in the dark—for there was a crack in the door, and girls will peep—and the way I fumbled about was a death on straw hats. The critical moment came. I opened the door and found myself right among the women. "Oh, my bonnet!" cried one. "Oh, my Leghorn!" cried another, and they pitched in. They pulled me this way and that, boxed my ears, and one bright-eyed little piece—Sal —— her name was—put her arms around my neck and kissed me right on my lips. Human nature couldn't stand that, and I gave her as good as she sent. It was the first time I ever got a taste, and it was powerful good. I believe I could have kissed that gal from Julius Cæsar to Fourth of July. "Jack," said she, "we are sorry to disturb you, but won't you see me home?" "Yes," said I, "I will." I did do it, and had another smack at the gate, too. After that, we took a kinder turtle-doving after each other, both of us sighing like a barrel of new cider when we were away from each other. 'Twas at the close of a glorious summer day—the sun was setting behind a distant hog-pen—the chickens were going to roost—the bull-frogs were commencing their evening songs—the pollywogs, in their native mud puddles, were preparing themselves for the shades of night, and Sal and myself sat upon an antiquated back log, listening to the music of nature, such as tree toads, roosters and grunting pigs, and now and then the mellow music of a distant jackass was wafted to our ears by the gentle zephyrs that sighed among the mullein stalks, and came heavy laden with the delicious odor of hen roosts and pig styes. The last lingering rays of the setting sun, glancing from the brass buttons of a solitary horseman, shone through a knot hole in the hog pen, full in Sal's face, dyeing her hair with an orange-peel hue, and showing off my threadbare coat to a bad advantage—one of my arms was around Sal's waist, my hand resting on the small of her back—she was toying with my auburn locks of jet-black hue—she was almost gone, and I was ditto. She looked like a grasshopper dying with the hiccoughs, and I felt like a mud turtle choked with a codfish ball.

"Sal," says I, in a voice musical as the notes of a dying swan, "will you have me?"

She turned her eyes heavenward, clasped me by the hand, had an attack of the heaves and blind staggers, and, with a sigh that drew her shoe-strings to her palate, said "Yes!" She gave clear out then and squatted in my lap. I hugged her until I broke my suspenders, and her breath smelt of onions which she had eaten the week before.

Well, to make a long story short, she set the day, and we practiced for four weeks every night how we would walk into the room to be married, till we got so we could walk as graceful as a couple of Muscovy ducks.

The night, the company, and the minister came, the signal was given, and arm in arm we marched through the crowded hall. We were just entering the parlor door, when down I went kerslap on the oilcloth, pulling Sal after me. Some cussed fellow dropped a banana skin on the floor, and floored me. It split an awful hole in my cassimeres. It was too late to back out, so we marched in and were spliced, and taking a seat I watched the kissing the bride operation. My groomsman kissed her till I jumped up to take a slice, when, oh horror! a little 6-year-old imp had crawled behind me, and had pinned my coat to the chair, and in jumping up I again fell sprawling on the floor, to the admiration of the astonished multitude. I was finally put to bed and there all my troubles ended. Good night.

Canine and Human Intelligence.

Mr. Ramschneider and his friend August Fifemacher were out walking, and Mr. Ramschneider was boasting of the intelligence of his dog.

"See here," he said; "I place my hat here, in this fence corner; I conceal it under the brush and dried leaves. We will no gewalk on. We pass down the lane; we geturnen this corner; we stroll by the woods. I send Bismarck back for my hat. See, my friend? he comprehends me; he flies through the woods; he speeds down the lane; he disappears around the corner; presently he will back gekommen before I have time to catch cold in my head."

It was true, as Mr. Ernst Ramschneider had said. The intelligent dog, readily understanding what was wanted, sped down the lane and flew around the corner to get the hat. But he did not get it all the same. For, just as he flew around the corner, a wary, though not an affluent tramp, who had watched the circus from afar, was in the act of appropriating Mr. Ramschneider's new hat unto himself, and when the dog got up in short range he fired a clay-cold clod, as hard as a door-knob, at that faithful animal, with a force that knocked a howl out of him as long as a clothes-line, and sent him wailing and weeping back to his astonished master. And when Mr. Ramschneider and his friend hastened to investigate, they found under the brush an old hat, that had lived in more ash heaps than you could count in a week, and greasy and forbidding in its general appearance that Mr. Ramschneider wouldn't touch it with his cane. Far away, beneath the distant fields, they saw the sunlight shining on Mr. Ramschneider's $5 hat, and the tramp of the dusty highway was jogging along under it. But Mr. Ramschneider walked home bare as to his head, which is of the bald, baldy, and he hasn't got out of bed yet with the cold he caught.

Ruined by a Spider.

Spiders crawling more abundantly and conspicuously than usual upon the indoor walls of our houses foretell the near approach of rain; but the following anecdote intimates that some of their habits are the equally-certain indication of frost being at hand. Quartermaster Disjonval, seeking to beguile the tedium of his prison hours at Utrecht, had studied attentively the habits of the spider; and eight years of imprisonment had given him leisure to be well versed in its ways. In December, of 1794, the French army, on whose success his restoration to liberty depended, was in Holland, and victory seemed certain if the frost, then of unprecedented severity, continued. The Dutch Envoy had failed to negotiate a peace, and Holland was despairing, when the frost suddenly broke. The Dutch were now exulting, and the French Generals prepared to retreat; but the spider warned Disjonval that the thaw would be of short duration, and he knew that his weather monitor never deceived. He contrived to communicate with the army of his countrymen and its Generals, who duly estimated his character, and relied upon his assurance that within a few days the water would again be passable by troops. They delayed their retreat. Within twelve days frost had returned—the French army triumphed. Disjonval was liberated; and a spider had brought down ruin on the Dutch nation.

An Editor Killed.

S. H. Brummet, editor of the Hollister (Cal.) Enterprise, was recently shot and killed by the editor of the Telegraph, G. W. Carleton, published at the same place. There had been an unusually animated controversy between the two papers respecting the publication of the delinquent tax-list. This culminated in the publication of a charge with blazing head-lines in the Telegraph that Brummet was a horse-thief and a scoundrel generally. Brummet met Carleton on the street and asked why such an infamous charge had been made against him. Without making any reply Carleton drew his revolver, and quick as a flash fired, the ball striking Brummet in the forehead. The wounded man lingered a few minutes and died. There was great indignation in Hollister over the event, and the authorities had considerable difficulty in protecting their prisoner from a crowd anxious to lynch him. Brummet was a young man and was generally esteemed in the community. The charge made against him grew out of a misunderstanding between himself and a former employer in a question of wages, in which Brummet settled the matter by appropriating for payment a horse, which he had in his possession. His employer did not see an opportunity of avenging himself through the law, so he procured the publication in Carleton's paper of an affidavit charging Brummet with being a thief, etc.

A St. Louis Butcher's Find.

As Joseph Busse, a St. Louis butcher was slicing up a cow to supply with beef the customers of his market, he saw among the contents of the animal's stomach a small, green, odd-looking lump. He picked at this lump until he had unrolled a wad of $10 greenbacks. J. C. Little, from whom Busse bought the cow, claimed the money, but Busse refuses to give it up, arguing that if a man wants to fatten his cattle on greenbacks the butchers will not object.

SMILES AND TEARS.

There is a sense of joy,
So potent and complete,
Which not alone doth show
A smiling countenance;
But welling dew of tears
In windows of the soul.

There is a sense of grief,
So potent and complete,
Which, not alone, is shown
By welling, bitter tears;
But, on the countenance,
The sad, expressive smile.

Such tears and smiles doth yield
Their blessings, as the dew
And light on drooping flowers.
But crocodile, horrid tears,
And satan smiles, doth win
Disaster and contempt.

The Bear Walked Away.

An Irishman of Montana was working a placer mine, a few miles from Bear Gulch, and visited that place one day to get his tools sharpened. Just as he was about to start back some one told him that if he would go home by the way of Sour Krout Gulch he could not miss his way, and would save several miles of walking.

Pat started out, but after traveling several miles the sun was almost down, and he had seen nothing that looked familiar. At last he made up his mind that he was lost, and, to use his own words, feared he "would be robbed and murthered intirely all alone."

While he was in this state of mind he spied a cinnamon bear on the side of the mountain, and was almost ready to fall to the ground with fright. Recovering his self-possession a little, he said:

"I thought it wouldn't do to let the bear think I was afraid of him, and concluded I might intimidate him by making him think there were siveral of me. So, walking a little faster, I called out as loud as iver I could, 'Mike! Oi say, Mike, hould on a bit till I catch up wid ye and the rest o' the b'ys.' When the bear heard that he walked away and said not a word."

The Little Old Church.

I went to the little church to-day
  Over the brook beyond the hill;
It looks as it looked when I went away,
  Green-yarded and white-paled still.

I was a youth when I crossed the sea
  To wander in foreign lands: and lo!
Now there is gray in my beard. Ah, me!
  Can it be so long ago?

There used to be in those far-back years
  A little girl with a happy face,
And a sweet, strange fashion of smiles and tears,
  And a young fawn's agile grace.

Who sat each Sunday serenely there
  In that little church, where the sunlight fell
Through the windows over her yellow hair,
  And over her face—ah well!

Ah well! And I—oh, that little maid!
  I loved her truly. Each Sabbath day
I'd go there, and watch how the sunshine played
  In her hair ere I went away;

Ere I went away: that was long years back,
  And now I am middle-aged, forsooth;
It's hard that a brave, strong lad, good lack!
  Must give up his brave, strong youth.

While a little church for years can seem Unchanged. Why, to-day they sang that strain
That they sang long ago—it was like a dream
  Of my dead youth come again.

I sat in a dim, back-corner pew
  Where I sat when a boy; and I closed my eyes,
Till thoughts of the past and the present grew
  Into the solemn mysteries.

I dreamed I was young again—that there,
  In the seat three paces in front of me,
The sunshine was dancing on yellow hair—
  And I thought: "Can this thing be?

I went to her grave 'neath the church-yard tree
  On this very morn ere I came in here—
Where I thought of the things that used to be,
  Till I felt on my face a tear;

"And now to think if I open my eyes
  I shall see her kneel in that pew and pray
With a soul that is ready for paradise,
  As she did ere I went away!"

I opened my eyes, and looked: but lo!
  The pew was empty: the sunlight strayed
Up and down on the cushioned seat, as though
  It sought for the little maid.

A butterfly drifted in, and flew
  For a moment about, then out again;
"Into my life she came like you,
  And went," I faltered in pain.

Then the preacher read: "Even as water spilled
  On the ground that cannot be gathered again
Are the children of men;" and the sad words filled
  My soul with a sadder pain.

When lo! the butterfly fluttered in
  Once more: and the preacher's lips then read,
"As little children are, free from sin—"
  "She is gathered to God," I said.

And I said: "You went, but you have returned;
  I shall see her again in the years to be—
In the years to be!"—and my sad heart burned
  By the wayside there, in me.

I had not entered for many years
  A church of Christ as I did to-day;
Till this morning my eyes had not known tears
  Since the time when I went away.

I think I shall go to this church always
  Till they carry me out to the grave-yard tree,
For the sake of that dear girl's sweet young face
  And the days that used to be.

The Great Master.

"I am my own master!" cried a young man, proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand; "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible—is it?"

"A master must lay out the work he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, else he must fail!"

"Well?"

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man.

"Now, I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail, sure, if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master, and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. 'One is my Master, even Christ.' I work under His direction. He is regular, and where He is Master all goes well."

The Broken Graft.

The late Dr. Spencer said that, when he was a lad, his father gave him a little tree that had just been grafted. One day, in his father's absence, he let the colt into the garden, and the young animal broke off the graft. It was mended, however, on the following day, and continued to grow finely.

Years passed, and young Spencer became a man, and a minister. Some time after he became a pastor, he made a visit to the old homestead where he spent his boyhood. His little sapling had become a large tree, and was loaded with apples.

During the night after his arrival at the homestead there was a violent thunder-shower, and the wind blew fearfully. He rose early in the morning, and, on going out, found his tree lying prostrate upon the ground. The wind had twisted it off just where the colt broke it when it was a sapling. Probably the storm would not have broken it at all if it had not been broken when it was small.

The incident furnishes a good illustration of the fact that often those whose characters are broken in manhood were weakened in early life; that the fallen man who was religiously trained, and has become corrupt, broke off his connection with virtuous ways by the same sin that enervated his boyhood.

The tree was broken by accident, but we break our moral life by our own misdeeds.—Youth's Companion.

Dying Nations.

Why do nations die? Cultivated Greece, and all-conquering Rome; Vandal, and Goth, and Hun, and Moor, and Pole, and Turk, all dead or dying. Why? Murdered by nations more powerful? Swallowed by earthquakes? Swept away by pestilence or plague, or starved by pitiless famine? Not by any of these. Not by the lightning and thunder; not by the tempest and the storm; not by poisoned air, or volcanic fires did they die! They perished by moral degradation, the legitimate result of gluttony, intemperance and effeminacy. When a nation becomes rich, then there is leisure and the means of indulgence in the appetites and passions of our nature, which wear the body and wreck the mind. As with nations, so with families. Wealth takes away the wholesome stimulus of effort, idleness opens the flood-gates of passionate indulgence, and the heir of millions dies heirless and poor, and both name and memory ingloriously rot.

If, then, there is any truth and force in argument, each man owes it to himself, to his country, and, more than all, to his Maker, to live a life of temperance, industry and self-denial as to every animal gratification; and with these having an eye to the glory of God, this nation of ours will live with increasing prosperity and renown until, with one foot on land and another on the sea, the angel of eternity proclaims time no longer.—Exchange.

Be Short.

Long visits, long stories, long essays, long exhortations, and long prayers, seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is short. Time is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense, abridge, and intensify. We can bear things that are dull if they are only short. We can endure many an ache and ill if it is over soon, while even pleasures grow insipid, and pain intolerable, if they be protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be short. Lop off branches; stick to the main fact in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive, and get through; if you speak, tell your message and hold your peace; boil down two words into one, and three into two. Always learn to be short.

A stage-load of passengers were startled when a desperado brandished a knife and swore he would kill the driver; and they laughed when the driver savagely drew an old black pipe, and the scared desperado plunged into a pond to escape the bullet.

THE DANGER AHEAD.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

The political prophets who predicted with so much confidence that the machine would be smashed at Harrisburg, because Republican journals protested vigorously against the third term, and because many counties elected so-called Blaine delegates—that were really Cameron creatures in disguise—now assume that the composition and the proceedings of the convention were a fatal blow to Grant's candidature. The solitary fact upon which this assumption rests is the small majority which Cameron was able to muster on the vital tests of comparative strength between the contending factions.

A complete and crushing victory was gained, and that was all that Cameron fought for. He cared nothing for numbers. The action of the convention makes him absolute master of the party organization, and secures him a delegation to Chicago in which there will be no dissenting voice. The new trick of a Committee on Delegates to the National Convention, interpolated to strengthen Cameron's hand, and accepted without a murmur by Blaine's submissive friends, subjects every one to inspection before being certified, and the unit vote rivets the last link in the chain of partisan bondage.

What do the managers of the machine care if the Congressional districts go through the empty form of electing delegates to Chicago? Who will heed their noisy protests when they get there, in the face of the action of a regular State Convention? They will never be permitted to go inside the National Convention, and outside they can do no harm. Even if conditionally admitted, in order to make their fall more signal, they would be the first to cry out for "harmony in the party," as fussy little Gen. Bingham did at Harrisburg, where he officiated in the double capacity of Blaine's chosen fugleman and Cameron's confidential friend.

Therefore, Grant starts with Pennsylvania at his back, according to the original plan. The convention was called early to do this very business, after the candidate had been paraded over the country, from San Francisco to Philadelphia, to manufacture artificial enthusiasm for the movement. It is easy for those to see now whose eyes were dazzled heretofore that the New York Convention was timed by the managers so as to respond quickly to Pennsylvania, and thus to give the third term a good send-off, with the two great States of the Atlantic leading, to be soon followed by Illinois, and by others in due time.

The resistance in New York will be far less than in Pennsylvania, because Conkling has his forces better in hand than Cameron had, or at least he has no organized opposition to confront, such as showed its head at Harrisburg, and which, with courage on the part of Blaine and competent direction, might have been made formidable against the machine. Sentimental Republicans will protest, and the Young Scratchers will threaten to repeat the work of last November on a larger scale next time; but the convention at Utica will do its master's bidding, and swell the chorus for Grant.

To suppose that the managers of this scheme, who have staked their political future on its success, will now go backward, instead of going forward, is to accuse the boldest and ablest party leaders of idiocy. And that, too, after they have won the first imposing triumph intended by its incidents to attract attention all over the country, to strike rivals with dismay, to inspire the timid with new courage, and to revive faith in Grant's lucky star.

The men who audaciously spurn the solemn pledges of their own conventions against a third term, who defy the known convictions of tens of thousands of honest Republicans, and who despise every voice of remonstrance, are not the men to halt on the road upon which they have started. Nor are they likely to be alarmed by essays on the traditions of the republic, nor by well-worded resolutions declaring against the dictation of an offensive oligarchy. To retreat after what has already been done, leaving out of view that which is very sure soon to follow, would bring ruin and disgrace on Mr. Conkling as the chief leader and directing mind of the movement.

He is forced, by the necessity of the situation, to move on in a straight line toward his objective point without deflection, and without a sign of distrust about his ability to reach it surely. Hence there is no special merit in being seemingly brave when no alternative is offered. But, whatever else may be said of Mr. Conkling, he is entitled to the credit of having a supreme scorn for public opinion in the pursuit of his objects. If it be deemed at all expedient to pass the Potter bill for choosing electors by districts, he will give the order, and it will be obeyed promptly and cheerfully.

The Chicago Convention will be carried by the disciplinary methods just witnessed in Pennsylvania, and which will be repeated in a few weeks in New York, and later in Illinois. In the view of the politician, nothing succeeds like success. The packed and sham delegations from the South, made up of officeholders and dependents, will not hold together an hour, once they are launched at Chicago. They know very well that after the convention Sherman will have no further use for them, and after March 4, 1881, he will be powerless and in private life, even if disposed to help them. They will sell out to the highest bidder, and go over in a body to Grant.

Without some unforeseen accident, Grant may be regarded as the coming candidate of the Republican party, the political prophets to the contrary notwithstanding. His managers hold that the people of this country have very little to do with elections, and that both parties are run by machines, which nominate candidates and compel voters to take one or the other. They think, in the present case, that the Democrats will either put up a Bourbon, whom Grant can beat by reviving the sectional issue and breaking the Southern column, or they will attempt a juggle in the Presidential count by Congress, and therefore Grant is the man to meet that contingency, backed by the fraudulent administration.

This suggestion may strike the public as wild, but the leaders do not intend to allow a regular Bourbon, if by any chance such a candidate could be elected, to be inaugurated as President. They have seen the country submit to one monstrous fraud, and they are desperate enough, in playing for possession of the treasury, the vast patronage, and the army of officeholders, to go to the last extremity. We are fast driving to a perilous crisis. If the Democrats should have wisdom enough to combine with the elements of opposition to a third term, and to unite the popular sentiment on a candidate, recognized everywhere as having been faithful to the Union when its integrity was assailed, and as being honest, capable, and courageous, the game would be blocked. If this course is not taken, there is danger ahead, the extent of which cannot now be measured.

UNHAPPY REPUBLICANS.

How the Third-Termers Captured Pennsylvania Against the Sentiment of the State—Significant Letter from Horace White to the New York Nation.

Senator Don Cameron's exploit at Harrisburg is still the principal topic of conversation here [Washington]. Opinions differ as to its effect upon the Republican Conventions of other States, but some facts are settled and agreed upon as regards the event itself. One is that the Pennsylvania Convention did not want to renominate Grant, but that Cameron compelled them to do so. Another is that Blaine could have beaten Cameron—that is, could have prevented the adoption of the Grant instructions—if he had had the spirit or the wit to fight for his rights. A third is that the leaders of the third-term movement are going to nominate Grant at Chicago, even by a majority of one, if it is possible to do so, and that they would do this even if they apprehended he would be beaten at the polls. Consequently, evidence offered to them that Grant is a weak candidate—and there could be no better evidence than the Harrisburg Convention itself—weighs not a feather in their calculations. They do not want another Republican administration that they cannot control, and in preference to it they will take a Democratic one cheerfully, and trust to the chances of the next four years. Conkling would have preferred Tilden to Hayes before the latter was installed into office, and he went so far toward bringing the former in that the Democrats conceived that they were betrayed by him when, at the critical moment, his nerves gave way. Party rage, which has so often served his turn, appalled him in that instance, but it did not prevent him from disclosing that he wants no more Republican victories of that kind. As for Cameron, he has introduced himself to the public as a sort of Barbary Corsair or Roman Proconsul entertaining a well-grounded contempt for the people whom he slashes—that is, for his own party in his own State. It is spoken of as a remarkable thing that 113 delegates out of 246, although stoutly backed by public opinion at home, dared to call their souls their own in the presence of this terrible fellow. For there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your Cameron living! Blaine really represented the vestiges and remains of popular sovereignty in party government at the Harrisburg Convention. I doubt if there will ever be so strong a show of opposition to personal government in Pennsylvania again, until the party has been soundly thrashed at the polls. It is a ludicrous waste of energy to send sixty or seventy able-bodied men to Chicago to make a unit and to cast one vote. That this is done is but another instance of the survival of forms after the substance has vanished. Perhaps the most startling sign of the times is the ease with which such things are done—the facility and abandon with which the State of Pennsylvania is lowered from the attitude and character of a Commonwealth to that of a province under the government of a Prætor. Doubtless Mr. Blaine was an unfit man to bear the standard of the Commonwealth in the recent engagement; nevertheless he did bear it, and when the wheels of the "machine" rolled over him it was the Commonwealth's blood that gushed out.

The Blaine men here in Washington, however, prefer to be considered cunning fellows rather than victims. They say now that the course of the Harrisburg Convention ran parallel with their intentions; that it was not their purpose to kill the Grant movement suddenly, because that would have drawn all the anti-machine fire upon them; that they prefer to have the batteries of the Independents directed against the third term during the next four months rather than against their man; that the moral effect of the Harrisburg massacre must tell in their favor throughout the country; that Cameron's victory was virtually a defeat because his majority was so small, etc., etc. The third-term people, on the other hand, say that all they wanted at Harrisburg was all the votes; that they were not so grasping as to claim any more than the whole number, and consequently they are satisfied. What they expect is that the impetus gained in Pennsylvania will produce an exactly similar result in New York, and that the momentum of these two States will carry Illinois and Massachusetts—perhaps also Indiana—and that anything more which they need they can easily obtain from the South. If the Blaine men have any programme as well defined as that, I have not heard of it. They talk vaguely about Illinois as the bulwark and breakwater that is to roll back the third-term flood. Gen. Logan, however, is quoted for the third term, and Gen. Grant, as it happens, has a nominal residence in Illinois; the supporters of Washburne do not oppose the third-term movement, but do serve to divide the opposition to it. Gen. Logan's machine in Illinois is not the same thing as Cameron's in Pennsylvania, or Conkling's in New York. It is less subject to the one-man power. It was wholly in the hands of the Blaine men four years ago, and it dragged Logan along with it. It would probably do the same now, but for the adventitious circumstance that Gen. Grant has a house in Galena, where he occasionally spends a week's time. Something will really depend, as regards Illinois, upon public opinion. Any such demonstration of hostility to the third term as took place at Harrisburg would be fatal to it, because it would point to the loss of the State in the election, and the managers there have not reached the state of mental equipoise which can look calmly upon such a contingency. Illinois is not a sure State by any means, and an adverse result in Ohio in October would be likely to deluge it. Meanwhile it is among the possibilities that Blaine may surrender to the third-term movement and become as good a Grant man as anybody. But the third-term men will never surrender to him. They have the great advantage of knowing exactly what they want, and it is a mistake to suppose that they have any second choice. * * *

Returning to the Harrisburg Convention, I remarked that the third-term leaders know what they want. They have no set purpose to undermine the republic by paving the way for Grant or a future President to go in for a fourth term or any other number of terms. But a third term happens to fall in with their system of prætorship. Gen. Grant gave that system full swing, and he was the only man who could do so with tolerable safety, having a military reputation to fall back upon to serve as a screen for civil disorder. They know perfectly well what they can do with him, because they have tried him. His methods are their methods. Given four years more of this species of license and they calculate that they will not be troubled again with the presence of 113 dissenters at a Harrisburg Convention. As regards the election, they set much store upon the pride and self-reliance of the American people, which leads men to say, "Who's afraid? If we don't like a President can't we change him every four years?" The answer is: "No, unless you can get more than 113 delegates into your nominating convention."

The city of Fort Wayne has just disposed of the remainder of her water-works bonds, amounting to $150,000, at 103 and accrued interest. The bonds run thirty years and bear 6 per cent. interest.

A fire in the De Pauw glass works, at New Albany, destroyed the pot-house, box-factory, grinding-house, and large stove-house. Loss, $35,000 to $50,000; insurance, $10,000. The fire is believed to be incendiary.

The temperance war in Jackson county has spread until it has taken in a portion of Jennings county. The excitement in all that section almost equals the famous crusade of six years ago, and is still on the increase.

Some of the classes in the girls' high school at New Albany have so liberally construed the bissextile privileges of the year, particularly as regards the boys' high school, that the local press has taken up the subject with some vigor of remonstrance.

Five suits for damages, in the region of $3,000 each, are in progress of preparation against the Evansville and Cairo Packet Company. The plaintiffs are the roustabouts injured in the recent explosion in the powder magazine of the steamer Idlewild.

Gov. Williams has granted a respite to Arthur Bissot, now only 17 years old, who is under life sentence for the murder of George Carney, Town Marshal of Bedford. The respite is for a period of six months, and conditioned that, in case he gets well, he shall be immediately returned to the prison.

The city of Wabash, this State, is to be lighted by electricity. The contract for an electric light of 10,000 candle power, to be placed in the dome of the County Court House, intended to light that city, has been let to the Brush Electric Light Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, for $1,800. The agreement states that, should the light prove unsatisfactory, the city shall be at no expense.

A part of a human skeleton has been found on the river bank at Shoals. The bank was washed out by the recent high water, which exposed the bones, and gave rise to the discovery. Physicians who have examined the skeleton think that it is the remains of an Indian from the shape of the bones. The skull has a small round hole in the back part of it, resembling a bullet-hole. From general appearances, one would think it had been lying there many years.

Attorney General Woollen, who has been in Washington looking after Indiana war claims, has returned, and reports that the 5 per cent. claim for $100,000 goes before the Senate with the indorsement of the committee to which it was referred. It will probably be paid. The other claim, for $600,000, for funds spent in equipping United States troops during the war, is not in as favorable a condition. It will be allowed some time probably, but not for several months at least. These claims are mostly for interest paid by the State on the war debt which was subsequently assumed by the General Government. By mistake the item of "interest" was stricken out at the time of settlement, and from that time until now the State has been seeking payment.

Wm. P. Wilson, City Treasurer of Richmond, left home the other day, intending to go to a meat shop at the corner. An hour later Mrs. Wilson went in the door-yard and saw him lying on his face in an out-house on the lot. She ran to him, and found that he was dead. A physician was summoned, who decided that his death was caused by apoplexy. Mr. Wilson was a Sergeant in Company B, Nineteenth Indiana infantry, the famous old Iron Brigade, and lost a leg in the battle of Gettysburg. While a convalescent in the hospital the citizens sent for him to accept the office of City Collector, which he held until it was abolished in 1867, when he was elected City Treasurer. He was returned to office at every succeeding election, and had nineteen months yet to serve on his present term.

Juvenile Congressmen.

The present House contains an unusually large number of youngsters. The palm in this direction is carried off by Richard G. Frost, of St. Louis, who only completed his 28th year last month, and who first ran for Congress in 1876, failing of an election then, when he was 25. Taylor, of the First Tennessee district, the young lawyer who has the reputation of having fiddled his way into the House, carrying a Republican district by sheer force of his popularity among the mountaineers of East Tennessee, will not be 30 until next July, and Acklen, of Louisiana, is only a couple of months his senior, while Speer, of Georgia, is but little over 31. Frost is a very boyish-looking fellow in the light business suit which he usually wears, and it would not be at all strange if he is sometimes mistaken for one of the pages by a colleague, as he not infrequently is by spectators. Speer looks so young that nobody who should see him outside his seat would suppose he was a member of Congress. Indeed, a little incident which occurred in a horse-car going up Capitol hill shows that not all his fellow-members yet know him as a law-maker. A scholarly Representative from Ohio of nearly twice his years fell into conversation with him, but they had not talked long before the Westerner, apparently suspecting that he was being interviewed "unbeknownst," remarked, inquiringly, "You're a journalist, aren't you, sir?" His surprise may be imagined when the young man replied: "No, sir; I am a member of the House from Georgia."—Washington Cor. Springfield Republican.

The Old Man's Experience With Faith.

[Des Moines Register.]

Eph was in a thoughtful mood as he warmed his shins by the fire. After some moments spent in reflection, he looked up and said to his wife:

"De precha preche 'bout faith Sunday night, didn't he?"

"I b'lieb dat was de subjeck he had undah considerashun," replied his wife.

"An' he say dat ef you hab faith as big as a grain ob mustahd seed, an' you say to de mountain, 'com hyar,' it would tumble to de racket an' come, didn't he?"

"Dat's 'bout de way ob it," responded the old woman.

"Cyrus," said the old man, reflectively.

"Why, wat's de mattah, ole man?"

"I tried de game on dat hill jes back ob de pond in de back yard. I got my faith to de stickin' pint an' I demanded de hill to come ober an' fall into dat pond. Dat would hab made de lot worf a heap moah cash."

"Lan' sakes de ole fool gets wusser ebery year," said the old woman, holding up her hands. "Did de hill tumble?"

"Not edzackly," responded Eph. "I specs I had my faith by de wrong end, kase, while I was waitin' fer de hill to cabe in, de bank seemed moobed by de sperit; suffin' went kersloch, an' de next minnit dar was a ole fool ob de Baptis' perswashun like a eyeland, surrounded wid wattah, cussin' hisself kase he neber learned to swim, an' fer bleebin' ebery fool ting dat de precha tells."

"Laws, ole man, de precha was all right. De trubbel was, you didn't hab faith enuff."

"De debbil I did'nt! I tink I had too blamed much. Ef I had hab less I wouldn't hab gone neah dat wattah, wouldn't hab bin ducked an' laid up wid rumatiz as I specs ter be. Faith am a good ting, but it's got ter be mixed judishimously wid common hoss sense. Dats what made me say it war 'curus.' I was suah my goose war cooked. I bleebed dat, an' jes as my faith got ter dat pint, my hoofs struck de bottom, an' dry close was moah impohtent dan 'ligious belief in my mine."

The old man got up, and as he moved over toward the bed, preparatory to turning in, he said:

"Dese teeologimical queshuns fotched de mahtah to de stake, an' cum mighty nigh drownin' a niggah. De ole man will keep on de safe side aftah dis, an' stick to politics fer a steddy diet when dem fool spells come on him."

A Shiner's Raise.

A stranger loaded down with a big satchel halted at the postoffice corner yesterday to have his boots shined, and when the job had been completed, he felt for a nickel with the remark: "I suppose that five cents pays the bill?"

"Not much!" replied the shiner. "That used to be the figure, but it is seven cents now."

"Don't try to cheat me, boy! Five cents is the regular price here, and I know it!"

"See here, mister," said the shiner as he packed his brushes away, do you read the papers?"

"Of course I do."

"And don't you know that white paper has gone up 50 per cent?"

"Yes, I've read that it had."

"Well, how d'ye 'spose we kin black boots at five cents any more? The figure is seven, and if we can't bust the monopoly we'll have to raise on that."

The man came down with seven cents, but very slowly and thoughtfully as if he couldn't exactly understand all about it.

Dr. Lorimer, of Chicago while pastor in a southern state, was called to perform a marriage ceremony in a poor white settlement. After the knot was tied, the mother of the bride placed before the guests refreshments in the form of rye whiskey. Dr. Lorimer remonstrated with her for thus starting in life the new couple. The mother, a large woman, about a foot taller than the docter, placing her arms akimbo and looking him straight in the eye, said: "Look-a-yere, Mister Preacher, yer kim here to marry this yere couple yo've married this yere couple, now git."

Miss Bonfield, a schoolmistress at Shelbyville, Ind., is white, and her affianced husband, Mr. Tarman, is black. Their engagement was made public by Turman's discarded sweetheart, who found a love letter from Miss Bonfield in his pocket, and sent it to the school trustees. The schoolmistress was immediately dismissed, but one of the local newspapers and all of the clergymen demanded her re instatement.

* * *

Woodworker, an Indian chief, says he has never seen a gray-haired Indian in his life, and he has seen some over 80 years old. It is because an Indian has no trouble, no worriment, or anything that way. His wife chops all the wood, builds the fires, goes to market at daylight, stones tramps out of the front yard, and blacks his boots. And he is not tormented by tax-collectors, gas bills and lightning-rod peddlers. Let an Indian start a twenty-four-column daily paper in a six-column town to fill a long-felt want, and his hair would turn gray in one night.

THE PATTER OF THE SHINGLE.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

When the angry passion gathering in my mother's face I see,
And she leads me in the bed-room—gently lays me on her knee,
Then I know that I will catch it, and my flesh in fancy itches,
As I listen for the patter of the shingle on my breeches.

Every tinkle of the shingle has an echo and a sting,
And a thousand burning fancies into active being spring,
And a thousand bees and hornets 'neath my coat-tail seems to swarm,
As I listen to the patter of the shingle, Oh! so warm.

In a splutter comes my father—whom I supposed had gone—
To survey the situation and tell her to lay it on,
To see her bending o'er me as I listen to the strain
Played by her and the shingle in a wild and wierd refrain.

In a sudden intermission, which appears my only chance,
I say: "strike gently, mother, or you'll split my Sunday pants!"
She stops a moment, draws her breath, the shingle holds aloft,
And says: "I had not thought of that my son, just take them off."

Holy Moses! and the angels, cast thy pitying glances down!
And thou, oh family doctor, put a good soft poultice on,
And may I with fools and dunces everlastingly commingle,
If ever I say another word when my mother wields the shingle.

A Mistaken Application.

[New Orleans Picayune.]

Never get out of temper with a barber. A gentleman not long since was sitting in a barber's chair trying to read the morning paper while having his hair cut. The barber in the meantime was worrying [illegible] long story about the barber's boy and the shoemaker's daughter at the last Saturday night's ball, a story which was strung out until forbearance ceased to be virtuous, when the man being clipped looked up somewhat annoyed and exclaimed, impatiently: "Oh, cut it short!" The barber did cut it short. When the man left the chair he was as bald as a new-born baby. He wears a smoking-cap in church now, and is bothered to death by small boys who hand him bills of the theatre where the can-can is danced.

It Circulates Too Fast.

[Bob Burdette.]

We protest against the folly of this senseless demand that the money of the land should be kept in circulation. That's just the trouble with it—it circulates too fast. What we are trying to do is to stop a little of it.

* * *

A Sacramento undertaker's conscience accused him of being glad when he heard of a death, and he became convinced that even the probability of an epidemic caused pleasurable emotion. He therefore committed suicide, leaving a letter in which he said that he could no longer remain in a business the profits of which were closely connected with human misery.

The Danville (Ky.) Advocate says that the propriety and availability of Hon. W. H. English, of Indiana, as a candidate on the national ticket, is now being recognized all over the country. We print a significant article to-day from the Boston Post, the leading democratic paper in the New England states. Mr. English is a good man, and belongs to the old democratic school.

Albert Payne Richardson eloped with a married woman from Melrose, Mass., and was arrested, tried, and fined. Then he returned to his own wife with whom he lived until a few years ago, when he eloped again. This time he chose a maiden, having learned, as he said in a letter to Mrs. Richardson, that there was no law against running off with unmarried females.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and pleasant cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Ashma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Soldiers' Bounty.

[Fort Wayne Enterprise.]

On account of the present agitation in relation to the Weaver bill to equalize the pay of the volunteer soldiers of the late war on a gold basis, and the different bills introduced by members of congress, we herewith present a condensed statement of bounties given to volunteers in the late civil war, classified according to the date and period of enlistment furnished by the second auditor of the treasury.

No bounty paid to volunteers for enlistments before the commencement of the rebellion, April 12, 1861, nor after April 30, 1865, in any case—nor for 100 days, or 3, 6, and 9 months' men.

1. Decision of the supreme court, March 24, 1870, and act of April 22, 1875. This applies only to enlistments for 3 years, prior to July 22, 1861, and since the commencement of the rebellion. All volunteers who enlisted for 3 years prior to July 22, 1861, and were mustered into service for 3 years before Aug. 6, 1861, [illegible] $100 bounty [illegible] same for such service. Those discharged for promotion or by way of favor are not entitled to this bounty.

2. Act of July 22, 1861, gives a $100 bounty for 2 and 3 years' volunteers, from April 12, 1861, to Dec. 24, 1863, (except veteran volunteers, and recruits for old organizations), and also from April 1, 1864, to July 18, 1864, if they served 2 years or more as enlisted men, or were honorably discharged as such on account of wounds received in line of duty before 2 years' service.

Also additional bounty, act July 28, 1866, $100 to 3 years' men from April 19, 1861, and $50 to 2 years' men from April 14, 1861, for same enlistments and conditions as stated in "No. 2," if not entitled to receive a greater bounty than $100 under previous laws for all other enlistments, except those discharged for promotion or by way of favor, and drafted men and substitutes.

3. Act of March 9, 1863, gives $100 bounty only to drafted men and their substitutes enrolled for 3 years, from March 3, 1863, to Sept. 5, 1864, if they served 2 years or more, or were discharged on account of wounds received in line of duty before 2 years' service.

4. A bounty of $300 to volunteer recruits of "old" organizations (that is, those that had been complete and had left the state to which they belonged), for 3 years' enlistments, from Oct. 24, 1863, to April 1, 1864, paid in installments as follows: $60 in advance and $40 after each 2, 6, 12, 18, 24 and 36 months respectively. Also to new organizations, from Dec. 24, 1863, to April 1, 1864, $300 to volunteer recruits, same as in "No. 4."

5. $400 to veteran volunteers (that is, those enlisting for 2 years, and who have previously served nine consecutive months in the army), from Jan. 1, 1863, to April 1, 1864, payable as follows: Advance $25 (or $60 after Sept. 28, 1863), and $50 for each 2, 6, 12, 18, 24, and 30 months, and the balance at expiration of service. Soldiers who had rendered nine months consecutive service in the army were permitted to re-enlist in another organization after Jan. 1, 1863, and prior to April 1, 1894, and become veterans. If they re-enlist in the same regiment, they must have previously served two years or have been discharged by reason of wounds received in line of duty in order to become veterns, and these were probably paid all bounty due for service.

6. Act of July 4, 1864, volunteers enlisting for one, two, and three years from July 18, 1864, to April 30, 1865, were paid $100 for one year, $200 for two years, and $300 for three years, in equal instalments—one-third on muster in, one-third at the expiration of one-half the term, and the balance at the expiration of the full term of service. And the First Corps United States Veteran Volunteers (Hancock's corps), $300 in advance, in addition to that stated in "No. 6."

7. Colored troops, act June 15, 1864, and March 3, 1873. Colored men enlisting as volunteers from April 12, 1861, to July 18, 1864, are entitled to the same bounty as white volunteers for the same period.

Also colored recruits from Oct. 17, 1863, to June 15, 1864, to same bounty as white volunteer recruits, if "enrolled and subject to draft at the time of enlistment."

8. Acts March 3, 1863, March 3, 1865 and joint resolution April 12, 1866. All soldiers discharged of wounds received in battle or in line of duty are entitled to receive the same bounty they would have received if they had served their full term of enlistment.

There are now pending in the senate the Logan bill, and in the house the Kirkwood bill, both measures being identical in their scope and meaning, viz: the equalization of bounties. A careful reading of the different enactments will show our readers that all were not treated alike, and the proposed bills are sought to be made into laws to accomplish the object. That such can be done and make all soldiers equal in relation to bounties we do not assert, as that would be impossible, as we shall show further on. But the nearest approach to such equalization that can be devised is embodied in the present measure now pending, to-wit: to allow to each Union soldier of the late war 8⅓ dollars per month, deducting therefrom all previous bounties paid by the government. The only soldiers who would be benefited by such a law are the men who volunteered in 1861 and 1862, as all subsequent enlistments were made under inducements as to bounties that not only allowed the soldier 8⅓ dollars per month, but considerable more, and then not include state or local bounties. For the reason, if a man enlisted under the act of July, 1864, he received his bounty in full at the close of the war, the same as though he had served his time out, so also men enlisting from October 24, 1863, to April, 1864, received from the government when discharged in the summer of 1865 the full amount of bounty promised, although in all cases they had served only from fourteen to twenty months. From the foregoing it will be seen that the compensation to such soldiers in bounties was at a greater rate than 8⅓ dollars per month, and in no wise could they or any of the levies made in 1863-'64, and winter and spring of '65, be benefitted by the acts now pending. The three month's men would be entitled to $25, six months' men $50, and men who were accepted by the government for nine months and one year prior to 1863 and who subsequently did not re-enlist and receive sufficient bounty from the government, would [illegible] laws, as would also the volunteers of 1861 who enlisted for three years and who did not veteran, as explained in article 5, the three years' volunteers of 1862, and such soldiers who enlisted in the ranks and who were promoted previous to their having served two years in the ranks. All of these would receive compensation at the rate specified, deducting, as we have before said, all bounty previously paid them.

Many soldiers are now clamoring for equalization who would find that when they made their application that there was nothing coming to them.

We believe, however, that congress ought to pass the measure, for while the country does not legally owe one penny to any of her late defenders, morally it does, and we know of no soldiers of the late war who did not at all times believe that sooner or later the government would place them all on equal footing so far as it was within its power to do so. While this paper has believed in the Weaver bill, yet as there seems to be no prospect of that bill becoming a law, our honest convictions are that we correctly represent the opinions of all the late soldiers, and a large number of the citizens of the country, when we say that the measures introduced proposing such equalization ought to pass. President Hayes could hardly afford to veto the bill, as President Grant did, for the reason that the party in power cannot further alienate the ex-soldiers. But, independent of all political consideration, the bounties of our late defenders should be equalized, as a matter of right and justice, and not as an act of political policy. And further than this, congress ought to so amend the pre-emption laws so as to enable soldiers to secure their 160 acres of land by warrant without actual settlement. The men who risked their lives in defense of the nation should have more favors shown them in the matter than is shown to the immigrant of yesterday. We believe when the present law was passed deducting time served in the army from the five year's residence required to get a title under the homestead law, the objection urged against giving the survivors or their heirs the land outright, was that such procedure would throw the public domain into the hands of speculators, and actual settlers would be deprived of the benefits intended to be conferred under the homestead law. Taking the ground that the ex-soldiers were not capable of taking care of their own interests, right here the query comes in: into whose hands did the millions upon millions of acres pass, donated to the Pacific and other railroad rings? The soldiers had no powerful lobby to urge their claims; the railroad ringsters did; hence the difference. Congress might safely enact such legislation now, as most of the boys have grown into sedate middle-aged men and are heads of families.

There are still some very honest men in the world. A Tennessee merchant, named Park, had a regular credit customer, named Southall, for many years. They settled at the beginning of every year, Mr. Park rendering a statement of his account, and Mr. Southall taking it home to compare with one he always kept. Invariably he came back and said, "Mr. Park, your account is correct, except I find that you have failed to charge me with such and such articles I got," amounting to a small sum. This went on for a number of years, until Mr. Park said to him, "Mr. Southall, I won't be bothered with your account any longer. Keep the account yourself and I will keep none, and we will settle by yours." And so they did for a long time, till Southall died.

The leaders of the Allen county delegation in attendance yesterday were evidently a little off on Blaine. Grant suits them better.

Greenback County Convention.

The greenback county convention of DeKalb county convened at Winslow's hall, in Waterloo, Saturday, February 21, 1880, for the purpose of choosing a delegate to represent them in the greenback national convention, to be held at St. Louis, Mo., March 4, 1880. There were representatives from all parts of the county. An organization was perfected by electing Mr. A. D. Goetschius chairman, and W. T. Kimsey secretary.

It was moved and carried that the chair appoint a committee of three to draft a set of resolutions to be submitted for adoption. The chair appointed J. U. Winslow, John Davis and J. S. Holly as that committee. After a brief interval, J. U. Winslow, as chairman of said committee, submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted as expressive of the sense of this convention upon the issues of the day:

[illegible] DeKalb county, state of Indiana, in convention, do adopt the following fundamental principles, as we enter upon the campaign of 1880:

1. It is the duty of the United States, by its lawfully constituted authorities, to create money, with full power to pay all debts, at its stamped value, and this duty it can neither shrink from nor delegate to others.

2. And while we do not question the validity of the United States debt (and which debt the poor do not owe to the rich), we believe it will best serve the whole number of citizens, will wrong no one, and will secure the affections of the people for their common country, by being in the form of money.

Therefore we demand and will strive to secure the refunding of every form of United States indebtedness, dollar for dollar, into a new creation of absolute greenback money created primarily for this purpose, to be perpetually used thereafter, as a medium of exchange and standard of payment.

And as such conversion or payment of the bonds will work the destruction of the national banks—the champion villainy of our nation's history—we demand that the government shall never more issue currency through chartered associations or create bonds of any description whatever.

Finally, we believe in the necessity of a party of united people, who will rise above old party lines and prejudices, and who will not affiliate in any degree with either of the old parties.

And we will henceforth nominate and vote for such persons only who are believers in, and are identified with, this our sacred cause, and we pledge ourselves each to the other, and to our co-operating fellow-citizens throughout the country to slacken not our efforts until the last United States bond is swept once and forever from the face of the earth.

Resolved, That this convention fully endorse the action of Hugo Preyer in calling the national convention at St. Louis, Mo., March 4, 1880.

That this effort for the co-operation of those who, thus far, have stood aloof from the zealous workers for the immediate payment and cancelation of the bonds, finds its apology in the desire to secure the union with us of at least 90 per cent. of the so-called nationals, who believe the bonds to be an unmitigated curse.

This convention requests its delegate to act responsive only to the principles thus announced, both in forming a platform and in presenting a presidential and vice-presidential ticket.

On motion of J. S. Holly, the convention proceeded to take an informal ballot for delegate, which resulted in no choice being made. Dr. Darby then moved that the convention proceed to elect a delegate by acclamation, which was adopted, and the name of J. S. Holly was presented and chosen as the delegate from this county to the national convention. Mr. Holly thanked the convention for honoring him with the privilege of representing them in the national convention, and in the course of his remarks he stated briefly the ruling principles of the party, and pledged himself to the carrying out of the fundamental principles embodied in our platform. Remarks then followed by Dr. Darby, Winslow and others, upon the political questions at issue, impressing upon the minds of all present the importance of untiring zeal in the work before them, and the non-affiliation with old parties.

Letters were read from R. S. S. Reed and others, regretting that they were not permitted to be present, but they were in full sympathy with the onward progress with the greenback work in this county and elsewhere.

It was moved and carried that the present county central committee be retained, the chairman to have discretionary power to make any changes deemed essential for the best interests of the party.

The county central committee consists of the following gentlemen, viz: J. E. Dermott, Concord; M. E. Chapman, Newville; Harrison Smith, Stafford; H. Lydecker, Waterloo, W. Burns, Wilmington; R. S. S. Reed, Auburn; J. E. Casebeer, Keyser; Albert Harding, Richland; E. N. Nidig, Fairfield; E. R. Shoemaker, Smithfield; Allen Shultz, Franklin; J. Kenistruise, Troy; Ward Kennedy, Town of Butler. Dr. A. B. Darby, Waterloo, Chairman.

It was moved and carried that the proceedings of this convention be sent to the following papers with a request for their publication: Auburn COURIER, Waterloo Press, Industrial Era, Indianapolis Sun, and Pomeroy's Democrat.

The convention passed a vote of thanks to Mr. Goetschius for acting as chairman of the convention.

There being no further business brought before the convention it adjourned sine die.

[illegible]

W. S. KIMSEY, Sec'y.

An ardent greenbacker was around last week trying to get soldiers to sign a petition to have the Weaver bill passed, but I guess he met with poor success, just as he ought. If soldiers want the bill passed, let them, and not a stay-at-home ranger, get up these petitions. Why need they bother themselves about it. I consider the bill one of the greatest pieces of humbuggery that was ever got up. No, gentlemen, our country has dept enough. Give us what we are justly entitled to in bounty and pensions, and I am satisfied.

In the above article, by the Corunna correspondent of the Waterloo Press, I am arrayed before the public, charged with the heinous crime of circulating a soldiers' petition for the equalization between the soldier and the bondholder. There is no man who holds a soldier in higher esteem than I do; but there are three characteristics of mankind which I have ever held in utter contempt, viz: A fool, a liar, and a coward. Now, I have been informed from good authority that the Corunna correspondent possessed so great a degree of cowardice when a soldier, that he would actually "bloat" at sight of the rebel army, and that he repeatedly begged roasted coffee of his comrades as a preventative, and when denied of this luxury he said he would have to eat "sand." Now, I want to say to this correspondent that nature mixed sand into my organization to stand before any gun of as high calibre as he is able to man. He also charges me with being a "stay-at-home ranger." I want to say to the public that I offered my services to the government at three different times during the war, and the government would not accept them on account of disability. We were informed that the correspondent has applied for a pension, but has not been successful from the fact that he has taken out a life insurance policy, recommending himself as a sound man. Mr. correspondent, this does not work well. ARDENT GREENBACKER.

Corunna, Feb. 23, 1880.

Curiosities of the Locomotive.

Our first-class narrow-gague engines weigh, empty, 44,000 pounds, and are worth 16 cents per pound. They will consume one cord of wood and 1,200 gallons of water per hour, of a pressure equal to that of the atmosphere. Their heating surface is of the extent of the bottom of a boiler 34 feet in diameter. The strain upon the iron of the shell of the boiler, to brust it open lengthwise of the boiler, is from 6,5000 to 11,500 pounds per square inch under ordinary pressures. There is also an additional strain of about 4,000 pounds per square inch exerted lengthwise of the boiler to pull it apart crosswise. The whole pressures exerted against all the internal surface of the boiler, amount to 20,000,000 of pounds or 10,000 tons! The crown sheet of furnace, alone, carries a load of 120 tons. The usual distance traveled by the locomotive, being in motion but about one eighth of the time, is equal to once around the globe every year.

In going 60 miles an hour, 88 feet are traversed per second, 5 revolutions of the driving wheels are made, requiring 20 strokes of the piston, and 50 intermediate periods of action of the valve, equal to the divison of a second into 40 parts.

There is not a state in the Union, with the exception of Iowa, that has as great a number of newspapers and publications in proportion to the population as has Indiana. There are now 412 newspapers and magazines printed, which is one to each 1,095 voters in the state. Of the political publications 190 are democratic and about an equal number republican. There is not a county in the state which has not a newspaper, but Scott has only one.

A FIVE-STORY iron-front building on Broadway, New York, burned last week. The losses to the occupants are approximated as follows: Hazen, Todd & Co., $400,000; Dickerhoff, Raffloer & Co., $250,000; James Wilde, Jr., & Co., $350,000. Two of the bravest and best-known members of the fire department lost their lives by the collapse of the roof on which they were standing, the unfortunate men falling into the very heart of the blazing building.

A serious railroad accident occurred on the Bellaire & Southwestern railroad, near Bellaire, Ohio, last week. A train consisting of a baggage-car, coal-car, and two coaches jumped from a trestle sixteen feet high, injuring a dozen passengers. Ex-Congressman Danford, of Ohio, one of the injured, has since died.

ELECTRIC-LIGHT EDISON said to a reporter the other day: "My experiments have been crowned with perfect success, and the commercial value of the electric light for illuminating either streets or dwellings is established beyond question." The difficulty at first experienced in the breaking of the lamps, caused by the expansion of the wires, it is said, has nearly, if not entirely, been overcome.

THE WEST.

A TRAIN-LOAD of negro emigrants from Mississippi arrived at Leavenworth, Kan., last week. They will settle on the line of the Kansas Pacific railroad....A terrible boiler explosion occurred last week at the distillery of Barton & Babcock, near Peoria, Ill. Seven men were injured, five of whom are dead, and one of the others cannot recover. Among the dead is Benjamin Babcock, one of the proprietors. The boiler, which was exploded, was torn to pieces, and the strong stone walls of the boiler-house were crumbled to pieces. Some of the men were literally roasted, the flesh hanging in shreds.

THE Illinois Press Association held its winter session in Chicago last week. There was quite a large attendance. President Snively, in his annual address, said that were it not for the increased price of print-paper he should be able to congratulate his brethren upon an increase of prosperity. The association voted a unanimous indorsement of the efforts now making in Congress to secure a reduction of tariff on paper and the admission free of duty of chemicals entering into its manufacture; and by a unanimous vote the association adopted a petition to Congress setting forth the embarrassment and loss inflicted upon publishers by the present high price of paper, and praying for relief from the burden by legislation which will be fair and equitable alike to the manufacturers and consumers of paper.—A canvass of the members of the association, as to their Presidential preferences, shows that among the Republicans Blaine is first, Grant second, and Washburne third choice; while among the Democrats, Tilden, Bayard and Seymour stand in the order named.

THE San Francisco Board of Health has pronounced the Chinese quarter of that city, known as Chinatown, a nuisance....The crop prospects of California are said to be excellent....A San Francisco manufacturer has been arrested on a State warrant on the charge of employing Chinamen. The case is made up to test the constitutionality of the act recently passed by the California Legislature, prohibiting corporations from employing Chinese.

THE quickest conviction on record has just been made at Kansas City, Mo. A pickpocket stole a pocketbook, ran into the arms of an officer, was arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment by a civic Justice, and placed in jail, in exactly twenty minutes' time.

GLUFCKE, Postmaster of Cheyenne, and editor of a local Republican newspaper, who has been making serious charges against Hoyt, Governor of Wyoming Territory, is discovered to be short in his accounts to the extent of $2,400. He has been removed from office.

THE Parnell meeting in Chicago was one of the largest popular assemblages ever witnessed in that city, and was as enthusiastic as the most ardent sympathizer with Ireland's woes could have desired. It is estimated that not less than 30,000 people were present. Hon. Shelby M. Cullom, Governor of Illinois, presided over the meeting, which was held in the Exposition building. Speeches were made by Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon, Gov. Cullom, Hon. Thomas Hoyne, Gen. J. C. Black, Mr. John Murdoch, a kilt-costumed son of Scotia, and letters of regret were read from many prominent statesmen and officials throughout the country.

JESSE JAMES, the notorious outlaw, is reported to have been seen in St. Louis, Mo., the other day....Sheriff Smith, of Greensburg, Ind., presented his 2-year-old child with a set of building blocks which were painted green, and the infant was in the habit of putting them in its mouth and licking the paint therefrom, which finally resulted in fatally poisoning the little one....The Union Pacific Railway Company will commence, this year, the construction of a broad gauge road to the Yellowstone park, with a branch to the Black Hills. Surveyors have left Omaha for Cheyenne to locate the line.

THE Chinese agitation has broken out afresh, and more violently than ever, on the Pacific coast, and serious trouble is anticipated.

THE SOUTH

TWO NEGRO murderers were executed at Murfreesboro, Tenn., the other day, a large crowd being present. After hanging seventeen minutes the bodies were cut down and delivered to a party of physicians, who hurriedly conveyed them to a neighboring house and attempted to resuscitate them. The electricity and other agencies employed were of no avail, however, the neck-breaking machine having done its work faithfully and well.

WASHINGTON.

CONSTANTINE BRUMIDI, the Italian artist, who for many years has been engaged in decorating the interior of the Capitol with fresco painting, died in Washington, last week, of asthma....A Washington dispatch states that the "Ways and Means Committee has not yet taken any action on the Fort Paper bill. Col. Fort, however, has had an interview with Wood, the Chairman, and the latter has indicated that he would probably not appoint a sub-committee on the subject, but would fix a time when he would hear the different interests. It is not probable that the hearing will be fixed for two or three weeks. Meanwhile Col. Fort is receiving a great many letters from Eastern and Western publishers urging the passage of the bill, and some of them suggesting that additional chemicals be placed upon the list. Indeed, the sentiment in favor of making the changes in the tariff even more radical that Fort's bill suggests are increasing. Petitions are now beginning to arrive daily in behalf of this measure."

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch states that "the Republican members of the State Legislature, having been arraigned before the bar of the House for contempt in signing and forwarding to the Senate of the United States a memorial favoring Senator Kellogg, and reciting intimidation, fraud, etc., on the part of the Democrats generally, purged themselves of contempt by saying that they signed the paper without reading it. It is now demanded that the offensive memorial be formally withdrawn from the United States Senate."

A CONFERENCE between the members of the Republican State Central Committee of Illinois and active Republicans of the State was held at Chicago, Feb. 25. There was a free and open discussion and a general interchange of opinions. Very little talk was indulged in about State politics, the interest of all the members of the gathering seeming to center on the forthcoming national contest. Nearly every one told what he thought, and what his district thought, of Grant, Blaine, Washburne, Sherman et al. The sentiment seemed to be decidedly favorable to the candidacy of Grant, though Blaine and Washburne had a good many friends in the conference.—After the adjournment of the general gathering, the State Central Committee held a meeting and decided upon May 19 as the time and Springfield the place for the meeting of the Republican State Convention....The Republicans of Vermont, in convention last week, elected delegates to Chicago, and adopted a resolution naming Senator Edmunds as a suitable person to be nominated for the Presidency....A call has been issued for a State Convention of the National Greenback party of Michigan. The substance can only have been placed in the vaults with the complicity of persons employed in subordinate capacities at the Winter Palace. The train was fired at the hour appointed with the aid of electric wires, which were cut after the explosion, and were found in fragments at some distance from the dining-room. Several officials are under surveillance. Many arrests have been made, but the police are not yet on the track of the assassins. The Emperor is said to be much affected, and the rumors of his abdication are again passing from mouth to mouth.

Hannay's process will soon be announced to the Royal Society.

They regard the offense as purely political....The dynamite exploded in the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg was contained in a metal box, the cover of which has been found, but no electric wire or trace of a battery can be obtained. All of the workmen who occupied the cellar of the palace previous to the explosion have been found. Their innocence appears certain....Distressing accounts come from the interior of Russia of the ravages of famine and diphtheria. The people are dying at a frightful rate. Many are committing suicide and selling their children....In a six-days' pedestrian match, at London, "Blower" Brown scored 553 miles; Hazael, [illegible]; Day, 456. GOURKO, Governor General of St. Petersburg; Gen. Drentein, Chief of the Imperial police, and Gen. Zouroff, Prefect of the Police of St. Petersburg, have received notices from the Nihilist committee informing them that they need not trouble themselves to make arrangements for an illumination on the occasion of the Czar's anniversary, as the revolutionists are preparing for such an illumination as has not been seen since Nero burned Rome!

Numerous explosions of a minor character, fires and outrages are frequent throughout the city. It is rumored that the Czar will close the University of St. Petersburg. Afterward, the discussion of the rules occupied the day.

On the 20th inst., in the United States Senate, the following bills were passed: Providing for the delivery of dutiable articles in the mails, and for indemnity for lost registered articles; to repeal the provisions of the Revised statutes authorizing the advancement of navy officers thirty numbers in rank for extraordinary heroism; The bill to authorize the President to appoint Sergt. The bill to authorize the compilation and printing of the naval history of the war was passed. Mr. Logan made a set speech upon the Five per Cent. bill, after which the Senate went into executive session. Trowbridge, of Michigan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Adjourned to Monday......In the House, a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to the amount of land subsidy granted the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company: the disposition made of those lands, and why the said road has not been completed to a junction with the Union Pacific railroad at Kearney, Nebraska. The Senate joint resolution was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to designate a vessel of the United States to carry, free of charge, contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland. A report from the Appropriations Committee in regard to "star" postal routes was received, ordered printed and recommitted. A message from the President in reference to the Marshals' Deficiency bill was read and referred. It requests immediate action upon that bill. After a personal explanation by the Speaker and Mr. Reagan in regard to the defeat of the Inter-State Commerce bill in committee, the House went into committee of the whole upon the rules.

After the expiration of the morning hour in the Senate, Feb. 25, discussion was resumed upon the Five per Cent. bill, and continued through the entire day. The bill was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 28 to 21, and a motion made to reconsider, the object being to kill it effectually, when Mr. Logan, having the floor, announced that he was not through with his remarks. He would prefer to continue in the daytime, but if the Senate desired to stay here and listen to him to-night he would send for books and papers, and thought he could entertain them for about six hours, "and my friend Edmunds for the balance of the night, probably." The majority finally consented to an adjournment, leaving the motion for reconsideration still pending. The President nominated Henry Sterns, of Indiana, United States Consul at Perth....In the House, Mr. Blount, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the "Star Service" Deficiency bill, and it was referred to the committee of the whole. Memorials were presented for the repeal of the duty on paper and type, and praying for a law to prevent the adulteration of food, and a bill was reported for the latter purpose. Mr. Bicknell, Chairman of the Committee on Presidential Election, reported back the joint resolution amending the Constitution as to the election of President and Vice President. The report prescribes that "the electoral votes and fractions thereof of each person voted for as President in any State shall be ascertained by multiplying his entire popular vote therein by the number of the State's electoral vote, and divide the product by the sum of all the votes cast in the State, and the quotient will be the required number. When the returns have been sent to the President of the Senate they shall be counted by that officer, in the presence of both houses sitting in the Hall of Representatives, and it shall require the concurrence of both houses to reject." A long discussion upon the "star" mail service ensued in committee of the whole. Mr. Garland moved an amendment to a political disability bill striking out the clause upon the subject in the Revised Statutes, which called out considerable bitter political discussion, which was stopped by an adjournment.

THE DEMOCRACY.

They Decide, Through Their National Committee, Upon Cincinnati as the Place, and June 22 as the Time, for the Assembly of the National Convention.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 23.

The National Democratic Committee assembled in Willard's Hall at 12 o'clock to-day to select the place and appoint the time for holding the National Democratic Convention. Considerable discussion ensued as to the time to be allowed persons presenting the claims of the respective cities for the place of holding the convention, and it was finally agreed to allow twenty minutes, to be divided among three representatives of each of the delegations, to present their claims.

The roll was then called for the purpose of ascertaining the number of cities desirous of presenting claims for the holding of the convention. W. C. Goudy, of Illinois, named Chicago; Outerbridge Horsey, of Maryland, Baltimore; John G. Priest, of Missouri, St. Louis; John G. Thompson, of Ohio, Cincinnati; W. T. Scott, of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia; Austin H. Brown, of Indiana, Washington, D. C., and the representatives of Oregon, Eugene City, Ore.

At 1:45 p. m. a recess was taken until half-past 2. In submitting resolutions for the date of holding the convention, McHenry, of Kentucky, moved to fix the date at Tuesday, June 22. Mr. Priest, of Missouri, moved to amend by inserting Wednesday, June 16. Lost. Mr. Eaton, of Kansas, moved to amend by inserting the third Tuesday in May. Lost. The amendments being both rejected, the original resolution of McHenry was agreed to.

The following proxies were present, viz.: Mississippi, A. B. Hart; California, Senator Farley; Nevada, J. W. McCorkle; Colorado, Hugh Butler; Virginia, John T. Lovell; Wisconsin, Representative E. S. Bragg; and Texas, Representative Columbus Upson.

The Chair announced the next business in order to be the hearing of representatives of the several delegations who desired to present their views as to the proper place for holding the convention.

M. W. Fuller, of Illinois, spoke for Chicago; Col. Joseph Dorsey, of Maryland, presented the claims of Baltimore; ex-Mayor Brown, of St. Louis, pleaded for the "Future Great;" ex-Congressman Sayler, of Ohio, argued in favor of Cincinnati; William L. Scott, of Pennsylvania, aired the claims of Philadelphia; while Stetson Hutchins dilated upon the advantages of Washington. The claims of all the contesting cities having been presented, the committee proceeded to take an informal ballot, as follows: Cincinnati 14, Chicago 10, St. Louis 4, Washington 4, Baltimore 2, Philadelphia 1, Jackson (Miss.) 1, Eugene City (Ore.) 1, blank 1; total, 38. The formal ballot was then taken, with the following result: Cincinnati 24, Chicago 8, St. Louis 4, Washington 1, blank 1; total, 38. Twenty votes being necessary for a choice, Cincinnati was selected.

New York Republican State Convention.

The New York Republican State Convention met at Utica Feb. 25. Charles E. Smith, of Albany, was made temporary, and afterward elected permanent, President. The Committee on Resolutions, through E. W. Stoughton, reported a long preamble and resolution indorsing Grant as a Presidential candidate, closing as follows:

"We also declare that the objection to a third Presidential term applies only to a third consecutive term, and is utterly inapplicable to the re-election of Gen. Grant, who is and has been a private citizen absent from the country, destitute of all Presidential or official influence or patronage, and whose election must be by the free choice of the people, unaided by those influences which alone give force, if any there be, to that objection. Therefore, Resolved, That the Republicans of New York believe the renomination of Ulysses S. Grant as Presidential candidate of urgent importance, and the delegates this day assembled are called upon and instructed to use their most earnest and united efforts to secure his nomination."

At the close of the reading there was long-continued applause and hisses. Mr. Forster moved to amend that portion of the resolutions pledging the State to Grant by substituting the name of James G. Blaine. [Applause, long continued.] That portion of the resolution referring to a third term he moved to strike out. A delegate moved to strike out the name of Blaine and leave the delegation unpledged. Mr. Forster accepted the amendment. The question was put on Mr. Forster's amendment. Mr. Conkling rose and was greeted with prolonged applause and cries of "Platform," but he kept his place on the floor and addressed the convention. At the conclusion of his speech the question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Forster's motion to amend the resolutions by declaring in favor of the nominee of the Chicago Convention, whoever he may be, and resulted in the negative—yeas, 180; nays, 217. The resolutions were then adopted. A delegate moved that in case Grant is not nominated at Chicago the delegation be instructed to vote as a unit for James G. Blaine. Mr. Conkling moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried. The following delegates-at-large were selected: Roscoe Conkling, Alonzo B. Cornell, Chester A. Arthur, James D. Warren. The following are among the delegates: Edwards Pierrepont, Edwin W. Stoughton, Thomas Murphy, G. H. Sharpe and John F. Smyth.

SENATE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Synopsis of the Testimony Elicited by the Voorhees Committee.

A. B. Maynard, editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel, corroborated the statement of previous witnesses in regard to the destitute condition of emigrants who had reached Indiana, their desire to return to North Carolina, their assertions that they had been deceived by Perry, and the absence of any demand for their labor in Indiana.

P. B. McCoskey, of Terre Haute, Ind., a Republican, testified to the surplus of laborers and mechanics in his section of the State. He swore that colored Mail Agent Walker, in conversation with him at Terre Haute, said that at a colored convention held at Nashville last autumn, he (Walker) had made arrangements to run 10,000 colored voters into Indiana to carry the State for the Republicans.

A Game Old Lady.

"Are you fond of game?" asked Belinda's husband, sticking his fork into the canvas back. Mrs. Goodington did not answer for a moment. It was clear that the query had called up recollections of the past. Looking up with a smile perambulating around the ruts Old Time had worn in her kindly face, she said, "When Daniel was alive, we used to have a good rubber of whist now and then; but as for your new-fangled games, such as eureka, cabbage, and physique, I'm too old to learn any of them. But don't mind me, Theodore; if the young folks want to play, let them. I would be the last to interfere with any of their harmless recriminations."

HANK BROWN gave a supper in jail, at Moberly, Mo., to celebrate his conviction and death sentence for murder.

AN UNHAPPY EMPEROR.

The Czar of Russia and His Nihilist Foes.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown;" and the uneasiest head in Europe must be that of the Czar. Within a few years past five attempts have been made to take his life, three of them within the past six months. In 1866 a Russian named Dimitri Karakasoff attempted to shoot him in St. Petersburg, but was foiled by a peasant, who was ennobled as a reward for his valor. This was a year after the Czar had rejected the demand of the old Moscow nobility for a representative form of government. A second attempt was made upon his life in 1867, while he was attending a review in the Bois de Boulogne, during the Paris Exhibition, by a Pole named Berezowski. This had nothing to do with the demand for the change of government which he had refused, but grew out of the Polish persecutions. Since those days the desire for popular representation in the Government has spread through all ranks of society, and its most public manifestation has been in the form of Nihilism. To this secret and powerful organization must be charged the last three attempts upon his life. The first of these was in the early part of last fall, when a Nihilist conspirator shot at him as he was walking unattended in the gardens of the palace. His escape from death was almost miraculous. With the failure of this attempt the conspirators seem to have abandoned shooting and adopted explosion as the agency with which to effect their violent purposes. In December last, as the Czar was traveling from Livadia to Moscow, the railroad was undermined near the latter city. The conspirators, however, made a mistake in the time and blew up the imperial baggage train instead of the passenger train on which he was riding, and which had passed over the spot only a short time previously. The wreck was a complete one, and, had not the mistake of which we have spoken occurred, Russia would now have been without Alexander II. for its Czar. As illustrating the absolute secrecy with which the Nihilists work, an incident which happened on the following day is in point. The Czar attended the theater in Moscow that evening, and, as he was to remain but a short time, his valet entered the box with him, carrying his overcoat on his arm. Apparently no person had been near the Czar or the valet while entering the theater or while occupying the box, and yet when the Czar turned to go out and put on his coat he found in the pockets a letter from the Executive Committee of the Nihilists, notifying him that, though they had failed to blow him up the day before, they would speedily renew the attempt, the next time nearer home, and, if they failed again, they would persevere until they succeeded. The attempt was made again on the 16th of February, a mine having been exploded under the guard-room of the Winter Palace, which is immediately under the dining-room, at the usual hour of dining. By some accidental delay the royal party did not arrive at their customary time, and so the loss of life was confined to soldiers on duty, five of whom were killed and thirty-five wounded. The explosion was a success, and sufficiently destructive in its results to have slaughtered the Czar and all his family, but, as in the case of the railroad attempt, providentially they were elsewhere.

It is evident that such an attempt could not have been made without the complicity of some of the attendants upon the royal household, and it confirms the rumors which have been in circulation of late that Nihilism has a foothold in court, and that the Czar knows not whom to trust in his court, in his army, or among his police—not to mention its hold upon the universities, the professions and the commercial classes, as well as the lower ranks of the people. The persistence with which it carries out its designs shows deep-seated grievances. There are many of these causes at work, such as financial distress, great suffering among the agricultural classes, the harsh treatment of political prisoners, the rigors of cruel laws, and religious intolerance of the most brutal character; but the one crowning grievance of the people of Russia is the despotic military power of the autocrat who rules them. During the past few years, what was at first dissatisfaction has grown into a widespread and almost-universal determination to oppose it with the demand for a constitutional form of government and popular representation. They have given up without complaint thousands of lives and millions of money to secure these reforms for Bulgarians, Roumelians and other people in the Danubian principalities, and now they demand them with good reason for themselves. It matters little to them whether they are ready for the change or not. They are bound that the experiment shall be inaugurated—for any change is better than the oppression under which they are suffering—and we may look for repetitions of these conspiracies until either their demands are secured or the Czar is removed, either by secret assassination or open revolution. His only hope of safety lies either in granting the demand or resigning the throne to the Czarowitz, who is more liberal in his views, and, it is understood, is not averse to the new political scheme. In one of their recent manifestoes, the Nihilist Executive Committee said: "If Alexander II. would recognize what a dreadful calamity he is inflicting on Russia, how unjust and criminal is the oppression he creates, and, renouncing his authority, would transfer to such an Assembly freely elected by universal suffrage and provided with instructions by its electors, then only would we leave Alexander II. in peace and forgive him all his offenses." This is the ultimatum, and if it is not granted it is only a question of very brief time how soon we shall again chronicle the work of the assassins.

WHILE the Maine Legislature was debating the bill for the abolition of capital punishment, an amendment was proposed that previously to the hanging of a criminal, chloroform be administered to him. This was vehemently opposed "because it was dangerous to life," and finally rejected.

Deafness in Children.

The ear is subject to affections that impair its functions at the earliest period of life; indeed, it is frequently found to be defective at birth. Children are exposed to influences from which they seldom entirely escape without more or less aural disease. Such are the consequences of colds, which, when of long continuance, are productive of enlarged tonsils, chronic catarrh of the mouth, throat and nose, the resulting sympathetic deafness in some instances being so great that instruction is impossible, and the child is unable to learn to talk. It is then a deaf mute.

The fact should not be lost sight of that at this early period of existence the function of hearing is crude, and requires gradual cultivation for its development, and that any deafness should be promptly met. Thus the hearing of children ought to be often tested, and, although accurate results may be difficult of obtainment, the knowledge gained is advantageous.

Should an infant escape all other causes of aural disease, it encounters at the seventh month a physiological process in development that is frequently the source of great irritation in the mouth, and of sympathetic irritation in the ears. I refer to the cutting of the teeth, which usually begins at this age. That this period is fraught with special danger to the organ of hearing is well recognized by both mothers and nurses, who have long considered teething as in some way connected with earache. Every one of the first twenty teeth in perforating the gum is liable to be thus heralded. Fortunate, therefore, is the infant who has passed its second year, the period at which first dentition is concluded, without having experienced aural irritation.

These first teeth, however, are subject to premature decay, as well as a natural absorption of their roots, before the sixth year, at which time the second dentition begins. From this cause sympathetic aural troubles often arise, and frequently continue while the second teeth are cutting.

About the sixth year, as stated, the second or permanent teeth begin to make their appearance, and at the thirteenth year they have all been cut, with the exception of the wisdom-teeth. These second teeth are promoters of even more disturbance in the ears than the first; the ear-aches and discharges are more persistent, the complications in general more grave. Subsequent to this period there is a cessation of dental irritation, although established discharges from the ear are liable to continue on indefinitely.

The foregoing remarks will serve to draw attention to the liability existing in youth to frequently-recurring attacks of earache, each one of which leaves the conductive mechanism in a worse condition than before, repeated invasions finally leaving behind irreparable injury. In these cases, even when comparatively unimportant as respects pain, competent advice cannot be too early obtained, for the longer they are neglected the less amenable to treatment they become.

Certain diseases of childhood very frequently affect the ears; such are scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, cerebro-spinal meningitis, whooping-cough and mumps. During the attacks of these diseases, and even when convalescence has been established, although earache may be absent, occasional examinations of the ear should be made, in order that, if affected, they may receive early attention. Deafness is usually an early symptom of most aural affections; but, on the contrary, in some instances very considerable impairment of the drum cavity and its contained mechanism exists without any perceptible impairment of the hearing.

It is believed that a very small percentage of the adult population possess normal hearing, which fact greatly depends on the neglect in childhood to which allusion has above been made.—Dr. Samuel Sexton, in Harper's Magazine.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

THE Supreme Court of California has given an opinion that a woman cannot be expluded from the law department of a law college simply because she is a woman, if she is otherwise qualified.

WHEN Congressman Crittenden draws his pay, with his 10 per cent. of silver, he leaves it in the treasury as a deposit. A Washington letter says that he has several hundred dollars there, and that he intends to let it accumulate until the pile is as big as a wheelbarrow load, when he declares that he will wheel it into the House of Representatives, to show what a nuisance silver money is.

THE Postmaster-General has entered upon the work of stopping the use of the mails for the perpetuation of swindles by an order prohibiting the delivery by Postmasters of letters to specified fraudulent lottery concerns and other confidence cheats at Louisville, New Orleans, and elsewhere. He has also ordered that all persons receiving mail under fictitious addresses must first be identified at the postoffice.

A WASHINGTON correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial claims to have discovered some of the men whom Mr. Tilden was going to put into his Cabinet if the decision of the Electoral Commission had been favorable to his claims. Frank Hurd, of Ohio, was to have been Secretary of State; Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, Secretary of the Treasury, and Andrew C. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of War.

THE Supreme Court of Indiana decides that the legal name of a person consists of one Christian name and a surname. Any one may have as many middle names, or initials, as are given to him or as he chooses to take. They do not affect his legal name and may be inserted or not in deed or contract without affecting its validity. Nor does a mistake in the middle initial of a name, in a deed, in any way affect its validity.

DURING the eight years, from 1871 to 1878 inclusive, there arrived in this country, from Great Britain and Ireland, 743,303 immigrants, Ireland alone contributing 332,139 of this number. The rest of Europe furnished 974,365—580,129 coming from Germany. From Asia there came 106,743, chiefly from China; from Africa, 306; from South America, 254,072; from the Pacific islands, 9,468; from other places, 9,194; making an aggregate of 2,100,451 persons.

THE Denver Tribune boasts of Colorado's fine horses, handsome women, charming girls, well-dressed men, fat babies, long-legged dogs, busy mechanics, industrious Chinamen, modest dressmakers, romping boys, inquiring strangers, expert printers, well-paid doctors, praying preachers, colored calciminers, express wagons, over-paid lawyers, attentive railroad men, honest bankers, piles of brick, new buildings, pleased visitors, signs of growth and genuine American get-up-and-get.

A MAN living near Prattsburg, Steuben county, N. Y., went up the mountain to cut trees for wood and slide them down a log-way to the valley below. The foot of the slide was thirty rods distant from the house. He started a maple tree down the mountain, when it jumped out of the shute, and, taking a diagonal course, struck the house and shattered it to splinters, killing one boy 8 years old and injuring two others so that they will probably die. The father saw from the top of the mountain the course the tree was taking, and saw his dwelling demolished.

CURLEY, a noted highwayman of the Deadwood region, was arrested by two officers, who had to journey forty miles to take him to jail. All rode on horseback, the prisoner between his captors. The possibility of escape was discussed on the way, Curley maintaining that he could put spurs to his horse and get away because his beast was the freshest of the three, and the officers arguing that he could be riddled with bullets before he got out of range. Suddenly Curley put his plan into execution, dashing off at full speed, but the officers' theory proved sound, for they easily killed him with their pistols.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S health, which has been considered precarious for many months, is now fully restored, and he is mostly engaged in literary labors. His work at present is the preparation of an autobiography, which will be completed during the coming summer. He is severe upon the Governmental and social systems of his country and has no love for the present British statesmen. He declares that England is rapidly retrograding, considered from a political, governmental, social and educational point; that England to-day has no statesmen of commanding intellect or power, but is ruled by demagogues and political quacks. He predicts that America will be the future power if she keeps herself free from entangling alliances and from the humbuggery of agitating foreign mountebanks.

ELIAS SCOTT, of Texas, and Charles Peck, of Louisiana, bosom friends, went to Brazil to see the country and stopped for several weeks in Rio de Janeiro. They were young men of means and education, traveling that they might learn the ways of the world. Scott gossiped with other American friends about Peck's New Orleans sweetheart, saying uncomplimentary things. This talk reached Peck's ears and he at once challenged Scott to fight a duel. The challenge was accepted. The principals met in a suburb of Rio, Winchester rifles being the weapons, and the distance being 100 yards. At a signal of three pistol-shots in the air both guns were discharged. Scott, crying "I'm killed," fell, with a bullet in a vital part. He lived long enough to request that $2,000 in money on his person be sent to his brother, James R. Scott, in Missouri. Peck fled and, having concealed himself for several days, sailed on a ship bound for the Pacific.

THE Washington House, at Mount Vernon, has been repaired and refurnished, and in a way that does not please a woman correspondent of the Springfield Republican. She says: "It is such a pity—such a sad and woful pity—that the women who have this place in charge have so little common sense, so little taste and real veneration for the home of Washington. The different rooms belong to different States that have appropriated them, and a vandal committee have undertaken to restore and furnish them. The east parlor, or music room, treated by Ohio, leads the ignominious procession. It has, at the first glance, an Ohio look; it is so new, so fresh, so shoddy. They've painted the walls and ceiling; they've laid Turkish rugs on the floor; they've made new furniture, that has the pattern but not the look of anything old; they've hung in it an abominable mirror, with a beveled glass border, ornamented with a cut-flower design, and the only thing in it is the harpsichord of Nelly Custis." New York does not come in for a share of the censure, however, for the drawing-room, in charge of this State, has been but slightly altered, most of the original furniture remaining.

The Woods in Winter.

No one ever sees the full charm of the forest who turns his back upon it in winter. Look at the exquisite lines of that drooping birch, the intricate interlacing tracery of the minute branching twigs! Could anything be more graceful or more chaste? could any covering of leaves enhance its beauty? And so the apple tree by the old stone wall—how different its various angles! how individual in its character! how beautiful its silhouette against the sky! Thus every separate tree will afford a perfect study, of infinite design. See that mottled beech trunk yonder. What! never noticed it before? That was because its drooping, leaf-clad branches concealed its beauty; but now not only does it emerge from its wonted obscurity, but the whiteness of the snowy ground beyond gives added value to every subtle tint upon its dappled surface. Step nearer. With what variety of exquisite tender grays has nature painted the clean smooth bark! See those marbled variegations, each spot with a distinct tint of its own, and each tint composed of a multitude of microscopic points of color. Here we see a fimbriated blotch of dark olive moss, spreading its intertwining rootlets in all directions, and further up a spongy tuft of rich brown lichen tipped with snow. Who could pass by unnoticed such a refined and exquisite bit of painting as this? And yet they abound on every side. See the shingly shagbark, with its mottlings of pale-green lichen and orange spots, its jagged outline so perfectly relieved against the snow, and, beyond, that group of rock-maples, with its bold contrasts of deep-green moss, and striped tints of most varied shades, from lightest drab to deepest brown. And there is the yellow birch with its tight-wound bark, fringed with ravelings of buff-colored satin. Here we come upon a clump of chestnuts, their cool trunks set off in bold relief against a background of dark hemlocks, whose outer branches, clothed in snow, like tufted mittens, hang low upon the ground.—Harper's Magazine.

Progress at Jerusalem.

The fact that a steam engine is being erected in a flour-mill in Jerusalem is a startling announcement, but it is an evidence of the progress of civilization. The "infidels" who have thus introduced modern inventions to the "Holy" city are a firm of Wurtemburg colonists, who, with the characteristic enterprise of the Teutonic race, are doing all the Oriental powers will let them to make the historic and Old World city march with the times.—English Journal.

THE Kentucky House of Representatives has passed a bill making it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not less than $20, nor more than $50, for any person to use abusive or insulting language to another with intent to cause a breach of the peace.

FARM NOTES.

IT is announced that the leaves of the elder strewed among grain will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil; the juice will also kill maggots. The leaves scattered over cabbages, cucumbers and other plants subject to weevil ravages effectually shield them.

BARLEY FOR YOUNG LAMBS.—Reverting again to the subject of barley, it may be as well to mention that, good and wholesome as we have found it to be for ewes and grown sheep, it is a very dangerous food for young lambs. It affects them with a scour which very often ends fatally.—Agricultural Gazette (England).

SWINE that are fattening will do better with soaked corn than with dry. Corn steeped in water twelve hours has been found more economical to feed than when ground into meal. The animals are sooner filled, the food digests better, and, consequently, the feeding is finished more expeditiously, and feed—which is money—is saved.

THE LAWN.—A young hedge of Osage orange or honey locust should not be cut until it is 2 or 3 years old; not, indeed, until the shoots are one, or even two inches thick. Then they should be cut even with the earth in the winter time, and the following year they will throw up a luxurious mass of sprouts, which may be trimmed into shape the next June, and before fall we have a complete, impenetrable fence.

MANAGEMENT OF MANURE.—The barnyard is the field for winter work. Much may be done here by skillful management. Manure so long as it is frozen, remains unchanged, and the preparation of the manure, in the best manner for use in the spring, makes no progress. Make a central heap in the yard, and, by means of a few planks and a wheelbarrow move, the manure from the stable each day to this heap. If the heap is built up square, and made four feet high, it will keep warm in the coldest of weather and while warm it will ferment and rot.

THE question arises: "Is there any connection between the tiresome and unvarying drudgery of the life of a farmer's wife and the meaningless jabber of an insane asylum?" for it is well known that farmers' wives form no small proportion of the unfortunates found in insane asylums. It is certainly fair to presume that the question should be answered in the affirmative, for endless monotony will wear the fiber of any mind and cause aberration, or else react on the body and create disease, and such a result is all the more likely if overwork be added to monotony and drudgery.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

SOWING OATS AND WHEAT TOGETHER.—The experiment has been tried in Iowa, it is said, of sowing in the fall, upon one acre of land, two bushel of wheat mixed with one bushel of oats. The oats shot up rapidly, and were, of course, killed down by the frost. But they furnished a warm covering for the earth, and when the snow fell among the thick stalks and leaves they kept it from blowing away. This covering prevented the winter-killing of the wheat, and the rotting oat leaves and stalks afforded a rich top-dressing for the crop the following spring. The result was an abundant yield of wheat, while land precisely similar alongside, and treated in the same manner, with the exception of omitting the oats, was utterly worthless.—True Citizen.

AGE OF COWS IN RELATION TO THE YIELD OF MILK.—The age of cows has a great influence on their yield of milk. After her first calf, a cow does not give as much as after her second or third. At the fifth or sixth calf, the average yield begins to decrease steadily. It may be seen from this that one ought only exceptionally to have older cows than 8 or 9 years, as after these years the milking qualities are generally on a rapid decline, and, beside, the cows are harder to fatten. As young animals produce more from the same quantity of food because their assimilation is better, there is every reason for not keeping the cows too long. A good dairy cow is (on the continent) expected to yield not less than 2,000 quarts of milk a year; a very good one, 2,300 to 2,500 quarts; but higher numbers are not rare in almost all breeds.—Agricultural Gazette.

HOW TO EXTEMPORIZE RADISHES.—Radishes may be grown in a very few days by the following method: Let some good radish seed soak in water for twenty-four hours, then put in a bag and expose it to the sun. In the course of the day germination will commence. The seed must be sown in a well-manured hotbed, and watered from time to time with lukewarm water. By this treatment the radishes will in a very short time acquire a sufficient bulk and be good to eat. If it be required to get good radishes in winter during the severe cold, an old cask should be sawn in two, and one-half of it filled with good earth. The radish seed beginning to shoot as before must be then sown in, the other half of the barrel put on top of the full one, and the whole of the apparatus carried down into the cellar. For watering, lukewarm water should be used as before. In the course of five or six days the radishes will be fit to eat.—New England Farmer.

Seeing Through Water.

Currents in the very bed of a river, or beneath the surface of the sea, may be watched, as Mr. Campbell informs us, by an arrangement that smugglers used in the old days. They sank their contraband cargo when there was an alarm, and they searched for it again by means of a so-called marine telescope. It was nothing more than a cask, with a plate of strong glass at the bottom. The man plunged the closed end a few inches below the surface, and put his head in the other end, and then he saw clearly into the water. The glare and confused reflections and refractions from and through the rippled surface of the sea were entirely shut out by this contrivance. Seal hunters still use it. With this simple apparatus the stirring life of the sea bottom can be watched at leisure and with great distinctness. So far as this contrivance enables men to see the land under the waves, movements under water closely resemble movements under air. Sea weeds, like plants, bend before the gale; fish, like birds, keep their heads to the stream, and hang poised on their fins; mud clouds take the shape of water clouds in air, impede light, cast shadows, and takes shapes which point out the direction in which currents flow. It is strange, at first, to hang over a boat's side, peering into a new world, and the interest grows. There is excitement in watching big fish swoop like hawks out of their seaweed forest after a white fly sunk to the tree tops to tempt them; and the flight which follows is better fun when plainly seen. Mr. Campbell suggests plate-glass windows in the bottom of a boat; it would bring men and fish face to face, and the habits of the latter could be leisurely watched.—Edinburgh Review.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

MUTTON CHOPS.—Sprinkle with vinegar, pepper and salt, dip them in egg, sprinkle with cracker or bread crumbs, and fry.

SMOKED SALMON A LA FRANCAIS.—Take some slices of smoked salmon and fry them in boiling sweet oil or fresh butter, then serve a la Maitre d'Hotel.

SOUP A LA CHANTILLY.—Make a puree of green peas, or dried peas, toast bread cut into small pieces, and then fry. When cooked pour into soup and serve.

SOUP A LA CONDE.—Boil some red beans, season with salt, and add two or three onions. Pass all through a colendar, and butter to taste, and before serving add small pieces of fried toast.

SOUPS MAIGRES, MADE OF POTATOES.—For six persons, boil six good-sized potatoes; when they are cooked pass them through a sieve; put the potatoes in a casserole, with two pints of milk, a spoonful of butter, and let it boil; salt it to taste; keep stirring it frequently.

SOUP A LA L'OIGNAN—ONION SOUP.—Take six onions; let them brown slightly in a casserole, with a tablespoonful of butter; add three potatoes sliced, pepper and salt, not too much, and let it all cook in two pints of water for an hour and a half; must cook slowly.

TO PAPER WHITEWASHED WALLS.—Make flour starch, as you would for starching calicoes, and apply it to the wall with a whitewash brush. Let it become dry; then, when ready to put on the paper, again go over the wall with the starch, also the paper, and apply. Walls may be papered in this way which have been whitewashed for years in succession. Alum is one of the best additions to whitewash to prevent its rubbing off. Smoky walls may be improved by adding plenty of indigo to the water before mixing in the lime and other ingredients.

HOW TO MAKE TOAST.—Comparatively few know what really good toast is. A hasty singe of one or both sides does not make toast, nor do thin slices of bread dried through. Cut slices of uniform thickness, a plump half-inch or five-eighths of an inch; move around over a brisk fire, to have all parts toasted alike; keep only so near the coals that the pieces will be heated through when both sides are well browned. If the slightest point is blackened or charred, scrape it off, or it will spoil the flavor of the whole. If covered with an earthen bowl it will keep warm and moist. A clean towel or napkin will answer if it [illegible] But nobody can make good toast out of poor bread. Stale bread may be used for milk toast; sour bread may be improved by toasting it through; heavy bread makes poor toast. Sweet, light bread, only a day old, or less, makes the best toast.

AIRING BEDS.—The German usage of eider-down coverlets is not recommended. Though warm and light, "it is insidious in its action," says a leading authority, "and in case of invalids should be watched, for it is apt to throw the sleeper into a violent perspiration." It would seem almost unnecessary to advise the airing of beds, as all good housewives are supposed to have it done; still, as it is something which depends entirely upon servants, it is safe to say that this, the most important point in regard to health, is often neglected. No one ever possibly would think of washing his face in the same water twice, unless there was no more water, but it is quite as disgusting, and much worse for health, for a person to sleep twice in a bed which has been fully imbued with the effluvia of his body. Air and light are the great purifiers, and the work in a bed-chamber is worse than neglected when beds, pillows, coverings and mattresses are not thoroughly aired.

Preferring Another.

A truly great man is not envious of the fame of another great man; a small man is. "I felt on his death," wrote Jefferson of Washington, "that 'verily a great man hath fallen this day in Israel.'"

While Mr. Jefferson was riding, one starry night, with a member of his family, the conversation fell upon Washington. He warmly expressed his admiration for the great man. Pointing to the stars, he exclaimed:

"Washington's fame will go on increasing until the brightest constellation in yonder heavens shall be called by his name!"

A bust of Washington stood in the hall at Monticello, many years after Jefferson's retirement from public life. Some warm admirer of his, living in France, sent a wreath of immortelles to a member of the family at Monticello; with it came a request that it might be placed around Mr. Jefferson's brow on his birthday. The day came, and the relative, informing the venerable man of the request, attempted to crown him with the wreath.

"Place it on Washington's bust," he said, raising his hand to prevent the crowning. It was placed on the bust, where it rested for many years.

"In honor preferring one another," wrote a great man, whose nobility of character was such that he esteemed others better than himself.

OLEOMARGARINE.

What It Is—A Matter of Interest to the Public.

We have received from R. P. McGlincy, of Elgin, Ill., Secretary of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association, a copy of the report of the Committee on Oleomargarine, which was submitted to the association at its last meeting. People who have labored under the impression that oleomargarine is a harmless sort of food will find the following extracts from this report mighty interesting reading:

Oleomargarine, as now manufactured, is hardly more than the product of refuse fats agitated with buttermilk or milk and annatto to give it color and flavor. Such fats were formerly used for soap grease, and the use of such fats in the production of oleomargarine is carried on to such an extent as greatly to enhance the market value of grease.

Is oleomargarine as now manufactured in this country a healthful article of food? Your committee would say that Prof. John Michels, a competent microscopist of New York, has been subjecting oleomargarine to a thorough examination by the microscope, and he calls attention to the fact that germs of disease, morbid secretions and embryos of parasites in the animals from which the oil is obtained that is used in making oleomargarine, are liable to be transferred in a living condition into the system of those who use this article for food.

In the light of these statements, our answer is that oleomargarine as now manufactured in this country is not heathful as an article of food.

Is the sale of oleomargarine as an article of food legitimate and right? To what has already been said your committee would add the further testimony of J. H. Reall that "if people who bought it knew of what it was composed and the dirty places in which it is manufactured, they would not eat it. It is manufactured in some places where no gentleman would stay ten minutes because of the smells that [illegible] the atmosphere. [illegible] atmosphere it would be impossible to make butter from the milk of a Jersey cow that would be considered fit to eat. Our answer is that oleomargarine manufactured in such places or from the refuse fat of animals is unfit for food, and that the sale of it for such purposes is wrong, and should be suppressed by law.

Your committee would recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the use of refuse and diseased fats in the manufacture of oleomargarine as an article of food is abhorrent to the sense of every right-minded man, and, as it is injurious to health, its sale should be prevented by law.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the General Government, as also of our State Governments, to pass stringent laws against the use of diseased and refuse fats in the manufacture of any article to be used for human food, as also to pass laws prohibiting the manufacture of oleomargarine from fats other than caul-fat or suet of healthy animals.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the General Government, as also of all our State Governments, to pass laws requiring the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine to be carried on under the supervision of the National, State and Municipal Boards of Health, and make it the duty of all such Boards of Health to prevent the manufacture and sale of diseased and injurious food in the form of oleomargarine.

Resolved, That as butter is the oily substance of milk or cream, obtained by churning, it is the duty of the General and State Governments to pass laws prohibiting the use of the word butter as applied to any oily substance not the product of cream or milk, and requiring all who manufacture and all who sell oleomargarine, whether by the package or otherwise, to mark on each and every package, wrapper or parcel containing the same, in plain, large and distinct letters, and in a conspicuous place, the word oleomargarine.

Resolved, That a committee of three from each Congressional district in the dairy portion of the Northwestern States be appointed to present these resolutions to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from said States.

How They Do Things in Arkansaw.

"If you want a good item," said Jim Johnson to a reporter, "I can tell you of a funny occurrence that happened at Hot Springs last summer while I was there. Mayor Linde, of Hot Springs, had been blackguarded by the editor of a paper there until he couldn't stand it any longer, so, according to the custom of the country, he went out gunning one day. He brought down two bystanders before he bagged his game, the editor, whom he shot in the leg. None of them died, I believe. Then he went on a spree, and, having full charge of the police and the station-house, he turned out all the prisoners in the station, a lot of horse-thieves and murderers. The next morning he fined himself $10 for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. In the course of time he was indicted for the shooting. He got a change of venue on the ground that he couldn't get justice in that county. His trial came off in another county. He was fined a fine and costs amounting to $95. He had forty witnesses subpoenaed. Their fees amounted to $5 each—$200. They lumped their fees and gave them to Linde. He paid the $95 and pocketed $105, and went home happy."

That's the way they do things in Arkansaw.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A Banner with a Strange Device.

Upon the declaration of war in 1812, the town military companies reorganized by the election of new officers and a general brushing up of accouterments. Just before the battle of Plattsburg a town company in that vicinity elected a stalwart but rather illiterate fellow by the name of Jonathan Pilsbury, Captain. He felt that the eyes of the whole State of New York were upon him. He encouraged his company to be brave in the coming battle. He assured them that he would "benead them as long as there was a man of them left, and that his own name should go down to posterity." The banner of the company had emblazoned upon its folds, in addition to the stars and stripes, the emblematic eagle, holding in his talons the legendary scroll, "E. Pluribus Unum." The Captain eyed the eagle with admiration, but was puzzled as to the significance of the motto. Seeking light upon the subject, he was informed by a wag that it was the name of the first Captain of the company. A bright thought dawned upon the uncultivated mind of Capt. Pilsbury. He quietly took the flag to a sign-painter and had the name of the "first Captain" obliterated, and his own substituted, and that company rushed bravely into the fight, bearing the banner with that strange device, "E. Jonathan Pilsbury."—Cleveland Penny Press.

The Women of New York as Voters.

So much interest has been expressed in the bill which has become a law, enlarging the powers and duties of the women of this State, that we republish it entire. It reads as follows:

AN ACT to declare women eligible to serve as School Trustees.

The people of the State of New York, represented in the Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. No person shall be deemed to be ineligible to serve as any school officer or to vote at any school meeting by reason of sex, who has the other qualifications now required by law.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

The right of suffrage conferred upon the women of New York is not as broad and inclusive as such leaders as Mrs. Howe, Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Blackwell, Mrs. Lozier and their associates might desire. But it is a substantial gain, and cannot but fill them with joy and cause them to thank God and take courage. They will doubtless point out to one another, while the tears of exultation fall from their eyes, that at last hope has been measurably rewarded by fruition; that the State, "after many days"—days of utter obduracy, has taken the first step—the step that counts—in the direction of the complete enfranchisement of woman; that the wedge has begun to enter and the leaven to leaven public sentiment and the legislative mind; that the question of the ultimate triumph of their ultimate demand is only a matter of time, since revolutions never go backward.—Albany Evening Journal.

Their Ages.

It is stated that Blaine touched 50 on the last of January. Grant was 57 last April. Sherman was 56 last May. Washburne was 62 in September. [illegible] Garfield is in his 49th year. Bayard was 51 in October. Thurman reached his 66th birthday in November. Hendricks was 60 in September. Tilden was 66 in February, and in the same month Gen. Hancock was 55. Seymour will be 70 in May. Washington was in his 57th year when he was first elected, and had just entered his 66th year when he left office. John Adams was 61 when he was elected, Jefferson 57, Madison in his 58th year, Monroe in his 59th, and John Quincy Adams in his 58th. Jackson was 61 when chosen the first time, and, therefore, 65 when re-elected, while he had reached his 70th year when he quitted office. Van Buren was 54 and Harrison 67 when they were elected, while Taylor, when he took office, had just passed his 51st birthday. Polk was elected on almost precisely his 49th birthday. Tyler was not quite 58 when elected, and Fillmore was in his 51st year when he succeeded him. Pierce had not yet completed his 48th year when he was elected, and he was junior of all who have taken the Presidential chair, except Gen. Grant. Mr. Buchanan was elected in his 66th year, Lincoln in his 52d and 56th, while Johnson succeeded in his 57th.—National Republican.

No More Tramps in the West.

A good proof of the improvement in the business of the country is furnished by a man of wide observation in the West, who says that there is not now in the Western States one tramp where there were fifty eighteen months ago. In the great depression of 1876-7 thousands of men went upon the road in search of work and remained upon it because they found no work. They swarmed along the great lines of travel, a sorrowful procession of hungry and ragged wretches for whom the world seemed to have no use. But during the last twelve months this procession has been growing thinner every week until it has nearly vanished from sight. The railroads have employed many of these people. Thousands of miles of new roadway are being constructed this year. The old lines, such as the Northwestern and St. Paul, are stretching away into what was lately a wilderness, and every mile of road opens hundreds of farms to settlement. The growth of the Northwest seems to have no discoverable limit, and is absorbing the excess of population. Probably we shall soon begin again to draw large drafts on the labor of Europe.—New York Methodist.

Shaving in China.

Everything is reversed in China, you know—men never go to a barber shop to get shaved, the barber carries his kit around hunting his customers. No sitting in crowded shops waiting for your turn to come; the barber has to chase you about and shave you at your own convenience. The word "next" is unknown to the vocabulary of the Chinese barber. You are spared the annoyance if not torture of being compelled to sit by while five or six men ahead of you have their beard removed, hair cut, whiskers dyed, and heads shampooed, when you only want your hair oiled and mustache waxed to go to the theater. Sit down on a doorstep or curbstone anywhere, and a barber steps up and attends to your wants immediately. Happy dispatch.

A WELL-KNOWN beauty in London society occupied a stage-box at a theater in the Strand not long ago. Her white furs and diamonds were the admiration of the house. Shortly after the beauty's departure, an attendant found a star of brilliants in the box, and, like an honest woman, gave the treasure-trove into the hands of the management. No inquiries were made next day at the theater about the lost star, but ultimately it found its way into the rightful owner's hands. The oddest part of the story remains to be told. The diamonds were also.

A VISITING clergyman was just rising from prayer in a St. Paul church, when an usher strode up the center aisle and handed him a big bouquet, just as they do in the theaters.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

National Democratic Convention.

The executive committee of the national democratic committee issues the following call:

The national democratic committee, having met in the city of Washington, February 23, has appointed Tuesday, the 22d of June next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Cincinnati as the place of holding the national democratic convention.

Each state is entitled to representation therein equal to a double number of its senators and representatives in the congress of the United States. All democratic, conservative and other citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political association or difference, who can unite with us in the effort for a pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join in sending delegates to the convention. At the last national democratic convention, held in the city of St. Louis in 1876, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the states be requested to instruct their delegates to the national democratic convention to be held in 1880, whether it be desirable to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in the national convention, and that the national committee insert such request in the call for the next convention.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM, of Connecticut,
Chairman.
FRED'K. O. PRINCE, of Massachusetts,
Secretary.

State Democratic Convention.

The following call has been issued by the democratic state central committee:

The voters of Indiana, regardless of past political affiliations, who are desirous of co-operating with the democracy in the support of its principles and nominees, are invited to participate in the meetings called throughout the state for the purpose of selecting representatives to attend a delegate convention, to be held at Indianapolis,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9th, 1880,

for the purpose of adopting a platform of principles and the nomination of candidates to be supported for the following offices:

Governor.
Lieutenant-Governor.
Two judges of the supreme court.
Secretary of state.
Auditor of state.
Clerk of the supreme court.
Reporter of the supreme court.
Attorney-general.
Superintendent of public instruction.

The ratio of representation will be one delegate for each 200 votes cast for Governor James D. Williams, in 1876, and one delegate for each fraction of 100 or over. [DeKalb county is entitled to 13 delegates.]

The delegates from each congressional district will meet on the evening previous to the convention, at places to be hereafter designated by this committee, for the purpose of selecting and reporting to the convention one committeeman on permanent organization, one committeeman on platform and resolutions, and vice-president for the convention, two delegates to national democratic convention, one assistant secretary of the convention, two alternate delegates to national democratic convention, one presidential elector, one contingent presidential elector, one member of the state central committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and one committeeman on credentials.

The committee on platform and resolutions will meet immediately after the adjournment of the district meetings, say 9 o'clock p. m., at the consultation rooms of the supreme court, Tuesday evening, June 8.

The committee on permanent organization will meet at the same hour in the governor's office. It will be their duty to name a president and principal secretary of the convention, four delegates at large and four alternate delegates to the national convention, two electors for the state at large and two contingent electors, and also to recommend rules for the government of the convention.

The committee on credentials will meet at 8 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, June 9, at the rooms of the state central committee, to determine such contests as may be submitted to them.

Delegate tickets of admission to convention will be issued to the chairman of each county delegation, and to authorized representatives of the press upon the presentation of credentials at the state central committee rooms, Masonic building.

By order of the democratic state central committee.
B. C. SHAW, Chairman.
JAMES H. RICE, Secretary.

Township Democratic Conventions,

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the county democratic central committee, at a meeting held in Auburn, February 20, 1880, the democratic voters of DeKalb county are requested to meet at the usual place of holding elections in their respective townships (except in Union township) on

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1880,

at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following township offices, said candidates to be voted for at the township election, to be held on the first Monday (5th day) in April, 1880.

The officers to be elected in the several townships are as follows:

TOWNSHIPS.	Trustee	Assessor and Land Appraiser	Justice of the peace	Constables
Butler	1	1	1	2
Jackson	1	1	2	2
Concord	1	1	1	3
Newville	1	1	2	2
Stafford	1	1	1	2
Wilmington	1	1	2	4
Union	1	1	2	4
Keyser	1	1	1	2
Richland	1	1	2	2
Fairfield	1	1	1	2
Smithfield	1	1	2	2
Franklin	1	1	2	2
Troy	1	1	1	2

The convention (or caucus) for Union township will be held at Waterloo, at 1 o'clock p. m., on the day above named, as agreed by the precinct committeemen for said township.

In addition to the nomination of candidates, it will be the duty of the democrats assembled, to choose a township (or precinct) committeeman, who shall be, by virtue of his office, a member of the county central committee. At the same time a secretary and such other officers as many be deemed necessary for the vigorous prosecution of the campaign in the township shall be selected. A copy of the proceedings of each convention together with the postoffice address of each officer elected and candidate nominated, shall be forwarded to the chairman of the county central committee, not later than Monday, March 22, 1880.

We publish elsewhere the proceedings of the greenback county convention recently held at Waterloo. It is not our intention to devote any time at present to the discussion of the currency ideas embraced in the resolutions, but we do desire to call attention to the following portion of the platform concerning the old parties:

"Finally, we believe in the necessity of a party of united people, who will rise above all party lines and prejudices, and who will not affiliate in any degree with either of the old parties.

And we will henceforth nominate and vote for such persons only who are believers in, and are identified with, this our sacred cause."

Now, in the light of past experience, who will be foolish enough to swallow any such stuff? Two years ago, and prior to that time, the same agreement was made in almost the same language, and the republican-greenbackers were continually impressing the importance of such non-affiliation on the minds of the democratic-greenbackers, but when the time came to vote a majority of the republicans voted with their old party as they intended to do all the while, and as they intend to do at the next election. We have been informed that the recent re-organization was a "set up" job, on the part of a few republicans who do not pretend to be greenbackers and who were not present at the meeting; that the greenback chairman of this county reports progress daily to C. K. Baxter of the Press, who chuckles in his sleeve and proceeds to "fix" matters up in the interest of his party. We advise democrats to keep out of all local greenback and soldiers' organizations, for they are only recruiting agencies for the republican party.

* * *

On the first page we reproduce an article from the Fort Wayne Enterprise on "soldiers' bounty." The article was written by an ex-soldier who is well known in this community, and we advise all of our ex-soldier friends to read it. We believe the author of the article is correct in assuming that comparatively few ex-soldiers will be entitled to additional bounty under the proposed bill, and no other bill is likely to pass with greater merits. If all ex-soldiers would unite in an earnest effort to secure the passage of a bounty-land law which would make good the many promises made by recruiting officers, and grant to each worthy defender of his country 160 acres of land, there would be some sense in the undertaking. Every soldier that voluntarily entered the service of his country, is entitled to reward, and the time has come when the government should give the soldier greater consideration and offer greater reward than the mere privilege of earning a homestead on terms but little more favorable than the immigrant. The plea that soldiers must not be permitted to secure immediate title to land because they would not take care of it, is an insult too gross to be overlooked or submitted to. The youngest ex-soldier is now thirty-five years of age, and certainly is qualified to manage his affairs with credit to himself and his family, as thousands of them would prove it they had an opportunity.

* * *

The call for township caucus or convention will be found in another column. Two weeks from next Saturday is the time fixed for the nomination of township officers by the democrats of DeKalb county. The time is short, and every democrat should be thinking and consulting with neighbor democrats as to who would be the most available candidate for each of the township offices. Select none but the very best men for the several positions—men who can be elected and who will make good officers; allow no personal considerations to influence you for or against any man, but act for the good of the party and the people. As all are aware the office of trustee is an important one, and the interest of the party demands that you unite upon your strongest and best man for that position. This year the duties of assessor are much greater than usual, owing to the reappraisement of real estate. Your nominee for township assessor should be a man of excellent judgment and well qualified to estimate the value of real as well as personal property; the position will require a man of considerable observation and experience in order that all may be satisfied with the valuation of their property. Again we caution democrats to be careful in making selections for the two offices named above in particular, and to use, more than ordinary care in the selection of the balance of the township ticket.

* * *

If there is a voter in the county who has not read the proposed constitutional amendments, we ask him to hunt up a copy of the COURIER of last week, or get a copy of next week's issue, and read every section carefully. The COURIER gives the sections as they now are and as they will be if amended, and it is the only paper in the county that has taken the trouble to do so; we do it because we want the people to be familiar with the subject before it is discussed.

The report that S. J. Tilden has engaged 200 rooms in Cincinnati for use during the convention, is probably exaggerated. Tilden's agents may have engaged rooms, but not in the interest of Tilden. There is a dark horse in training, and just at this time that dark horse is receiving the benefits of Tilden's experience; in fact Tilden is the trainer.

The bridegroom was not present at the time appointed for a wedding at Harmony, Ga. The bride who knew his bashfulness, said his courage had probably failed him. Somebody suggested that a horn be blown to call him, and this was done. A responsive whoop was heard from the woods near by, but as the young man did not appear, a scouting party brought him in by force. It was not until he became fearful of losing the girl, whose patience gave away to anger, that he mustered enough courage to face the ceremony.

Forty seven thousand five hundred and sixty-seven barrels of beer were sold in Cincinnati during the month of January. Cincinnati is putting out such items as these as an inducement to secure the selection of that place as a suitable one for the holding of the next democratic national convention.—Hicksville Republican.

Sixty-two thousand seven hundred and thirty-nine barrels of beer were sold in Chicago during the month of January. The republicans are now smiling because their presidential accouchment is to take place in that city.

In another column we publish an article from the Ligonier Banner, raising a new point in connection with the proposed constitutional amendments; the article is based upon a suggestion made by Judge McClellan, and we think the point is well made, but we shall have more to say on the subject in the future. Give the views of the Banner a careful consideration.

The Amendments—An Important Point.

[Ligonier Banner.]

In a conversation with Judge C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, a few days since, that gentleman raised a point that has an important bearing upon the discussion of the proposed amendments to the constitution.

The point raised by Judge McClellan is this: If amendment No. 3 is ratified at the April election, there will be no law whatever under which to hold elections for state and county officers. He bases this upon the fact that sec. 25, art. 1, of the constitution of Indiana provides that—

"No law shall be passed, the taking effect of which shall be made to depend upon any authority, except as provided in this constitution."

Sec. 1, art. 4, of the constitution provides that—

"The legislative authority of the state shall be vested in the general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives."

After the proposed amendments to the constitution were passed by the legislature of 1879, the necessity of providing some law for the enforcement of the amendments, in the event of their ratification by the people, was urged upon that body. The well-known rule of law that a constitution is not self-acting, that there must be appropriate legislation to carry its provisions into effect, was at once recognized, and the legislature thereupon passed an act entitled "an act defining the time for holding general elections, and fixing the time at which certain acts connected herewith shall be done"—approved March 18, 1879, and which reads as follows:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Indiana, that a general election shall be held biennially on the day now fixed, or which may at the time be fixed therefor by constitution, at which election all existing vacancies in office, and all officers, the term of which will expire before the next general election thereafter, shall be filled, except those for which provision is made by law at the April elections: Provided, that the first election, under this act, shall take place in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty.

SEC. 2. All acts now required to be done and performed at a fixed time, or within a given time after the general election in October by the provisions of the act regulating general elections, and prescribing the duties of officers in relation thereto, approved June 7, 1852; and by all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, shall hereafter be performed at or within the corresponding time after the general election, whether the same be held, on the second Tuesday in October, or at any other time.

Now, a careful reading of the above makes it entirely clear that the "taking effect" of the act just quoted is "made to depend upon" the ratification by the people of amendment No. 3, and therefore in contravention of the constitution which provides that "no law shall be passed, the taking effect of which shall be made to depend upon any authority, except as provided in this constitution," to wit: the general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives.

For a full understanding of the meaning of these provisions of the constitution the reader is respectfully referred to 4 Ind. p. 347 and 84 Ind. p. 185-234.

If, as maintained, the act of March 18, 1879, is unconstitutional, the ratification of amendment 3 will leave the state without a law for the governing of general elections, for it must be apparent that when the amended constitution provides that the general election shall be held in November, the old law relating to such elections in October cannot be made applicable to the election provided for under the amended constitution.

The constitutional obstacle here referred to may be overcome by the governor convening the legislature in extra session, in case amendment 3 is ratified at the coming spring election, to enable that body to enact appropriate legislation for the enforcement of that part to the amended constitution; but whether the people would fancy the idea of incurring the expense of such extra session is a matter of considerable doubt. The surest way to steer clear of the difficulties herein referred to is to vote against the amendment. Better retain the October election than incur the expense of a separate and distinct election for judges, an extra session of the legislature, and an odious registry law.

Meeting of Court and County Officers.

March 2d, 1880, the officers and members of the bar of the DeKalb circuit court and the various county officers of DeKalb county met at the court room upon the call of Judge C. A. O. McClellan, to take such steps as might seem advisable in consequence of the death of George H. K. Moss, late clerk of the court, which death occurred this morning at two o'clock.

On motion, His Honor Judge McClellan was called upon to preside, and W. H. Dills was chosen secretary.

Upon motion by W. S. Penfield, Esq., it was resolved that the officers and members of the bar of the DeKalb circuit court and the county officers of DeKalb county will attend the funeral of George H. K. Moss, late clerk of said court, in a body.

Upon motion of L. J. Blair, Esq., it was resolved that this meeting appoint a committee of five to make all necessary arrangements in conjunction with the friends and Masonic brethren of the late Mr. Moss, in order to carry out the above resolution. And thereupon the chair selected the following as such committee: L. J. Blair, Esq., E. D. Hartman, Esq., W. L. Penfield, Esq., G. H. Duncan, Esq., and Auditor Albert Robbins.

On motion of W. H. Dills, it was resolved that a committee of five, to consist of the present judge of the DeKalb circuit court, Hon. C. A. O. McClellan, Hon. Jas. I. Best, late judge of said court, A. P. Pinchin, Esq., the oldest member of the bar of said court, A. S. Leas, sheriff of DeKalb county, and Geo. H. Duncan, president of the board of commissioners of said county, be and they are hereby appointed to prepare and report to court and for publication such resolutions as will express the sentiments of this meeting, in consequence of the loss and death of George H. K. Moss, late clerk of said court.

On motion of H. C. Peterson, Esq., the committee of arrangements were instructed to invite the members of the bar and county officers of Allen, Whitley, Noble and Steuben counties to attend the funeral of Mr. Moss.

On motion the meeting adjourned to meet at one o'clock, p. m., Thursday, March 4th.

W. H. DILLS, Sec'y.

OBITUARY.

DIED at his residence in Auburn, on Tuesday, March 2nd, at 2 o'clock a. m., Geo. H. K. Moss, in the 33rd year of his age.

Though his death had been long expected, yet its occurrence nevertheless, caused a general sadness in this community. He was a young man, held a high position in our midst, and was universally esteemed for his many good qualities of heart and mind. For years he had struggled with that insidious foe, consumption, and resisted as rarely ever man resists against its dreadful approaches. He was full of hope when others would have faltered and fallen by the wayside, and his wonderful determination, no doubt, greatly prolonged his life. It is sad to contemplate the death of one so young and gifted, one who had battled bravely with adversity, one who had gained an eminence which reflected the future full of promise and usefulness. [illegible] in death. The last lingering glance has faded away, and naught but an inanimate form remains to moulder with the lapse of ages. The voice that spoke out cheerily, will speak no more forever. A fair form that struggled so nobly against its thralldom of disease, lies lowly sleeping in its narrow cell. The pallid face shall be vainly sought as the days speed on. Out in the gloom of night, the winged soul took its flight, to happier, sweeter abodes. Tearful eyes will look for the beloved form, burdened hearts will weary over its absence, sadness will settle like a pall around the hearthstone; but agonizing pains, listless nights and dreary days, have been exchanged for a world of joy and beauty. The great aims and purposes of life are wrecked in the shadows of death, and time speeds on. The woes of the bereaved are assuaged in that fountain whence healing streams do flow.

"The gay will laugh when thou art gone,
The solemn brood of care plod on,
And each one as before will chase
His favorite phantom;
Yet all these shall leave
Their mirth and their employments,
And shall come and make
Their bed with thee."

—Considerable attention was attracted last week by the elegant new safe of John L. Davis. Owing to its dimensions, it is more on the order of a vault than a safe, is provided with a time lock, and is a beauty in all respects.

—Every church should be provided with two clocks—one in the front end, so the deaf old men could tell when dinner was ready, and one in the back end, so the minister would know when to have the sexton wake up the rest.

—Joe Abright has made some improvements in his telephone, and he now has it down to a fine point. By-the-way, speaking of Joe Abright reminds us that he has as nice a jewelry store as can be found in any town of this size on earth. Last Monday he sold four gold watches, and he wasn't feeling real well, either.

—Uncle Tom Gross, fatigued and worn out by close application to business, went off on a visit of recreation last Friday. He spent about three hours at Auburn Junction, returning the same evening perceptibly invigorated and improved in health and spirits.

—From a reliable source we are pleased to learn that Charlie Emanuel will ere long be a benedict; at all events, he is having his wedding—no, she is having her wedding—well, somebody is having their wedding garments manufactured, and that's all we know about it.

—Last Saturday night, says the report, an empty box-car started on the main track at Garrett, impelled by the fierce winds of that night, and never let up until it ran into a local freight at Auburn Junction, having gone up and down grade a distance of nearly four miles. This sounds like a large sized no-such-a-thing, but the junction boys will swear to it with their right hands on their stomachs.

Miss Lillian Woodward, the youngest elocutionist in the country, will appear at the M. E. church next Saturday evening. Admission 15 cents, children 10 cents.

—Married: Mary E. Sebert and Molstus A. High, at the residence of the bride's mother in Jackson township, by Rev. Wm. L. Meese, Sunday, February 9, 1880.

—Another new barber has sprung up in Sam. Fommert's shop. He is said to be a good one, too, though he did nearly amputate his thumb with a raw-zor last Tuesday.

—Married: At the residence of the bride's parents, three miles west of Auburn, by Rev. H. Johnson, Thursday, February 26, 1880, Mr. Lewis Henning of Waterloo and Miss Sarah J. Swihart.

—We know Mr. Byron Parsons of old, and when he says he has a good entertainment you can put it down for a fact. He is the manager of Miss Woodward's readings, and promises us a first class entertainment.

—"Doc." McClaren, of the junction, will probably soon take a position at Roann, as agent for the Wabash at that point. "Doc." is a favorite with the boys, and they will weep when he leaves.

—The little nig who first made himself conspicuous here during the Pinafore excitement, and who has since been performing compulsory services for the county, was roving around the streets this week, happy as ever.

—Frank Davenport started for Chicago last Monday evening, where his sister, Miss Allie M. Davenport, graduated at the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago" on the following day. F. E. returned home this morning.

—Circuit court convened last Monday. The docket contained 165 civil and 8 criminal cases. About 65 cases have been assigned to Judge Lowry and one to Judge Woodhull; the others will be disposed of by Judge McClellan.

—Our exchanges speak well of the entertainment given by Miss Lillian Woodward. Her extraordinary elocutionary powers excite wonder and admiration among her hearers. At the M. E. church next Saturday evening. Admission only 15 cents.

—A well-written account of the enjoyable leap-year party which occurred Monday evening in Waterloo, at the residence of R. Wes. McBride, is, we are sorry to say, unavoidably crowded out. Our matter was all in type before the article was received; hence these regrets.

—Our young ex-printer and recent mixer of compounds in the physicians' drug-store, Brown Matheny, is taking a lay-off now and contemplates a trip to Grand Rapids in the near future. Perhaps he will be gone some time, and perhaps not that long.

—Stirred up by our little reminder, the Republican did get out on time last week, and, in accordance with our prediction, it was "funny" to see. Some laughed in their sleeves and others smiled out loud, while we—we were completely overcome with robustuous hilarity.

—List of letters remaining uncalled for in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending Feb. 28, 1880:

Rev. Buddenbaun, Laura Briggs,
Mrs. Italia Coffen, Pat. McQuire,
William Huffman, August Neufert,
Chas. S. Hubbard, George Paivers,
John A. McClain, Wm. Pillington,
Mrs. Captain Pennock.

Jos. Rainier, Postmaster.

—Dr. V. A. Humphrey, of Albany, N. Y., who is a recent graduate of the "Medical College of Fort Wayne," is a late addition to our town, having accepted a position in the drug-store of Drs. Casebeer & Matheny. He is a young man of pleasing address, and we hope a favorable impression of Auburn and its people may induce him to make this his permanent home.

—Jack Brown, our lively, jovial Jack, is again making preparations to visit several states in the west, and nothing preventing will start in about two weeks. During his travels last fall and winter he was very much impressed with the western states that his limited time enabled him to visit, and now he intends to see the "elephant" to his entire satisfaction. We wish him a safe and prosperous trip.

—A big buck nigger, in company with three white women, all of whom were apparently serving him as wives, furnished some diversion in the way of amusement for the boys at the junction Monday night. The youngest woman—or rather, girl—was about fourteen years old, while the other two were probably thirty-two and forty. They were a disgusting mob, and the boys were glad to see them strike out on foot, early Tuesday morning, east on the B. & O. Their baggage consisted of two mulatto young-ones, with prospects of another before they had gone far on their journey.

—Jos. W. Brandt, now of Leadville, Colorado, a nephew of our townsman, Geo. Brandt, arrived in town last Thursday, after an absence of seven years, and spent several days renewing old acquaintances. Mr. Brandt is engaged in mining and speculating at Leadville, and he speaks enthusiastically of his town and country. He estimates the population at 25,000, which has sprung up in less than two years, and says that, all in all, it is the liveliest place he ever struck.

John W. Baxter Succeeds Geo. H. K. Moss, as Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court.

When the commissioners adjourned Tuesday morning, it was their intention not to appoint a successor to Mr. Moss until Thursday at 4 o'clock p. m., after Mr. Moss had been buried, but advice from the secretary of state, to the county auditor, was to the effect that the person appointed would be required to have a commission from the state office before he could enter upon the discharge of his duties, and as circuit court would have to be called out later than Thursday evening, it became necessary to fill the vacancy at once; accordingly the county auditor convened the board in special session about 1 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, for the purpose of making the appointment; the commissioners retired to the circuit court room and in a few minutes agreed upon the name of John W. Baxter, to serve as clerk of the DeKalb circuit court until the next general election. With the exception of a few friends of other applicants, the appointment gives very general satisfaction, so far as we have heard an expression of opinion. All will agree that the board was placed in an unenviable situation, and the members are entitled to credit for their honest endeavors to select some man who they supposed would serve the people faithfully and do honor and credit to the democratic party. From the abundance of material in the democratic party the commissioners were in duty bound to make the selection, and it would be strange indeed if all were exactly satisfied with the appointment; notwithstanding the result would have been the same if any other person had been favored. The Courier has taken no part in the controversy, and would have been satisfied with any of the men named for the position. We believe the appointment is a good one, and stand ready to defend the action of the commissioners in the premises. Mr. Baxter is too well known in DeKalb county to need an introduction.

"Aub. Junct.,"

Which is the customary abbreviation used by the quill-drivers of that interesting suburb to designate Auburn Junction. A Courier representative visited the above-named classic spot Tuesday morning, and the object of this article is to briefly detail what he saw.

First strolling into the B. & O. depot, where business for all three roads is transacted, he was startled by the spectacle which met his gaze, and he beheld "the boys" as they may be seen every day, all the year around. At a desk in one corner, deeply engaged in a tussle with several columns of closely written figures, sat J. J. Martin, the popular agent of the B. & O., throwing ink with all his might; Fred. Clark, agent for two roads,—the Jackson and the Wabash—was up to his arm-pits in bills,(not twenty dollar bills)car reports, and sundry communications, while George Smith, his chief clerk, sat in front of a big Fort Wayne & Jackson way-bill, with a quill in his fist and several behind his ears, trying to figure out what day of the month the fourth of July comes on; W. Boles McClaren sat at his instrument slinging lightning around with remarkable ease and recklessness; Will. Forshey, operator, and Chas. Woods, Mr. Martin's clerk, were both at it with their coats off—lighting pipes at a coal stove; Joe Copper, night target manipulator, was off duty, as he gets his work in under the cover of darkness; Judge Picker, as usual, sat in his mansion at the crossing, watching for stray trains, while Henry Feurich bustled around in his customary style, with a pipe in his jaw and a hammer in his hand, ready to detect busted wheels, unprotected females, etc. Having thus "piped off" the gang who compose the happy family at the depot, we sauntered over to

THE STAMETS HOUSE.

Here we found everything in apple-pie order, with Harry H. Stamets at the head and his brother, Leander F. Stamets, acting as clerk and train drummer. This hotel has been thoroughly renovated recently and materially improved, having thirteen large airy bed-rooms, aside from those used by the family; it is a neat, comfortable house, furnished with good beds and a well-supplied table, and is, withal, a most convenient stopping-place for traveling men and parties laying over between trains. Mr. Stamets is well satisfied thus far and thinks it will be a future success in every way.

Dave McNabb's heading factory is on a regular "bender"—plenty of material on hand and men to work it up. The machinery here gets but little rest.

Chris. Baker's boarding house and saloon is flourishing with the rest, and the proprietor is as good-natured as ever. Chris. is an old landmark at the junction, and he will make it win as long as it lasts.

Fred. Sammons, car inspector of the B. & O. road, owns a tip-top little grocery, run chiefly by his wife, where anything in the provision and notion line is always obtainable.

At this point of our investigations, the whistle of approaching trains signified that our time was limited; so we pocketed our little Faber No. 2 and skipped for the triangle, where three trains meet twice each day going in opposite directions.

Now, if somebody who isn't very busy will undertake to drain off the water which surrounds Auburn Junction, also lasso and export the bull-frogs whose melodies float on the summer breezes, this little business center stands some show of becoming an enterprising place, and a credit to the town of which it is a supplement.

Wonderful Cures.

Rev. F. W. Buchholz, Waseca, Minn. used the St. Jacobs Oil in the case of a lady of his congregation who had been bed-ridden with Rheumatism for seventeen years. She used the St. Jacobs Oil for three days, and was able to leave her bed.

Mr. R. Schaefer, No. 31 Brown street, Allegheny City, Pa. had the Rheumatism for eight years, and had used every known medicine without relief. A single bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured him.

Mr. Henry Schaefer, Millersburg, Ohio, was cured of Rheumatism in the hips.

Mr. Wm. Reinhardt, Elmore, Wis. reports as follows: St. Jacobs Oil is really a wonderful remedy, for I could mention dozens of cases where it has proved its magical influences. One case in particular I will state: I know a [illegible] a few bottles of St. Jacobs Oil he was entirely cured.

B. Seim, Esq., South Adams, Massachusetts, writes: Allow me to inform you how much good St. Jacobs Oil has done in this neighborhood. A woman had the Rheumatism so badly that she could not even attend her wash. Three applications of St. Jacobs Oil cured her. Her joy seemed to have no bounds.

—Mr. Christian Smith of Fairfield township, desires us to say to his democratic friends throughout the county, that he has withdrawn his name and will not be a candidate for county treasurer, having ascertained that he could not serve if elected, owing to an unexpired term of justice of the peace.

—Messrs. Dundas, Dick & Co. of New York city, are entitled to the honor and credit of having produced a substitute for quinine which is more effective and less expensive. The new remedy is called Thermaline, and is put up in capulets which are easy to take and said to cure the most obstinate cases of chills and fever. See their advertisement in another column.

[illegible] day evening: "Dear Charlie, do you love me as much as you did at a quarter to one last night? Say you do, dearest, and it will give me spirit to finish those cold beans left over from yesterday. Ever yours, Mary." And probably Charlie's answer ran something like this: "Dearest Mary, I do. Tackle them beans."

THE WANTS OF MAN.

BY JOHN IDLEWOOD.

"Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long;"
But if I could, I'd have you know,
I'd take ten million strong;
I want a house, a roomy one,
Of marble, plain and white;
Of paying bonds about a ton,
All drawing "ten on sight."

And then, a pretty little wife
(Who does not want the same?)
Who'd soothe each troubled care of life,
And gladly don my name;
One who' [illegible]
But not upon my pate:
One who would reign—a lovely belle—
Can such one be my fate?

I'd take—show me a man that won't—
Of railroad stock a share;
A foreign mission—one that don't
Dissolve in misty air;
One where they use a fellow grand,
And treat him like a King;
Where naught's too good to grace is hand—
I guess that's just the thing.

I have no care at all for fame,
But yet I wouldn't mind
To don a Shakespeare's honored name,
Or something of that kind.
Or, for a change, perhaps I'd be
A second U. S. Grant;
If other people thought like me,
I'd be the President.

I'd like to write a book or two (Bound in morocco, ridged),
About the size (I guess 'twould do)
Of "Webster's Unabridged;"
Of man, of gold, of love I'd sing,
Of course, of woman, too,
Until my muse, disabled thing,
Should whisper, "That will do."

"Man wants but little here below,"
The burden of my song;
Yet if the gods no gifts bestow
His wants are not for long;
But, as my theme I now forsake,
A moral here I set—
It is that you and I may take
All honesty can get.

McArthur, Ohio.

HOW HE WON HER.

BY C. S. CLARQUE.

"You can never do it, Charley; it's impossible."

"I will do it, though."

"Well, success to you! and if there is any way in which I can assist you I shall be happy to be your servant. But what is your plan of operation—can't you disclose?"

These were the concluding remarks. The conversation had lasted nearly an hour, between Charley Giles and his best chum, Mark Tapley. The particular in which Charley was so confident of success was the act of marrying Fannie Beattie, the only daughter of Squire Beattie, one of the great men of Lonsdale. I say one of the great men, because the Squire had a formidable rival in greatness in the person of Ebenezer Dunn, the village merchant. Dunn had been the Postmaster of Lonsdale for the previous seven years. He had been elected to represent that quiet village in the General Court of the State at four consecutive elections; and the worthy Lonsdalians would almost as soon have thought of seeing morning come without its accompanying light as to see the Board of Selectmen or the School Committee without Ebenezer Dunn. In vain had Richard Beattie, Esq., talked to his would-be constituents of the injustice of giving one man all the offices, and advised them to select some one who was able to represent them fitly; they either could not or would not take his hints; so Dunn was re-elected, and thanked his customers for their trade and their votes at the same time; and they, good, honest souls, remained content so long as taxes were not raised, there was no serious drought and their crops sold well. Dunn was a model of a Postmaster. The few months preceding each election he was very polite and attentive; professed to sell molasses and muslins a trifle cheaper than their market value; often referred to the long time he had served his townsmen and the pleasant associations connected with his experience as a public servant; hinted at a treat, if elected, and always provided it. These were the reasons why Dunn always was elected and Beattie never was.

Charley Giles was sharp-sighted—most poor fellows in love with belles and heiresses are. He knew that Squire Beattie aspired to office, but was very unfortunate in obtaining it. He also knew just the reasons why he never was elected, and that was more than the Squire knew himself. Of this knowledge Charley meant to avail himself and elect the Squire to any office he should prefer, and thus gain his consent to the longed-for marriage with his daughter. To this end he took Mark Tapley into his confidence, and the two consulted together and arranged their plans. They decided, after ascertaining what position the Squire would prefer, to make him a favorite with the whole people; to allow Dunn to be nominated, as usual, and to defame him at the very last moment. Then he would have no chance to defend himself; the people would drop him and take up the most popular man, which would be the Squire. Their motto was: "All's fair in love and politics."

The next morning Charley called upon the Squire, by whom he was received very coolly, but that made no difference to the young man. He walked in and took a seat without being asked, laid his hat upon the table, and commenced to talk politics. Upon this subject the Squire soon warmed up, as he always did. At first the political-lover talked around his subject, sort of sounded his companion; spoke of a young men's movement; of the dissatisfaction felt with the present incumbent; of the chances to elect him by a certain maneuver, and of the parties ready to take hold of the movement, until the old man was thoroughly interested in his favorite hobby; then he unfolded so much of his plan as suited his purpose. They talked together hours. It was a long time before the Squire would accede to all of young man's propositions; but it was finally decided that Beattie should furnish Mark and Charley $50, to expend as they saw fit during the campaign; that he should take a list of the wants of all the poor of the town who might call upon him and send the applicant, with his or her list, to them; that he was to remain away from all caucuses and rallying meetings, and that in case he was elected to such positions as he chose he was to consent to the marriage of Charley with his daughter. But if he was not elected, Charley was to relinquish all claims to Fannie's hand, and they were to refund the $50 which he had advanced.

The next move of the young men was to pay $25 of their funds at the counter of Ebenezer Dunn, for which he was to deliver goods to whomever they ordered. Then they visited Quibs, the crippled basket-maker, Crazy Mag—whom everybody said was crossed in love in early life—and some dozen others of the town's unfortunates, and told them all when they wanted any of the little delicacies of life to call on Squire Beattie. Then they induced the Squire to present a load of wood to the debating club, so that they could have a fire in the school-house without appropriating the wood belonging to the district. As a compensation the club chose the Squire an honorary member of its great body. This movement Beattie did not think much of, but the young men did; it caused people to talk of him and that was all they wanted.

Applications were soon made for the Squire's charity, and he patiently heard their tales of suffering, then sent them to Mark and Charley, who gave them orders on the store, and told them to call again. In a few weeks they made their second investment of $25 at Dunn's and continued to give orders to all poor callers. Meanwhile Dunn was renominated; Mark and Charley worked as hard for him as anyone. Election was drawing near, and the young men had considerably overdrawn their account, but still sent orders, which the storekeeper dared not but honor for fear of losing votes. Beattie commenced to feel a little uneasy, and expressed his fear that things were not going all right, to the young men; but they assured him that they were working admirably, but requested him to find fault with every charity caller for coming so often. So the Squire went home and grumbled to his poor visitors; it did no harm, however, for the poor people are accustomed to be grumbled at because they are not rich. When they told Mark and Charley what the Squire had said, they were told not to say anything about it round the store; and so, just as the young men expected, half the village knew all about it in a day or two. When it reached Beattie's ears, he rushed to Charley's office demanding an explanation, but was again quieted, and went home promising to growl still louder to the beggars.

It was the morning before election day; Mark and Charley had prepared a goodly pile of turkeys, to be presented to poor applicants that day, and were in earnest conversation with Richard Beattie, Esq., who seemed not a little irritated.

"It's all folly, boys—all folly. It won't give me a vote—not a single vote," he broke out finally.

"But, sir——" interposed Charley.

"There's no buts about it," interrupted the Squire. "I have been made a fool of long enough, and I will not do another thing."

"Well, sir, please remember that you are to obey us or forfeit the $50 already advanced to us," said Mark.

"Well, I'll try it; it can't kill me," said the Squire, after a moment's hesitation.

"That's right, sir. Be all ready when the mail comes in. We shall send Crazy Mag if she comes; if not, the best one we can find."

The door had hardly closed upon Squire Beattie before they were visited by a poor woman, to whom they gave an order, with instructions to call again after she had been to the store and got her goods. When the woman came back Charley presented her with a turkey; and, while he engaged her in conversation about her family, and asked her what the Squire said about her, Mark was turning out a portion of the contents of her oil-can and molasses' jug.

"The gentleman finds a good deal of fault," said the woman, "and tells me how long a gallon of molasses will last his family, and thinks mine ought to go further. God knows that, if I was able, I'd never trouble him again."

"Perhaps it isn't his fault," intimated Charley. "Are you certain they give you good measure at the store?"

"I don't know—I never measured the goods, sir."

"Well, measure and weigh everything that you have got to-day, and, if they do not hold out, let me know when you come up again," said Charley, as his visitor took her departure.

All the forenoon the young men treated their visitors the same. Toward noon, Crazy Mag came in; she complained bitterly of the way the Squire talked to her, and jumped at the pretended suspicions of Giles and Tapley—promising, when she went home, to measure everything she had bought, and if there was not quart for quart, to return immediately and let them know. Word was sent to Beattie to be sure and be on hand when the mail arrived, for everything was all right; and they continued to distribute their turkeys and their advice to measure to all who called upon them. About 5 o'clock, and just before the mail-coach came rattling up to the door of the Lonsdale postoffice, Crazy Mag came bounding into the office of Charley, with hardly breath enough left in her body to ejaculate: "Excuse me, Mr. Giles, will ye? It wasn't the Squire at all; but Mr. Dunn's been cheating me. He's given me a pint and a half of ile for a quart, and only three pints of molasses when the order was for two quarts, sir."

"Well, Mag, you'd better go over and tell Mr. Dunn all about it," advised the young man.

"I will," said Mag, as she started out.

The coach had just driven up to the door; the store was filled with the villagers waiting for their papers and the news, and Mr. Dunn was busy changing the mail. When Mag entered, she looked around her for a moment, and then said, very calmly: "Mr. Dunn, you're a cheat!"

"What do you mean, Mag?" asked Ebenezer.

"I mean that you are a cheat. You've been cheating me for some time, but I did not find it out until to-day, when I measured all the goods I bought of you."

"She's wild again, poor thing!" remarked Dunn to a bystander.

"No, I'm not wild again," said Mag. "I haven't seen anything wild to-day but your measure of three pints for two quarts."

"It might have been a mistake, Mag?"

"But the quart of oil was only a pint and a half."

"Your measure must be very large, Mag!"

"No, they're not, sir; but yours must be smaller than your soul!"

"Well, Mag, you must keep still; I'm busy now."

"No, I'll not keep still, sir."

"Then you must go out of the store."

"No, I'll not go out of the store, sir."

"Then I shall put you out."

"No, you will not put her out, Dunn; at least, not while I am here," said Squire Beattie, who with the other bystanders had gathered around Mag. "No man can lay violent hands on a woman where I am."

"Squire Beattie, I don't want any trouble with you, but perhaps it would be as well if you would just mind your own business," repeated Dunn.

"It's my business," said the Squire, very coolly. "I want my money to obtain its equivalent just as much when it is spent for Mag as though it was spent for me."

"Your money! Mag never had a cent's worth out of my store on your money."

"You are mistaken, Mr. Dunn, as Mag and many others can testify," remarked the Squire, very coolly.

"Then you mean to say I lie, do you?" demanded the storekeeper, in a rage.

"No, sir. I only mean to say that I furnished Charles Giles and Mark Tapley with the money which they spent at your store for the benefit of the poor of the town. I had no reason to think that any one would object to my keeping my charities to myself, and I am sure that I thought that you were the last person in the world who would be guilty of cheating the recipients of this charity." The Squire spoke these words quite calmly, and loud enough for every one in the store to hear.

"Well, my old woman said that gallon of vinegar I got this morning wouldn't hold out more'n three quarts and a pint," said Quibs, the basket-maker.

A man was about rolling down hill, and the cripple could not resist the temptation to give him a kick. Don't wonder, reader; it's human nature.

The store was soon nearly deserted, and its proprietor was grouty and glum. Meanwhile, stories were rife all up and down the village street that Squire Beattie had been supporting half of the village poor any number of years, and had kept them off of the town, and that Ebenezer Dunn had been cheating everybody in weight and measure the same length of time, if not longer.

That evening there were a larger number gathered around the village bar-room fire than usual, and fewer lounging about the store. This larger crowd were, of course, talking about Dunn; and it was strange how many this same Dunn had cheated, and how long everybody suspected him.

"We mustn't elect him to the General Court to-morrow," said one of the company.

"Who shall we elect?" inquired Mark Tapley.

"Elect the Squire, to be sure," responded the landlord; "I shall vote for him."

"So shall I—so shall I," chimed in a dozen voices. And hours were spent in magnifying and praising the Squire's virtues and repeating the storekeeper's faults.

The next morning Lonsdale was alive with excitement. On every hand you might have heard the praises of Squire Beattie and the slanders on poor Dunn. That day the Squire might have had every office, from hog-reeve of the village to President of the United States, if he had wanted them, and they had been in the gift of his townsmen. As it was, he was satisfied with being made Chairman of the Board of Selectmen and member of the General Court.

Time passed away. Squire Beattie gave his consent to the union of his daughter with Charley Giles. The excitement all died away, and with it the talk of an opposition store. Dunn, disgusted with politics, resigned the postoffice, and Mark Tapley was appointed as his successor. Squire Beattie now dispenses liberally and openly to the poor. Last election he was chosen to the "higher branch," and Charley Giles now represents Lonsdale in the House.

Extraordinary Accident.

A street car on the Fourth avenue line, New York, was going up-town filled with passengers, including a number of ladies. At Twelfth street the progress of the car was suddenly arrested. The horses had began trotting at a six-mile gait. Before anybody in the car could move, a long strip of iron forced its way endwise through the floor of the car, passed through the seat on the west lower corner, on which Samuel Glover, 40 years old, a merchant of Fairfield, Ct., was sitting, and, crushing through the thin seat, penetrated Mr. Glover's thigh, and, passing on, lodged against the end of the car. The car was brought to a stand-still. The strip of iron was in such a position that Mr. Glover, who had become almost unconscious from the agony he was suffering, was literally nailed to his seat. Officer Mulcahey, of the Mercer street police, came up, and, procuring axes and saws, with the assistance of several of the passengers, cut away the rear end of the car to release Mr. Glover. After fifteen minutes' hard work, the rail was released from its lodgment, but still the unfortunate passenger could not be released. With a penknife Officer Mulcahey managed to cut away the lacerated flesh of Mr. Glover's thigh and to release him. A hack was procured and he was taken to the Ashland House, where he was stopping. Physicians were sent for, and pronounced his injuries exceedingly serious.—New York World.

MUSIC.

BY PROF. DAVID SWING.

As God gave man reason and imagination and memory and love, so he gave man power to enjoy certain forms of sound—an inexplicable, ultimate sentiment in the soul. Man is clothed, evidently, with certain divine attributes which the brute world does not possess. The brute will trample under foot unseen a flower which a human child will run wildly to possess, and the delicate perfume, which would not be detected by an animal, is gathered up with gladness by man. The beast of prey can scent afar the blood of its natural food; can even follow the old track of its victim, but cannot perceive the best perfume of Araby nor the aroma of a sea wind. Man alone reveals the power to discern the beautiful. The universe around him is not only immense in its sizes and distances, but it is grand in its beauty. The star distances amaze the human heart. It grows silent and thoughtful when it learns that some suns are so far away that their light consumes 6,000 years in coming to our planet; the same heart grows silent and meditative when it looks out upon the Atlantic or Pacific seas; when the flowers all burst forth in the spring, and when they are all fading in autumn this same strange soul marks within itself the spiritual flow and ebb of delight and regret, and when the thunder rolls or the pine trees moan or the birds sing or the tones of voice or instrument send forth the vibrations, this human and mysterious power asserts itself and stands as happy and blessed in the world of sounds as it was a moment ago in the world of color and perfume. Of this sentiment of the beautiful we can only say that it is an ultimate quality of man, one of the images of God in which he was fashioned when the Creator said: "Let us make man in our own image." Once sent forth on its career it enters the school-house like a child and begins with its simple lessons. Our earth repeats in all its departments the law of infancy and youth and middle life and mature age, with this difference, that arts and institutions do not grow old and die. All our arts pass through an alphabet and the school-house and the shop of the apprentice, but they do not, like man, fall into a grave. Architecture at first was only an infant, it could build only a hut. So drawing and painting were once blundering apprentices, and music was, in the outset of its history, only a monotone with the voice, and its second lesson was to rise to the accompaniment of a drum or two strings tightly drawn. But the similitude between an art and an individual ends here, for when each one of us shall fall into our graves the arts we loved will pass on only improved by the lapse of years.

Of late years old Egypt has come more toward the front in this procession of nations and arts and learning. Greece, coming to us through Rome, became, in an important sense, one of our ancestors, and drew from Western Europe the affection of children for a parent, and for centuries scholars saw only what they called the classic world. Egypt lay hidden behind the columns of Greece. Even the pyramids lay concealed behind the shield of Achilles or under the helmet of Ajax; but a land and state so vast could not always be thus covered up by a Greek column or plume. In the last half century that old land has been allowed her name as the Mother of Nations, and due confession has been made of her part in the drama of mankind. It is now conceded that the music of Egypt was wider and richer than that of Greece. The antiquaries have found carved in an old tomb at Thebes a harp having twenty-one strings, and this harp was about the height of a man, showing us that the music which the ear heard in Thebes, 4,000 years ago, ran from the deep notes of our longest piano string upward three octaves. With such a scale of sweet sounds from a stringed instrument, it is quite certain that the Mother of Nations was a mother of no very humble music. Other figures remain upon monuments, which tell us that the Egyptian girls played upon the guitar, and perhaps sung words to the notes, a thousand years before Greece and Rome became visible in history. What system of written music they may have had is not known, nor is such scientific inquiry pertinent to an address which must deal more in general idea than in technical details.

Out of this old and wise and, as it seems, musical Egypt came Moses and the children of Israel. And, as they had been for generations in that Nile valley, and since the gifted leader had been reared in the King's palaces, and had become skilled in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, it is evident that when the children of Israel emigrated to set up a state of their own they carried with them a music of no small worth. We have long known that they carried from the Nile many principles of ethics and religion, some good and some bad, but to this political science and common literature we must now add quite rich treasures of hymns and music. We may suppose that the hymns which Moses and the army sung, and which Miriam sung with the accompaniment of her timbrel and dance, were hymns created in a land and age when the harp had twenty-one strings. By the natural law of progress this music had become still better by the day when Solomon dedicated his temple, and when mention begins to be made of many instruments. In the last Psalm quite an orchestra springs up before us. Seated in that grand old house of worship, you are amazed to see and hear trumpet and psaltery, and harp and timbrel and organs and stringed instruments and high-sounding cymbals. In the time of Daniel, 505 years later, other instruments appear, and bands for the street had sprung up, for it was decreed that Daniel must worship the false gods at the moment when he should hear in the street cornet, flute, and harp, sackbut, psaltery and dulcimer, and all other kinds of music. It seems that the writer had not the patience to enumerate all the instruments in the street bands of the King.

Whence issued the stream of fresh sound? It began in that benevolence and wisdom of God which bestowed upon man the power to perceive and produce and love the beautiful; and, having thus begun, the power has grown as the world has grown, and at last music ranks highest of the beautiful arts, unless we call literature an art. If art is to be estimated by its power, not only in any one person, but amid the multitude, and following such a method of judgment, painting and sculpture and architecture fall far behind this one form of sentiment—the sentiment of sounds. A few may confess their partiality for painting or statuary; indeed, some are music-deaf, as others are color blind; but, looking at the human family, the delight and pathos of music is almost universal. It is the art which holds all in its spell. The fables about Orpheus, how, when he played upon his instrument, the very trees listened, and the wild beasts came to hear and laid aside all their ferocity, are only old efforts of literature to tell us how powerful this form of the beautiful has always been. Long before the modern penetration had said "Let me make the songs of the nation and I shall not care who may make its laws," Plato had said, "If you would know whether a state is well governed you must first look into the condition of its music." We have come to thoughts upon a power which reaches the most human souls, and reaches only to elevate. None are too poor to hear music; none are too humble in education to appreciate and enjoy the most perfect achievements in this line of genius; none are above it or below it in rank. It comes to all, like the sunshine which is grateful to a beggar or a King.

A Horrible Duel.

During the Bourbon restoration in Paris scarcely a day passed without a meeting between Royalists and Imperialists. The insults took place chiefly beneath the wooden gallery (now the glass gallery) of the Palais Royal, where a tread on the toes or a push with the elbow sufficed. An old Imperialist fire-eater, a certain Col. Dufai, thus took in hand one day a youth of herculean frame, Raoul by name, who wore the uniform of the Royal Guard; but, barely 18 years of age, he was but little practiced in the use of arms. The parties merely adjourned to a street close by that led up the Louvre, and the combat began; but, so great was the inequality of the parties, Col. Dufai having disarmed his antagonist several times, that, to bring an impossible combat to a conclusion, he made the extraordinary proposition that they should be tied to one another, with the exception of the righ hand, in which should be a dagger, and that they should be thus placed in a hackney coach, with orders to drive twice around the Place of the Carrousel. Two of the witnesses drove the vehicle, two others got up behind. First one cry of agony was heard, and then another, and all was silent. The accomplices drove the hack-horses furiously around the square. The turns accomplished, they rushed to the carriage doors. All was perfectly quiet within, and the two bodies lay still tied together in a pool of blood. Dufai, however, recovered. His adversary had struck him four times in the breast, and torn his face and chin with his teeth! But such a horrid encounter did not cure him of his ruffianly propensities. His next victim was Col. de Saint Morys, of the Gardes du Corps, and he also wounded Gen. Viscount de Mondelagier grievously. At length the police got hold of him on account of a pamphlet he had published. Condemned to a month's imprisonment, he was so roughly treated that he became violent; he was then thrown down, put in a straight jacket, and tied by the neck and feet like a madman, or a wild animal, as he was.

Death at Will.

We all die in good time, in the natural course of events, and most of us expect to find that "good time" come soon enough; but it appears that there have been individuals who, to oblige their friends, have died somehow—and to please themselves have come to life again—also somehow—many times before finally "throwing off this mortal coil." The following is a case of this kind, given in "The Night Side of Nature," by Mrs. Crowe: Col. Townsend could, to all appearances, die whenever he pleased. His heart ceased to beat, there was no perceptible respiration, and his whole frame became cold and rigid as death itself—the features being shrunk and colorless, and the eyes glazed and ghastly. He would continue in this state for several hours, and then gradually revive; but the revival does not appear to have been an effort of will, or rather, we are not informed whether it was so or not. I find, from the account of Dr. Cheyne, who attended him, that Col. Townsend's own way of describing the phenomenon to which he was subject, was, that he could 'die or expire when he pleased; and yet, by an effort or somehow, he could come to life again.' He performed the experiment in the presence of three medical men, one of whom kept his hand on his heart, another held his wrist, and third placed a looking-glass before his lips; and they found that all traces of respiration and pulsation gradually ceased, insomuch that, after consulting about his condition for some time, they were leaving the room persuaded that he was really dead, when signs of life appeared, and he slowly revived. He did not die while repeating the experiment, as has been sometimes asserted.

George Myers was an athlete and a remarkably-hearty eater. He was sent to prison in Philadelphia for two years, and the fare there was too scant and plain to please him. On getting out he determined to gratify his appetite for a while at any risk. Every night he broke into some pretentious house, and regaled himself on choice viands and wine, often spending four or five hours at it. Nine of these burglaries were committed in as many nights before he was caught.

ANGELS PEEPING DOWN.

"O, mamma, I've been watching the stars,
And I'm almost sure I saw
A beautiful angel peeping down—
I wonder if 'twas grandpa.

"You know he used to gaze at the stars
When all but he was retired;
I think now that he wanted to go,
He looked so gentle and tired.

"Look, mamma, look at yon brightest star,
Spread out like a golden crown,
And tell me truly if you can see
A bright angel peeping down.

"For if all these glistening, glistening stars
Are windows in God's bright world,
Grandpa will choose the brightest of them
To look for his little girl.

"I'd like to live up above the stars
If it wasn't for you and papa—
Perhaps he's wishing that I would come
To tell him about grandma.

"But I'll have to wait and watch the stars,
And the angels peeping down,
Some day they'll come and bear me away—
Another gem for His crown.

"Mamma, don't weep if above the stars
God calls me to live with Him,
I'll fly right up to the brightest one,
And grandpa will let me in."

A Banker's Trick.

Once upon a time, when Dumas, the noted French author, was short of cash, he wrote to a certain millionaire asking for the loan of some money for a few months. The letter was an extremely characteristic one, and ended with a little rondeau, half jest, half seriousness. Indeed, it was such a clever production that the banker sagely concluded that the author was not to be trusted with money, and promptly and curtly declined to make the proposed investment. At dinner that night several of the banker's guests happened to be discussing a recent sale of autographs, and mentioned the almost fabulous price brought by familiar notes of Hugo, Lamartine, Guizot, and Gautier.

"Do you mean to tell me," said the millionaire, "that things of that sort have any value—money value?"

"Certainly they have!" replied one of the guests, who was a collector. "A good autograph such as I have mentioned is worth its weight in bank bills any day."

"How much is this worth?" said the banker, taking Dumas' letter from his pocket.

"I'll give you 100 francs for it this instant," said the collector, with enthusiasm, after reading it.

"Done!" said the banker, and, with a pitying smile, he pocketed the money for the letter to which a few hours before he had returned a contemptuous refusal.

SABBATH READING.

The Things in the Bottom Drawer.

There are whips, and tops, and pieces of strings,
  There are shoes which no little feet wear,
There are bits of ribbon and broken rings,
  And tresses of golden hair.
There are little dresses folded away
Out of the light of the sunny day.

There are dainty jackets that never are worn,
  There are toys and models of ships.
There are books and pictures all faded and torn,
  And marked by the finger tips
Of dimpled hands that have fallen to dust,
Yet I strive to think that the Lord is just.

But a feeling of bitterness fills my soul
  Sometimes, when I try to pray,
That the reaper has spared so many flowers
  And taken mine away.
And I almost doubt if the Lord can know
That a mother's heart can love them so.

Then I think of the many weary ones
  Who are waiting and watching to-night
For the slow return of faltering feet
  That have strayed from the paths of right;
Who have darkened their lives by shame and sin,
Whom the snares of the tempter have gathered in.

They wander far in distant climes,
  They perish by fire and flood,
And their hands are black with the direst crimes
  That kindled the wrath of God.
Yet a mother's song has soothed them to rest—
She hath lulled them to slumber upon her breast.

And then I think of my children three,
  My babes that never grew old,
And know they are waiting and watching for me
  In the city with the streets of gold:
Safe, safe from the cares of the weary years,
  From sorrow, and sin, and war.
And I thank my God with falling tears
  For the things in the bottom drawer.

God Behind Nature.

What accounts for the variety of forms in nature? Some scientists say, the laws of nature. But these laws are merely the methods by which nature works. And the question is still asked, why does nature work by these methods to produce such variety of forms? The following anecdotes, quoted by Joseph Cook, suggest the true answer:

Kepler, the astronomer was one day called by his wife, from his study of natural forces, to dinner, and a salad was laid on the table.

"Dost thou think," said he to his spouse, "that if leaves of lettuce and drops of oil and vinegar and fragments of hard-boiled eggs had been in circulation from eternity in chaos, that chance could have assembled them to-day to form a salad?"

"Not [illegible] one as this," said his wife, "nor as well seasoned."

Abbe Galliani, in Paris, once met a company of atheists in Baron d'Holbach's parlor.

"Now suppose, gentlemen," said he, "that the one among you who is most fully convinced that the world is the effect of chance, is playing with three dice, I do not say in a gambling house, but in the best house in Paris.

"His antagonist throws sixes, once, twice, three, four times, in a word, constantly. My friend Diderot will say, without a moment's doubt, that the dice are loaded.

"But seeing in this universe so prodigious a number of combinations, a thousand times more complicated, and complicated more usefully, you do not suspect that the dice of nature are loaded."

John the Baptist and Jesus Christ.

John the Baptist and Jesus the Christ, in their relations to one another, are the symbols of great and eternal facts in religious truth and experience. These two figures and these two lives pass before us like a beautiful and instructive allegory. On the one hand, we see starting up in the wilderness a wild, rude form, wrapped in a coarse blanket, with a countenance expressive of spiritual sadness and wearing the traces of ascetic habit. The desert resounds with his stern accents, and all hearts fall under his searching and unsparing exposure of their sin. Is not this the immemorial type of law, and of the repentance with which it is commissioned to work in awakened consciences?

And now this other figure, which comes treading in the footsteps of the desert preacher. On His face is a most winning light. His voice is sweet and low, His food and dress are those of other men, His way is among their homes and haunts; He gives His sanction to social and domestic life; he is the healer of the blind, the leprous and the demoniac; on His lips is the word of pardon and peace; He comes to seek and to save that which was lost. He is more than the type, He is the incarnate realization, of the Gospel. He represents faith and forgiveness, those elements of religious truth and experience which are to the former as the time of the tender grape and the voice of the turtle dove, the appearing of flowers and the green fig, the time of the singing of birds, is to the winter when it is past and the rain when it is over and gone. For it is the voice of our Beloved, who has come over the mountains of our sin, and standing by the wall of our earthly homes shows Himself through the lattice of our daily lives.—Christian Intelligencer.

"Pay John Williams."

At a church prayer-meeting, not far from Boston, a man whose credit was not the best, and who was somewhat noted for his failure to meet his obligations, arose to speak. The subject for the meeting was "What shall I do to be saved?" Commencing in measured tones, he quoted the passage, "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, and again more emphatically asked the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, and again more emphatically asked the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" Again, with increased solemnity and impressiveness of manner, he repeated the monotonous inquiry, when a voice from the assembly, in clear and distinct tones, answered, "Go and pay John Williams for the yoke of oxen you bought of him!"

The remainder of the gentleman's address was not reported. All present appreciated the fitness of the unexpected word in season, and were saved from hearing a lengthy exhortation from the swindler's lips.

The incident has led us to think that there are a good many people who, before they make much progress in walking in the way of salvation themselves, or guiding others therein, will have to "go and pay John Williams," or John somebody else, the money that they honestly owe them. There is no man shrewd enough to pursue a course of dishonesty and trickery, and still retain the favor of God in this world, or a good hope of glory in the world to come. It is best to settle up, square up and pay up, and then it will be in order to talk to the prayer-meeting.—Christian.

Asking to Go Home.

The Springfield Sabbath Republican has a pretty story of two little children who went alone on a recent Sunday to church, when a minister from out of town preached. They took a seat near the front; and, after the minister had got well into his sermon, the smallest child whispered to his sister that he would like to go home. People who sat behind them heard the little girl tell him that he must not go without the minister's permission; so hand in hand they left their seat, and, standing before the clergyman, the little chap lisped out his petition. The minister was naturally surprised, but, without interrupting his discourse, nodded his assent. That did not satisfy the children, and again the boy asked permission to go, and was answered by another nod. The little girl, fearing the minister had not understood her brother, said: "Please, sir, may brother and I go home?" The minister stopped and verbally granted their request, and, with a sweet "Thank you, sir," and a courtesy, the children went down the aisle together.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

There are a great many men in New York worth $5,000,000, a large number whose wealth will reach $8,000,000 or $10,000,000, and there are a few whose possessions will overreach $10,000,000.

The income of the enormously rich men of this country last year were as follows: Vanderbilt, $10,000,000; Gould, $15,000,000; Sidney Dillon, $10,000,000; Russell Sage, $10,000,000; and Jim Keene, $8,000,000.

European Russia is prolific in childbirths, infant mortality and diphtheria. Of 3,173,495 children born, three-fourths die young. Diphtheria in some places kills off half that are born, and in Odessa, 76 per cent.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church are all more than 50 years of age. Bishop Scott is 78; Bishop Peck, 69; Bishop Simpson, 69; Bishop Bowman, 63; Bishop Harris, 63; Bishop Foster, 60; Bishop Wiley, 55; Bishop Merrill, 55, and Bishop Andrews, 55.

In the British army there are 100,000 men who declare themselves to be members of some religious denomination. Of these, 62,860 are returned as belonging to the Church of England, 7,125 are Presbyterians, 3,985 Wesleyan and other Protestants, and 20,872 are returned Roman Catholics.

A St. Louis physician is responsible for the following figures: Taking the population of this country at 40,000,000—of 300 men, 122 never drink spirits at all; 100 drink moderately, but not to intoxication; 50 are ephemeral drinkers; 25 drink periodically, called "spreeing;" and 3 are habitual inebriates. Of 700 women 600 never taste alcoholics of any kind; 30 taste wine occasionally; 17 taste ardent spirits; 36 drink ale or beer constantly; 14 drink ardent spirits periodically, and 3 are habitual inebriates. Fewer women drink than men, but a larger proportion of them become habitual drinkers.

There are in France 1,700 women engaged in literary pursuits, and 2,150 who make a living by cultivating the fine arts. Two-thirds of the former were born in the provinces, chiefly in the South, while a similar proportion of the artists were born in Paris. Of the 1,700 female writers, 1,000 have written novels or short stories for young people; 200 are poets, 150 write on education and science; the remainder are compilers, translators and the like. Of the artists, 107 are sculptors, 602 oil painters, the majority being painters of portraits, flowers and still nature; 193 are miniaturists, 754 painters on porcelain, and 494 draw and engrave on wood, paint in water colors, ornament fans and the like.

Dakota Wheat Fields.

Of the 400,000,000 bushels of wheat produced in the United States, by far the largest portion is sown in the fall, and is called winter grain. The varieties are conditioned by soil and climate, the latitude of Milwaukee marking in general the northern boundary of winter wheat.

The area suited for the production of wheat sown in the spring hitherto has been of limited extent, but there is an undeveloped section of the country so wide and far-reaching that it may be regarded as the great summer wheat field of the future. Its capabilities are so vast, and the insurance of production so certain, that millions of the Old World may ever think of it as a land that will supply them with bread.

A traveler making the tour of the St. Lawrence and its connecting chain of lakes, landing at Duluth, and journeying west over the Northern Pacific railroad 200 miles, beyond the forest region of the Upper Mississippi, will find himself on the eastern edge of this broad land of the future—the valley of the Red river, a stream flowing northward to Lake Winnipeg, and thence to Hudson bay.

In August, 1869, the writer of this article rode over this former hunting ground of the Sioux, where through bygone ages they chased the buffalo and fought the Chippewas. The valley of the Red river was a vast expanse. No hill, no gentle undulation, nothing but the fringes of trees along the streams, bounded the sight. It was a reach of prairie unbroken by the plow. Our own voices, or the song of the meadow-lark, plover, and curlew, and other fowl, alone broke the solemn and oppressive stillness of the solitude. At Georgetown the Hudson Bay Company had reared a house, and two or three settlers had set up their cabins upon the banks of the river. We encountered a man whose birth-place was in Virginia, who had been a frontiersman in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin—a vidette of civilization.

"Have you any neighbors?" we asked.

"Oh, yes; three families have just settled about twelve miles from here. They are getting pretty thick, and I shall have to move on, I reckon."

They have been getting thicker since, and the locomotive is speeding its way across the valley, on to the Missouri, and beyond the Yellowstone; it is flying down the valley to Winnipeg, and soon it will thunder along the Saskatchewan, far away in the distant Northland. Farm-houses dot the landscape; towns have sprung up; the traveler beholds piles of lumber, long lines of farm wagons, plows, seeders, harrows, reapers, threshers, and farm engines at every railroad station. Marvelous the change! in 1869 a furrowless plain; 1879, a harvest of 8,000,000 bushels of grain—ere long to be 80,000,000!—C. C. Coffin, in Harper's Magazine.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Chest Protectors.—One of the best chest protectors on a cold, blustering day, when one is riding, is a newspaper, folded so as to have three or four thicknesses, and placed over the chest and buttoned under the overcoat, cloak or sacque.

Almond Milk.—Almond milk has been found quite useful in cases of fever, and when very light nourishing drinks were wanted. Blanch two pounds of sweet almonds, and to this add not more than two bitter almonds; bruise quite smooth in a mortar, adding from time to time a little orange-flower water; put the almond-paste in a jug and pour on it a pint of cold water; let it stand in a cool place eight hours; then strain very carefully and sweeten with lump sugar.

Bleeding from Wounds.—Bleeding from a wound on a man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of common salt, in equal parts, bound on with a white cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, say from one to three pints. It may be left for hours or even days, if necessary. In this manner was saved the life of a horse which was bleeding from a wounded artery; the bleeding ceased in five minutes after the application. It was left on three days, when it worked loose, and was easily removed from the wound, which very soon healed.

Treatment of Warts.—The common situation of warts is the hand; sometimes they are produced on the face, and less frequently on other parts of the body. Their cause is unknown; but from their frequent occurrence in school-boys dirt may be supposed to have some share in occasioning them. The treatment of warts is to pare the hard and dry skins from their tops, and then touch them with the smallest drop of strong acetic acid, taking care that the acid does not run off the wart upon the neighboring skin, for if it does it will occasion inflammation and much pain. If this practice be continued once or twice daily, with regularity, and paring the surface of the wart occasionally when it gets hard and dry, it may be soon effectually cured.—Erasmus Wilson's Treatise on Healthy Skin.

Cure for Diphtheria.—When a member of the family is attacked with this fearful disease, the best medical aid should at once be called. The danger is too great to allow this advice to pass unheeded. Indeed, even in apparently light cases, that appear to be progressing to a speedy and favorable termination, the patient often suddenly dies, and what are called the sequelæ of the disease—its later effects on the organs and tissues of the body—frequently result in death, or protracted disorder and suffering. It will therefore be seen that intelligent professional treatment is necessary to prevent, if possible, such serious results. But in some cases a physician may be so far away as to render his assistance practically impossible. For such we say there are three principal remedies. The first is the saturated solution of chlorate of potash, given in teaspoonful doses every hour. The French physicians rely largely on this. The second is chlorine-water, diluted with from two to four times as much water. A prominent physician of Springfield, Mass., has for the last sixteen years found it almost uniformly effective. Prior to its use he lost half his cases. The third remedy is sulphur. Dr. Field, of England, has obtained remarkable cures with it. His prescription is, we believe, to mix a teaspoonful of the flour of sulphur in a wine-glass of water, and give it as a gargle. If the patient is unable to gargle, blow some of the dry flour through a quill upon the diseased parts of the mouth and throat; or burn some of the sulphur on a live coal, and let the patient inhale its fumes; or, filling the room with the fumes, let him walk about and inhale them. The patient should always be kept warm, the bowels open, and the system well nourished with easily digested food.

How They Grow Trees on the Prairies.

During the winter time cut cottonwood poles, trimming them up and then sawing them into pieces about one foot long. In the spring, as soon as the frost will permit plowing, draw a deep furrow where the row of trees is wanted, lay in the pieces using none less than two inches in diameter, as far apart as desired, turn a furrow on the pieces, then a third furrow as in plowing land, harrow a little—that is all. The trees will come up from the pieces and grow steadily and much faster than cuttings or young trees set out. They should when planted this way never be cultivated, as they grow so swiftly and tall the first year or two that the wind will break some of them off unless they have weeds as a protection. The piece of pole forms a root and possesses sufficient sap to make the trees grow, even on high gravel soil. I have seen trees planted in this way live and thrive, though eaten off by the hoppers the first season close to the ground.—Cor. St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

POLITICAL NOTES.

If it be true, as various Republican journals have asserted, that the Secretary of the Treasury has sent a score of agents down South, at the expense of the Federal Government, to advance his Presidential aspirations, many curious persons would like to know what has become of the order issued by the President in 1877, which is in these words: "No officer should be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions or election campaigns. This rule is applicable to every department of the civil service."

In 1848 Lord Brougham laid it down that "the publicity with which every department of the American Government is administered makes peculation impossible. It is an offense which in such a country can have no existence." "These words," says the January Quarterly Review, "have a strange sound to ears accustomed to the disclosure of such scandals as disgraced the second Presidency of Gen. Grant."

There are 107,931 persons in the employment of the Federal Government. Each individual member of this obedient army has an average of five persons dependent on him, and through him, on the Federal administration. We have here an army of 540,000 persons in the pay of the administration and working to perpetuate the party in power. That is a machine which counts a free ballot as naught, and sweeps away opposition majorities with a stroke of the pen, and is ready to work out any fraud conceived by the Republican leaders.

Our army is composed of 2,187 officers and 24,262 enlisted men. At West Point Academy there are twenty-four musicians, eight professors and 212 cadets. There are 388 retired officers. The active or combatant force of the army numbers 20,566 men, eleven Generals and 1,559 officers, or one officer for every fourteen men. It would appear that there is altogether too much officer in our army. Tecumseh Sherman wants more men and more officers. He would like 200,000 men, but he will die without being gratified. Sherman is more of a Mexican than Grant. He would "pronounce" for himself in a minute if he had 200,000 men under him. At present there is not war material enough in the Government's hands to fully equip 50,000 men.

If Maine had been a Southern State, says the Boston Post, and the parts played by Chamberlain and Blaine had been taken by ex-Confederates or Democrats, in the time when the Republicans were in the majority in Congress, what a difference there would have been. Washington would have been stirred to its center; the lobbies of the hotels would have been crowded with persecuted carpet-baggers, pale with fear over the prospective loss of public swag; each one would have an investigating committee busy at work inquiring into State, county and town elections; a band of statesmen would have gone to the State capital to give assurances that troops would be ready when needed, and both houses of Congress would have rung with speeches on the revolutionary tendencies of the Democratic Southern States, and all to make party capital, for your first-class Republican politician cares nothing whatever for the peace and harmony of the country when his party ascendency is endangered.

A staunch Republican paper, in discussing the present aspect of public affairs, employs the following language:

"There is no denying the statement that the best thought of the country favors a stronger Government than the nation has yet enjoyed."

What is the meaning of "a stronger Government?"

"A stronger Government," says our contemporary, "than the nation has yet enjoyed."

Stronger than Washington's.
Stronger than John Adams'.
Stronger than Thomas Jefferson's.
Stronger than James Madison's.
Stronger than James Monroe's.
Stronger than John Quincy Adams'.
Stronger than Andrew Jackson's.
Stronger than Abraham Lincoln's.

A stronger Government does not mean merely a stronger administration of our present form of government. It cannot mean that. There would be no significance to the phrase if employed in that sense. It would be impossible that the Government could be administered more strongly than it was administered by the great first Presidents, who were among its original founders; more strongly than by that iron man, Andrew Jackson; more strongly than by Abraham Lincoln, who abolished slavery.

No; those who speak of a stronger Government mean a different form of government, in which greater power is reposed in the Executive. They mean a monarchy, and they can have no other meaning.

Born free, they would become comparative slaves! Such men have no fit place on American soil. Degenerate sons of worthier sires, they have not the manhood to stand erect, but would voluntarily bow their necks to the yoke and hail Grant as King!—New York Sun.

Among the "principles" reaffirmed by the Pennsylvania Republicans last week we find the following: "Honesty in election. The people having virtue and patriotism to govern themselves, our Government must depend for its stability upon honest elections. Until a man is considered infamous who casts an illegal vote our Government will not be safe, and whoever deprives a citizen of his right to vote is a traitor to our Government." Judged by these principles, so emphatically "reaffirmed," the Republicans of Pennsylvania have written themselves and the Republican party managers down as "traitors to our Government." In 1876 they overturned an honest election and deprived over 4,250,000 of voters of the legal effect of their votes. They have over and over again emphatically declared that the people have not "virtue and patriotism to govern themselves" or to conduct elections honestly, and hence they enacted laws which place spies and bulldozing Federal officials at the polls, professedly to secure "honest elections;" but really, as has been demonstrated for nearly ten years, for the sole purpose of running the elections in the interest of the Republican party. The Republican party by their every act have declared that they do not want honest elections, when honest elections result in the victory of the opposition. The Pennsylvania declaration of principles is really grotesquely hypocritical.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 24.

The Executive Committee of the National Democratic Committee met to-day, with a full attendance, the Hon. W. H. Barnum in the chair, and issued the following call:

The National Democratic Committee, having met in the City of Washington on the 23d of February, 1880, has appointed Tuesday, June 22 next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Cincinnati as the place, of holding the National Democratic Convention. At the last National Democratic Convention, held in the city of St. Louis, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the States be requested to instruct their delegates to the National Democratic Convention to be held in 1880 whether it be desired to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in the National Convention, and that the National Committee insert such request in the call for the next convention.

A meeting of the Committee of Nine, appointed by the National Committee yesterday, held a meeting to-day, and organized by the selection of John G. Thompson, of Ohio, as Chairman, and Frederick O. Prince, of Boston, Secretary. All the members were present. The following resolution was adopted:

INDIANA ITEMS.

The sportsmen are all of the opinion that there will be plenty of fish in the Wabash river this spring.

The brick-yard for the new State House will be located in Morgan county.

William Horstman, a farmer living near Edwardsport, committed suicide while suffering the pangs of inflammatory rheumatism.

At Fort Wayne the saloon-keepers have secured the indictment of a large number of druggists who have been selling liquor without license.

A Fort Wayne "he," dressed as a female, recently tried to get into the employ of a family, evidently with intent to rob the house.

The rise in the river at New Albany has been something remarkable. In the short space of sixty-five hours the river rose more than thirty-five feet.

Miss Nellie Brown, a prominent young lady of Vincennes, was severely burned by the explosion of rose oil, with which she was cleaning kid gloves.

A boy 17 years old, named W. E. Bates, Jr., has been discovered at Columbus, who wields a cornet in a manner that gives promise of future fame as a soloist.

The question has been raised whether F. C. Johnson, the Census Supervisor of the New Albany district, can hold the office without surrendering his trusteeship of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum.

General Ekin, of the Quartermaster's Department, has received an order for the manufacture of a large amount of army clothing, and will give out work to more than a thousand sewing women.

Mrs. Sarah Jameson, aged about 83 years, and one of the oldest, if not the oldest, citizen in Harrison county, died at Corydon a few days since. [illegible] was a citizen of Corydon at the time it was the capital of the State.

It is believed by some very competent lawyers that the law which allows 35 cents per description for publishing the delinquent-tax list is void, on account of a defect in its title, and that 20 cents is the maximum that can be collected.

One of the large coal-pits in Pierceville, Ripley county, containing sixty cords of wood, exploded the other night, and the shock was felt for two miles around. Bricks were thrown 300 yards, and the large iron door, weighing about 400 pounds, was thrown 250 feet.

In an altercation occurring at Plymouth between Mrs. Wood, a woman of 50, and her grandson, the woman attempted to shoot the boy with a shotgun, but was frustrated by the father of the boy shooting his mother-in-law with a pistol, the ball taking effect over the right eye.

Judge Britton, in the Circuit Court at Crawfordsville, has decided, in accordance with a recent ruling of the Supreme Court, that no prosecutions can be made against licensed saloon-keepers for selling liquor to minors or for keeping open on Sundays or legal holidays, or after 11 o'clock at night. The decision practically removes all restraints upon the sale of liquors.

The Board of State House Commissioners have decided to lay the corner-stone of the building in the first week in May, the occasion to be made one in every respect worthy the structure to be erected. The programme is not yet completed, but it is known that the Masons will have charge of the ceremonies; that all the Governors of the States will be invited, and that no pains or expense will be spared to make it the grandest day in the history of the city.

The wife of Edward Fisher, living three miles north of Belle Union, Putnam county, was burned to death the other day, by her clothing igniting at an open fire. On the same day Mrs. McCammack, who lived almost in sight of the Fisher residence, placed her 2-year-old girl in a chair near the stove and left the room for a few minutes. The child, being restless, and endeavoring to get down from the chair, overturned it in such a way that its face was caught between the chair and the stove and held there until one side was literally roasted. One of the child's hands was also burned to the bone.

The Connersville Examiner says: "A Decatur county farmer named Pruitt is the possessor of a monstrosity in the calf line that is attracting a great deal of attention. The calf is a reddish color, 6 weeks old, and has two heads, four eyes, four ears, four nostrils, two mouths and two tongues. One of the heads has front teeth in the upper jaw, while the other head has teeth [illegible] being [illegible] and adapted for grinding. It takes all fluids in on one side or head and all solids on the other side or head. Another strange feature noted in this double-headed calf is that it has only one esophagus, which is bifurcated at the top, running to each head. This strange freak of nature seems to be healthy as any ordinary quadruped is, and as frisky, too, at that age. Mr. Pruitt values his curious possession very highly, and has refused quite a large sum which was offered by a Connersville showman for the purpose of exhibition."

Marine Disasters and Their Causes.

The loss of 49 steamships, 45 ships, 140 barks, 48 brigs and 227 schooners bound to and from the United States during 1879, involving a loss of $15,000,000 (or $6,000,000 in excess of 1878, and over $3,000,000 more than in any previous year), is naturally drawing attention to the causes of so remarkable an increase in marine losses. As fifteen of the steamers were grain carriers, the presumption is that the chief difficulty lies in the stowage.

The Intoxication of Dress.

[Mrs. Elizabeth Boyton Harbert.]

With woman's natural love of beauty and color, added to the astonishing premium placed upon "good clothes" by society and the press, we are not surprised that the horizon of so many women's lives are bounded by a dry-goods establishment, and the dictionary of their language contained in the bazars of fashion. We have just tossed aside a recent number of one of the most influential journals of the east, twelve pages of which are filled with what purports to be a record of "American society, past and present." Long lists of names are given of women in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville who are to be handed down to posterity as famous—for what? For their helpfulness to the age in which they live? For patriotic endeavor? For earnest work for the future? For an unselfish hospitality? For having developed and consecrated to friends their best gifts of song or conversation? No! but for the quality of dry-goods they wore.

We have actually sacrificed an hour in looking through these twelve pages to see if we could discover the name of a single woman poet, actor or philanthropist singled out as worthy of mention because of such fact, but we fail to find one. Even Mrs. Aubrey H. Smith one of the true nobility, is placed on record as the lady "who wore an imported dress, a dress of striped garnet and old gold satin, with a court train of black damasse, trimmed with rich thread lace."

In every city the homes which have become true literary centers, the rare places where genuine manhood and womanhood are recognized despite the awkward setting of plain attire, are passed by in contempt in making up a social record to show the progress of the last century.

Twelve pages, and not a hint that one of these ladies gave utterance to a brilliant thought, a suggestive repartee, but that like a procession of wax figures they passed before the admiring world, habited as follows: Mrs.—— in many elegant robes. Her evening toilets were as follows, etc., etc.

In the name of womanhood we protest, and for the sake of American girlhood, we beg the editors of our representative journals to put a premium upon something in the world besides dry-goods.

Not much of a compliment to a beauty when the "soul-full eyes" even are surpassed by "a faultlessly artistic toilet of black satin, embroidered in rosebuds and pansies and sprays of filmy green, and a white opera hat, whose tints of color matched the flowers, and evening gloves completed a toilet whose beauty attracted one like some rare picture."

So long as women are content to be judged only by the amount of expensive dry-goods they wear, so long will they receive such criticism as the following, which appeared in a recent popular book: "For is it not, let me ask you, to take, for instance, a man's sublime faculty of reasoning and logical comprehension, far more wonderful that a reasoning man should have the same parents as a woman, than that they should both have the same parents as a monkey?" And just so long as our women make no protest against thus being described and valued as so much lace, or so many yards of velvet, will thinking men dare to address them in the following strain. I quote from a recent publication: "In a girl, however pretty, what is there to interest a man, if he reads nothing in her face from night to night but that she is getting daily more worn and jaded in the search of a rich husband? Or even, to go a step higher, in the unthinking, uncultivated flirt, so common in every class of society—what is there in her that a man will not soon discover to be insipid and wearying. But give her one genuine, one disinterested taste, and all is changed. If I had an audience about me of young ladies, whom it was not too late to advise—girls entering on the world, determined to run the worldly course, and to satisfy all the expectations of the most excellent and lowest-minded of chaperons, I would say this to them: I have no doubt you are all ignorant; of course you are all vain. That to make a brilliant match is your great object, you all avow. A certain sort of flirting, of which the less said the better, is your most distinguished taste. I know all this (I should say), and I can't help it; nor do I ask you to alter one of these points for the better. But this I do ask you to do—to try to add something else to them. Try to win for yourselves one taste of a truer and deeper sort. Study Wordsworth and some parts of Shelley; open out your sympathies, by their aid, in just one direction. Learn to love the sea and the woods and the wild flowers, with all their infinite changes of scent and color and sound, the purple moor, the mountain stream, the rolling mists, the wild swell of the heather. Let these things grow to haunt you like a passion, * * * and then, by and by, go and look in the looking-glass, and study your own face. Hasn't some new look, child, come into your eyes and given them expression, a something they wanted before."

Aye, more and more, dear girl friends, to-day intoxicated, enervated by the strange passion of dress, begin to study humanity; determine to do some one thing toward making life brighter for other people, if it is nothing more than amusing a little, restless, disappointed child, and get in the habit of sometimes studying the old gold and crimson, the lovely rose and dreamy blue, or the pearly-tinted gray of God's sunset clouds; lift your eyes just above the shop windows, and honor the young woman whose conversation is filled with pearls of thought and rubies of wit and diamonds of suggestion, and then shall you have filled one claim to a place in the record of America's true women.

How He'd Do It.

[Detroit Free Press.]

Several men were gathered at the door of a blacksmith shop on Cass avenue the other morning, when a schoolboy not over nine years of age came along with tears in his eyes, and one of the group asked:

"What's the matter, boy—fall down?"

"N-no but I've got a hard 'rithmetic lesson, and I expect to get l-licked!" was the answer.

"Let me see, I used to be a king-bee on fractions."

The man took the book, turned to the page, and read:

"Rule 1—Find the least common multiple of the denominators of the fractions for the least denominator. Divipe the least common denominator by each denominator, and multiply both terms of the fraction by the quotient obtained by each denominator." He read the rule aloud and asked if any one could understand it. All shook their heads, and he then continued:

"Well, now, I think I should go to work and discover the least uncommon aligator. I would then evolve a parallel according to the intrinsic deviator and punctuate the thermometer."

"So would I!" answered every man in chorus, and one of them added; "I've worked 'em that way a thousand times."

Not one of the men, all of whom were in business and had made money, could even understand the working of the rule, much less work examples by it, and yet it was expected that a nine-year-old boy should go to the blackboard and do every sum off hand.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others. The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company. Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York 43-1y.

Two Remarkable Friends.

[Bodie Standard.]

There came into this place a few days since a man who is a living evidence of an astonishing freak of nature. There is an episode in his history of the most astounding and phenominal kind. This man goes by the name of John Jarboe, though his real name is George Roberts. Upon this change of name hangs a most wonderful tale. Many may think the story about to be related a mere fancy sketch, but its truth can be substantiated by a number of reputable men here and in Nevada. To begin: In a small town in western Illinois there lived a wealthy family by the name of Jarboe. Its members consisted of the father, mother, three daughters and one son christened John. Hard by lived a Mrs. Roberts, a widow in reduced circumstances, with an only son, named George, who was about the same age as young Jarboe. John Jarboe and George Roberts grew up together, went to the same school, shared each other's pocket money, and were the closest of bosom friends. A short time before the war, broke out the elder Jarboe died. About the time Fort Sumpter was bombarded, young Jarboe, then a lad of some sixteen summers, took his share of his father's estate and went to the wilds of Colorado. At Denver he opened a saloon, and did a thriving business for years. Young Roberts answered the first call for volunteers, and went south with one of the first regiments of Illinois troops. He served through the war and came home at its close a tall, handsome youth, but with his head prematurely bald. It must here be remarked that John Jarboe had very dark features and an abundance of straight, dark hair, while young Roberts was a fair-haired, blue-eyed and ruddy-cheeked blonde. Shortly after Roberts' return from the war he received a letter from Jarboe, inviting him out to the growing city of Denver. Roberts went, and for many years the two friends were inseparable. They lived at Denver, Central City, Golden, Blackhawk and other places in Colorado, and always together. About 1873 they came west to Utah. And now comes

THE STRANGE PART OF THE STORY.

Some five years ago the two were occupants of a cabin in Bingham Canyon, Utah Territory, a rude, log hut covered with a dirt roof. One night the roof gave way, and fell in on the two friends, while asleep in bed. Early next morning the neighbors extricated them from the ruins. Both had sustained severe contusions about the head, and were for man hours in a comatose state. The first to recover was Jarboe, but, strange to relate, his first utterance was, "Did Jack (Jack was the name George used to call Jarboe) get killed?" Those around the bed asked who he meant, and he replied, "Jack Jarboe, of course." They told him he himself was Jarboe, but he got angry and swore he was George Roberts. Seeing it was useless to argue with him, his attendants dropped the subject, thinking that he would recover from his strange delusion in a few days. Next day Roberts recovered consciousness, and, singularly enough, inquired the first thing, "Is George dead?" In vain they tried to persuade him that he was George Roberts; he insisted that he was John Jarboe. During their interim of insensibility the two friends had completely changed their identity. Thus Jarboe insisted that he was George Roberts, and Roberts as stoutly affirmed that he was John Jarboe. Their friends and acquaintances thought they must be crazy for a while, but it was soon seen they were perfectly sane upon every other subject. It was no use to show them their photographs taken before the accident, they could not account for the change in their respective appearances, but they remained perfectly positive of their identity. After a while it became a sore subject with them, and they would consider any allusions to it an insult. There was much talk of the affair at the time, but it finally died out as everything does. At last the two friends went on a visit to their old home in Illinois. Roberts presented himself to the mother and sisters of Jarboe as the son and brother, but his advances were spurned. Jarboe went to Mrs. Roberts as her son, but she declined to receive him as such. When she saw her son she fell on his neck, but he disengaged himself and told her he was not her child. The poor mother was nearly crazed with grief at this repulse. Mrs. Jarboe and her daughters saw the real Jarboe, and wanted to smooth him with kisses and embraces, but he kept them off, telling them they were mistaken. Their sorrow and amazement can not be described. Our two friends held a consultation, and, concluding that their relatives had gone daft, immediately set out for Nevada. They have been roaming around the various mining camps of eastern Nevada ever since, most of the time in company. Jarboe, who represents himself as Roberts, was in Nye county, Nevada, some months ago, and, as before stated, Roberts, who calls himself Jarboe, come into Bodie a short time since. This is one of the strangest cases on record, and is a nice little nut for scientists to crack. There is no doubt about the authenticity of the story.

The Democratic Party Needs No Dictator.

[Wabash Courier.]

Every now and then the public is informed, through the press, that Mr. Samuel J. Tilden will not consent to the nomination of this man or that man for president by the democratic party. Governor Hendricks, Horatio Seymour, Senator Thurman, Senator Bayard and Sanford E. Church have all been named as having in some way incurred Mr. Tilden's displeasure to such an extent as to preclude the possibility of his consenting to the nomination of either of them. Whether or not Mr. Tilden is aware of his name being coupled with such reports, it is impossible for us to say. If he is, and does not deny that the reports have his sanction, then he is attempting to play the character of dictator to his party. Mr. Tilden, if that is his game, will learn before he is through that the democratic party is not so weak as to need a guardian; neither is it so servile as to submit to the lash of a master. In these respects it differs in character from its republican opponent. The latter party has since its birth meekly submitted to the commands of its masters. Never has there been a successful resistance within that party in any state against the will of its master in that state. In the various sections of the country the republican voters follow the lead of the Camerons and Conklings without daring to ask whither they are going. This might do for the republican party, but never for the democratic. Mr. Tilden was honored by the democracy with an election to the presidency. His failure to obtain the office gives him no claim to a renomination nor the right to name the nominee in case he withdraws or is forced out of the race. Mr. Tilden, as a democrat, has the privilege enjoyed by all members of the party of seeking any nomination within the gift of the democracy; he can favor whomsoever he chooses for any public office but the right to assert that Hendricks, Seymour, Thurman, Bayard or Church shall not be nominated is one Samuel J. Tilden does not possess. If the statement that Mr. Tilden will not sanction the nomination of either of the above-named gentlemen means that he will bolt such nomination, then he is unworthy the confidence of the party. Our remarks are based upon the hypothesis that Mr. Tilden is cognizant of and sanctions the reports in question.

Hendricks.

[Petersburg, Ill. Democrat.]

Although we have no special candidate for the presidency, the late efforts of leading journals to advance the interests of different aspirants has convinced us that none of those men are the most available as democratic standard-bearers in the presidential race which we are just entering. It is true they are all able and sound statesmen, but many of them are not available. They are not available because they could not awaken that enthusiastic following which the candidate to be successful ought to awaken. Besides some of them are too tenacious of questions which are more directly local in application. This is the case with the financial question. In certain sections of the country certain theories are regarded the only sound ones for a successful financial policy; while in others those theories are very obnoxious to a large following of the democratic faith. There are two extreme theories which may be regarded rather more local than national in their application. Neither can be made successful as a national creed. A half-way position is the best. That can be best attained by relegating it and the tariff question to the congressional districts for adjustment. When that is done, greater care will be observed by conventions in naming candidates, and in our opinion a better, and more permanent solution of the financial question will be attained than it is possible otherwise. It is because of the peculiar views of those different presidential aspirants that their friends have been unable to awaken a spirit of enthusiasm for them. So it will be necessary to take a representative man from some central point who will be able to harmonize these conflicting opinions. In casting about for such a man we are led to believe that Thomas A. Hendricks is the man above all others. The surroundings are very propitious for his friends to advance his name to the front, and make a bold, vigorous fight for him. He could carry the south, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, and several other western states. His nomination can be secured if his friends will enter the fight earnestly and vigorously. The great body of the democratic voting citizens prefer him to any other candidate named; and if his friends will face politicians who, for sinister motives, are attempting to advance the cause of others, and make a bold, honorable and manly fight for him, he will be the next president.

Carr's Corners.

—Literary played out.

—George Shugers is on the mend again.

—Mrs. Emma Smith, who has been quite sick for over a week, is now recovering.

—Tree Smith says he has the highest headed horse in Jackson township.

—Sugar-making has commenced. Prepare your pallets and make a raid on somebody's camp.

—Jefferson Goetschius, Samuel Phodefer and John Clark will leave this place for the west in a week or ten days; where they intend to locate we have not learned. We hope the boys will realize all their expectations.

—The meetings are still in progress at the Lockwood school-house. Owing to the bad roads, they are not as largely attended as they should be; but the interest is increasing, as we understand they have succeeded in getting a few converts. The meeting will continue all this week, providing the roads are passable.

—A challenge debate was held at the brick school-house last Thursday evening. The question discussed was, "Resolved, That the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited by statute." A. Conrad took the affirmative and A. A. Penland, Daniel Culver, John Shugers and George Goetschius the negative. The question was debated one hour and forty-five minutes, and decided in favor of the affirmative by both the house and chosen judges.

MURPHY.

He Couldn't Invest.

While sitting in our item factory, yesterday afternoon, listlessly engaged in amputating a crop of finger-nails, (having just perused an article on etiquette) we became aware of somebody's presence behind us. Turning somewhat abruptly around, we found ourself confronted by a man about the length and breadth of a telegraph-pole, who opened his food cavity as though trying to swallow a boot-jack and spake thus:

"Be you the editor?"

"We be,—part of him; what's wanting?"

"Wall, I lost a black sow last week, and I want you to put it in the paper."

"What, the sow?"

"Young man, you're a right pert lookin' chap, but don't kick over the traces. Be you the editor?"

"Well, yes—in a measure."

"What'll be the probable outlay of advertisin' for that critter?"

We here wrote a beautifully explicit description of the swine, stating its color, weight and politics; then we informed our visitor that the expense of "putting his sow in the paper" would doubtless be about fifty cents.

"Fifty cents? Gee whiz! that's about four shillin's more'n I've got concealed around my clothes. Good evenin', mister."

"Tra-la-la. Call again."

Died Dec. 27,1876, at Baily, Muskegon county, Mich. Christian Miller, aged 82 years. He was born in Union county, Pa. Aug. 17, 1798. At the age of 14 he gave his heart to the Savior and united with the M. E. church, of which he remained a faithful and consistent member until summoned from the militant to the triumphant church above. At the age of 22 he was married to Miss Ruth Jones, who still survives him. In 1824 he moved from Pennsylvania to Ashland county, O., and from thence, in the spring of 1847, to DeKalb county, Ind., and settled near Spencerville. In 1856 he was granted license to exhort, which was renewed from year to year until disease confined him to his home. He was noted for singing spiritual songs, and was regarded as one of the greatest revival singers of his day. In the fall of 1869 he moved from DeKalb county, Ind., and settled at Baily, where he remained until his death. He was the father of 13 children, 6 of whom preceed him to the better land, and 8, with their mother—now 82 years of age—remain to mourn their loss. He was a man of spotless character and, as looking to the great interests of the church, of unflinching purpose; his efforts and influence proving a Savior of life unto life to lost ones in every community in which he dwelt. Hence his life was a grand success, and his death, of necessity, a glorious triumph. Such is the record of one who served the blessed Master for 68 years.

J. T. HANKINSON.

No Lasting Interest in Tom Paine.

[Boston Congregationalist.]

There is something melancholy in the annual attempts to whitewash and glorify the memory of Thomas Paine. We are thinking now chiefly of the utter flatness and feebleness of the effort. Even Colonel Ingersoll, than whom a more sparkling rhetorician would be hard to find, in spite of his superficiality and recklessness, can not get up any lasting interest in Paine. History is against him. The world knows that infidelity never made any one better or happier, and that Paine "died as the fool dieth" at last. The admirers of Paine easily can gather an audience for an hour of adulation in any of our largest cities, but even here in Boston, where all sorts of hero worship flourish, they can not induce the public to take the least permanent interest in them or him.

THE WEST.

THE Chicago and Alton, Pennsylvania, and Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads have let the contract for the erection of an immense depot in Chicago, to take the place of the unsightly rookeries that are now occupied by those roads at [illegible] and Madison streets. The depot will be [illegible] the country, and will be inferior only to the Grand Central Depot in New York. It will extend from a point 150 feet south of Madison street to a point 340 feet north of Van Buren street, and will have a width of 180 feet and a length of 1,000 feet, all of which will be under iron arches covered with an iron roof.

THE offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company on the Kansas Pacific railway between Kansas City and Denver, were taken possession of last week by the new American Union Company, in defiance of the injunction of the local courts. On the Union Pacific railroad the wires, which have been under the control of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company, were seized in the same manner, it is supposed by Jay Gould's order. Great excitement prevails at New York and in the West over the matter, and a long and bitter [illegible] is expected.

AT McVicker's Theater, in Chicago, for the present week, a new comedy company known as "The Strategists" appears. The entertainment abounds in the laughter-moving qualities found in "Hobbies" and kindred farcical affairs. The company embraces Mr. Clinton Hall, Mr. T. J. Hind, Mr. Sol Smith, Mr. John F. Herne, Mr. W. H. Lytell, Mr. Sam E. Ryan, Mr. L. F. Howard, Miss Ada Monk, Mrs. Sol Smith and Miss Lillie Powell.... The regular winter packing season in the West ended with February. Two companies of United States soldiers have been ordered to Caldwell, Sumner county, and two to Coffeyville, Montgomery county, Kan., to prevent white men from encroaching on the Indian Territory in violation of the United States treaty obligations.... The Chinese exodus from California seems to have begun. Two car-loads of Celestials passed through St. Louis one day last week, en route for Philadelphia and New York, and more are to follow soon.

WILLIAM HYDE and Joseph Pulitzer, editors, respectively, of the St. Louis Republican and Post-Dispatch, had a street encounter in that city a few days ago, growing out of a newspaper quarrel. Pulitzer came out of the skirmish with a bloody nose, and minus his pistol and eye-glasses. Hyde used only nature's weapons.... There is reason to suspect that Brown, who was murdered in Indianapolis, some time ago, by his wife's paramour, was himself a murderer of considerable experience. His house was a headquarters for disreputable characters, and numerous mysterious disappearances in that locality have led to the suspicion that he was responsible for some of them at least. A thorough search of his garden will be made.

TWO SHERIFFS, having a negro thief and fire-bug in custody, fell asleep while waiting for a train at Decatur, Ind. The darky improved the opportunity by seizing a gun and commanding his guards to emigrate. One left without delay, but the other tarried and was shot dead.... Gen. Pope, in a communication to the Cabinet at Washington, reports that the Kansas herders abuse the privileges allowing them to graze their cattle in the Indian Territory, and the permission will be revoked.... The snow blockade on the Northern Pacific railroad is the worst ever known. A Fargo dispatch of the 2d inst. says traffic has been suspended between that point and Bismarck since the 15th of February.

THE Western paper-makers held another meeting at Chicago last week. The prices of paper were fully discussed, and it was decided to make no further advance for the present. Important Supreme Court Decisions.

The celebrated political cases pending for some time in the Supreme Court of the United States have at last been decided. In the case of the West Virginia negro who was convicted of murder, the laws of the State prohibiting the presence of colored men on juries, his trial and conviction were pronounced illegal, as, under the circumstances, he was, by the exclusion of his own race from the jury, denied the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. In the Virginia case, where a negro murderer had been tried by a jury composed entirely of white men, the State laws containing no prohibition on colored citizens from so serving, the action of Judge Rives, of the Federal bench, in removing the case to his court for trial, was pronounced wrong. In the case of the State Judge, who presided in the last-mentioned trial, who was arraigned for persistently excluding colored men from juries, the law not requiring it, it was held that the complaints against him were well founded. In the case of Davis, a Deputy Collector in a Tennessee district, who, while on a raid, killed a moonshiner, and was indicted for murder in a State court, it was decided that the killing was done by him as an officer of the United States in the discharge of his duty, and that, if the provocation had not been sufficient, he would have been amenable to Federal, and not State, law.

De Lesseps.

Considering that he is in the 75th year of his age, M. de Lesseps may be set down as a well-preserved man. He was born at Versailles, France, Nov. 19, 1805. He has yet considerable vigor and life left in him, notwithstanding his old age. Mme. de Lesseps, who speaks very good English, boasts that she was not married to De Lesseps until he was 64 years old, and that she has had seven children in eight years, of whom two were twins. Mme. de Lesseps is of Creole origin. She is the daughter of M. de Bragues, who was a Judge in Mauritius, or the Isle of France, an English island in the Indian ocean, where she was born. She was 21 years old in 1869, when De Lesseps married her on his return from Palestine.

The Gentle, Gentle Indian.

Dear, gentle, noble-hearted Indian. How often, like other good men, he has gone wrong. Let us feed him, and give him some new guns, and when, in his wayward moments, he breaks out and slaughters a few Colorado families, just to keep his hand in, let us give him plenty of whisky, that remorse for his unkindness may not prey on his noble soul. And, by the way, let us put a few pounds of strychnine into it to make the possibility of remorse still more thoroughly impossible.—Burdette.

REMARKABLE MEMORIAL.

Peck's Views in Regard to the Tariff on Type and Paper-Making Materials.

Geo. W. Peck, of Milwaukee, has addressed the following memorial to Congress. The M. C.'s will read it, whatever else they may do in regard to the matter discussed:

OFFICE OF PRESIDENT OF WISCONSIN EDITORS' AND PUBLISHERS' ASS'N,
MILWAUKEE, Feb. 20, 1880.

To Senators and Members of Congress:

It becomes my painful official duty to address you a few lines, and if you will pay attention and allow the ideas herein advanced to gently enter your several systems without the aid of a surgical operation or a shot-gun, it will be a blessed sight more than we have a right to expect. At the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Editors' and Publishers' Association, held last June at Oshkosh, after the members had been formally admitted to the Insane Asylum, they passed the following whereases and resolutions, between free lunches and picnics, and made me the humble instrument of torture to bring the aforesaid whereases and resolutions to your attention:

"WHEREAS, The type foundries of the United States have formed a combination for the purpose of imposing such terms and regulations as they choose upon trade, and

"WHEREAS, They have been and are using their organization to the great disadvantage and injury of their patrons, the printers and publishers of the country, and

"WHEREAS, The ordinary and permanent difficulties in the way of obtaining type from foreign countries are such as to afford ample protection to American type foundries without the addition of the safeguard of a tariff, therefore

"Resolved, That the just interests of the printers and publishers of the United States require that the tariff on type metal and type be removed.

"Resolved, That the representatives of Wisconsin in Congress are urgently requested to use their influence and efforts to secure a speedy abolition of such tariff."

Now that you have read the resolutions, it is a supposable case that you will feel that your next duty is to throw them into the waste basket. In the name of 40,000,000 people, be the same more or less, I ask you not to lose your cud, but ruminate, as it were, and think over the highway robbery that is being practiced upon your unsophisticated constituents by the type founders, who are foundering the newspapers. As it is now, they stand in the entrance of the editorial sanctum and take the money that comes in on subscription, and only allow the publisher the cord-wood and farm produce. By the protection your alleged honorable body affords them, in the way of tariff, they grapple the throat of every newspaper in America and say "Knod," while the newspaper publisher can only return his chips to the dealer and say—words of disapprobation. Every article that is used by a newspaper man, excepting second-hand ulster overcoats and liver, is protected by a tariff that makes the cold chills run up his spine.

Another thing that the association did not pass any resolutions about, but which they probably will at the next meeting, if there are enough of them left outside of the poor-house to meet, before they meet on that beautiful shore, is the recent action of the manufacturers of paper, who are endeavoring to screw down the lid of the newspaper coffin which the type-founders are preparing for the grave. In the last three months, by their own sweet will, they have run the price of paper up almost 100 per cent. There is nothing to prevent them from doing it, as foreign manufactured paper is kept out of the country by the tariff. Every article that goes into the construction of rag paper, except basswood, sweat and water, has a tariff on it. The soda, the assafœtida and blue mass, or whatever is used to deodorize undershirts and cast-off drawers, so that they will smell good in a newspaper, has a corn on it in the shape of a tariff, so that the paper manufacturing three-card-monte chaps have an excuse to bleed newspapers to the last drop. What the newspapers want, and they believe it is not an unreasonable demand, is the removal of the tariff on type, on rags, on paper, and on all chemicals used in the manufacture of paper. In a tariff on rags (if there is no tariff on rags you had better put one on, unless you remove the tariff on the rest of the stuff; if a tariff is a good thing you can't have too much of it), for instance, whom do you protect? Nobody but guttersnipe rag-pickers and old maids, who save up rags to buy snuff, and tin peddlers who trade tin dippers and skimmers occasionally for a flour-sack full of bad-smelling rags. Are the rag-pickers and old maids your principal constituents?

The newspapers of the country believe that they are entitled to some consideration at your hands. They are, in many instances, the instruments through which many of you have attained the positions you now hold, and they never have got much of anything from you except Patent Office reports and agricultural documents. They have sat up nights for you, and done dirty work that may bar them out of all participation in the chariot races in the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, and now they demand that you protect them from the ravages of the type-founding and paper making grasshoppers, before it is everlastingly too late.

Not being one of the "—— literary fellers" so touchingly alluded to by the great Senator Simon Cameron, this epistle to you Corinthians may be a little raw, and not as polished as it should be, but it tries to represent the feelings of the newspaper men of Wisconsin in language that the wayfaring man, though a diabolical idiot, can understand, and it means business. The newspapers are desperate, and, while they don't want to go on the war-path, they feel that they have been ravished about enough by the different tribes of beneficiaries of the Government. If you great men will pass a bill to give us relief you will strike it rich, and don't you forget it.

GEO. W. PECK,
President Wisconsin Editors' and Publishers' Association.

A Sleepless Man.

Thomas McElrath has for a number of years lived about a mile west of Marlborough, N. Y. He is a farmer in fair circumstances, as also a cultivator of berries. The strange peculiarity of McElrath is that for nearly twelve years he has not slept a wink. He tried everything to woo the drowsy god, but all to no purpose. Medicines of various kinds were unavailing, and the sleepless berry-grower of Marlborough was the wonder for miles around. A few years ago an account of this remarkable case was published, and was copied by newspapers throughout the land. McElrath at that time offered a large sum of money to any person who would make him sleep. He received offers and advice through the mail from patent-medicine venders and leading physicians throughout the United States and Canadas. One San Francisco man was positive he could "fix him," but he didn't.

The long, weary nights passed on, month after month, but Mr. McElrath slept not. Some persons insinuated that he slumbered and was not aware of the fact. His family and neighbors sat up night after night and watched, but "not a wink of sleep did Thomas have." The fact that Mr. McElrath remained in good health, and gained instead of lost flesh, and continued to work hard daily throughout the summer season, was something that philosophers and physicians alike could not explain. McElrath was indeed a phenomenon, and his case without a parallel. He was positive that he did not sleep, and invited investigation. But his hours of wakefulness came to an end on Friday night of last week, when, for the first time in over eleven years, he slept one long, delicious sleep, and awoke on the following morning refreshed and happy. Words were inadequate to express his feelings both of surprise and pleasure. Since then he has slept naturally every night, and to all present appearances he will not lack for the necessary sleep hereafter. McElrath was born in the North of Ireland. He is a rigid Presbyterian, and for many years an attendant of the Marlborough Presbyterian Church.—Exchange.

A Marriage for Money.

In New York city a princely mansion was offered for sale, a few years ago, about which hung a sad story. A man of enormous wealth lived to the age of 60 without marrying; then he proposed to a beautiful, brilliant young girl, who belonged to a large but poor family.

She hesitated long before accepting him; his habits, morals, person, were all obnoxious to her, for she was a girl of pure, refined tastes.

But to be the wife of a millionaire; to go to Europe; to reign like a Queen in the city where she had lived on the income of a servant—these were temptations too strong for her, as they are for too many American women.

She married him without a particle of love or respect; sold herself as absolutely for money as ever slave was sold.

Her husband paid for his purchase. Before the marriage he built a magnificent dwelling; architecture, sculpture, painting, gave of their best to make it fit for the home of a royal lady; there was a Chinese room, a Persian room, a Hindoo room; there were conservatories, picture galleries, dainty boudoirs. The plan was that the bride should spend one winter in this regal home, and in the spring go to Europe for a two years' visit.

Two weeks after the wedding, the bridegroom was struck down with paralysis, and for fifteen years lay on his bed a helpless, querulous invalid, nursed by his wife. The mansion was closed, excepting in the sick man's apartments, and resembled a gigantic tomb. By the terms of his will his wife would inherit nothing if she deserted him. She remained faithful, therefore, only to find after his death that his estate was as hollow a sham as her marriage, and that it was swallowed up in his debts.

Not all marriages for money end as dramatically as did this, but they are as tragic in reality. The young girl who sells her life for a price inevitably reaps disappointment and misery.

Comfort on a Railroad Train.

There is nothing more disagreeable to a weary traveler than dirty cars, unbalanced tracks and dingy stations. In this respect Western railroads are fast improving, and the day is not far distant when they will excel their Eastern competitors in neatness, comfort and rapidity of transit. Of the many roads leading west from Chicago, the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific may properly be classed as one of the best, if not the best. This road is magnificently equipped throughout, carefully managed in all its departments, officered by competent and prudent men who are gentlemanly and courteous to its patrons, and its tracks are always in excellent condition. The cars and other rolling-stock of this road are the very best that money can produce, and, while trains are run promptly on time, no pains are spared for the safety, convenience and comfort of passengers. On account of its wide reputation as a first-class road, and the very few accidents which have occurred upon it, the Rock Island is now enjoying its full share of the "boom" of increasing business. The line is double-tracked through the State of Illinois, and during the present season a second track will be laid through Iowa, thus making it the first double-track railroad from Chicago to Council Bluffs. Readers intending to "go West" should make a note of these facts, and enjoy a trip over the Rock Island.—Chicago Ledger.

HOUSEWIVES are interested in knowing that the paper manufacturers of this city are now paying 3¼ cents per pound for common mixed rags; for clean white rags they are paying from 5¼ to 6 cents per pound. In view of these facts, no housewife ought to sell her common rags to peddlers for less than 2¼ cents, nor clean cotton rags for less than 4¼ cents.—Chicago Journal.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED,
ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

The costs involved in a lawsuit about a calf valued at $10, which has just been decided at Leavenworth, Kan., amounted to $900.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts, whose charitable deeds have made her name famed and revered throughout all Great Britain and Europe, inherited in 1837 $20,000,000, the income of which she annually dispenses on worthy objects.

Two Belgian exploring expeditions are now on the march in Africa. There are also French and Italian exploring parties in that country. Various Englishmen, Germans and Americans are also independently invading that mysterious land.

There is a perfect rage for fur in Paris. Ladies are wearing dresses of it, gentlemen, caps and trimmings for coats, and moreover the latter are trying to bring in a fashion of 100 years ago, and carry muffs when skating or walking. Once upon a time a small muff was recognized as part of a military uniform.

Mr. Weaver, of Bogota, South America, has written a long letter to Agricultural Commissioner Le Duc on the cinchona tree, in which he says very decidedly that this useful tree can be easily and profitably cultivated in North California, Oregon, the Colorado valley, Texas, Northern Georgia, and Alabama, and probably in Virginia.

Capt. Hemphill and his bride are sailing down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, on their honeymoon tour, in a boat built expressly for the purpose. No other soul is aboard the craft, which is gayly bedecked with flags and evergreens, and is greeted on the way with steam whistles and cannon, the bridegroom being a popular man and known to all steamboat men.

A citizen of Aurora, Ill., purchased United States bonds to the value of $3,750 in Chicago, and, to escape his creditors, registered them under an assumed name. He afterward assigned them under the same name. The First Comptroller of the Treasury, who was asked to state whether an assignment under such circumstances was a legal transfer, says he thinks it was valid, as the assignment was made in the name under which they were registered, even though that name was a fraudulent one.

Leadville is a place of strong contrasts. The characteristics of a new mining town are seen there yet; gambling hells and bar-rooms are more numerous than any other places of business, the pistol and the knife are in common use, highwaymen rob the stages close by, and desperate adventurers abound; but opposed to these things is a strong desire for law and order, schools and churches are being established, and it is thought that the civilization of Leadville will soon be accomplished.

Edward S. May, of Detroit, was a juror in a case against some tobacco dealers who had defrauded the revenue. He went privately to the residence of the defendants and asked what they would give to secure a disagreement of the jury. They shrewdly told him that he must serve them without pay, or they would expose his dishonesty. He saw that they had him at a disadvantage, and obediently refused to agree with the eleven other jurors on a conviction. But his visit to the defendants came out, after all, and he was fined $100.

Signor Brumidi, the aged artist who died recently in Washington, was an interesting character. His work in America has been chiefly confined to frescoing the walls of the National Capitol—though a little work of his is shown outside, as the great altar piece at St. Stephen's Church, in New York city—years having been occupied by him, at good pay, in decorating the rotunda of the Capitol alone. Brumidi was not a Michael Angelo, though holding to the National Capitol of the United States much the same relation as did Angelo to St. Peter's at Rome. The frescoes of Brumidi were immense, and have been subject to much criticism, which will die away as age mellows his work and leads the critics to submit their minds to the generalization which the artist begged for his work when spreading it on the broad surfaces of the vast structure which stands as the treasure-house of such artistic genius as he possessed.

It is stated that new applications for pensions are pouring into the Interior Department at the rate of 7,000 per month. Where they come from is a mystery. Some 250,000 pensioners are now on the rolls, and over 200,000 claims are pending, and these numbers indicate that nearly one-half of the men enlisted in the Union army were either killed, wounded or disabled by disease while in the service. It is certainly an extraordinary fact that, after a lapse of fifteen years, some 233 persons should daily discover that they are entitled to relief from the Government.

Samuel, one of the New Lebanon Shakers, was killed by lightning. Mary, a Shaker spirit medium, says that she met him a few days afterward, and that the following conversation was held: "Samuel! What in the world does this mean?" "I do not know. I go to the shop and the boarding-house, and no one notices me. What is the meaning of all this, Mary?" "Why, Samuel, don't you know that you are dead?" "Dead! Why, no. I am not dead." "Surely you are. You were struck by lightning a week ago last Thursday and killed, and we buried you in the yard yonder." "Mary, is that really so?" "Certainly it is." "Then, good bye, Mary." He disappeared, and Mary has never seen him since.

The Secretary of War has made a statement showing that the business of giving away condemned cannon by Congress for monuments all over the country has got to stop, because the supply of cannon is exhausted. The following statement shows the number of cannon already given away, and their value: "In 1870 there were given away 195 bronze cannon, worth $22,638.60, with $1,275 worth of iron cannon; in 1871, forty-three bronze cannon, worth $3,333.76, and $1,240 worth of iron; in 1872, seventy-five of bronze, worth $8,900, and $556 worth of iron; in 1873, 110 of bronze, worth $31,522; in 1874, 136 of bronze, worth $15,709; in 1875, fourteen of bronze, worth $3,602. In 1876 only four bronze cannon were given, and in 1877 none; but in 1878 the number rose to twenty-four, and in 1879 to thirty-seven. The total weight of the bronze cannon given for these purposes was 512,739 pounds, and of iron 357,084 pounds. The value of these cannon was $111,245." There are now only 268 condemned bronze cannon left, and 220 of iron; and of these 120 have already been given away, and are waiting to be called for. The Gettysburg memorial and the Lincoln monument need more bronze cannon than can be furnished from the stock on hand. If these monuments are to be completed according to their designs, Congress cannot give away another gun.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Cream Candy.—A pound of sugar, half a teaspoonful vinegar, table-spoonful of butter; boil fifteen minutes, and stir it up only once at the first.

Cake Without Eggs.—Three teacups of cream, two of sugar, one teacup corn starch, three of flour, one teaspoon baking powder, pinch of salt. Flavor.

Doughnuts.—One cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup of milk, nutmeg, two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar, one teaspoonful saleratus, a piece of butter the size of an egg.

Potted Fresh Fish.—Clean, wash and let remain over night in cold, salted water. For six pounds of fish allow three ounces of salt, two of ground pepper, two of allspice and one of cloves. Into an earthen jar put alternate layers of fish and spice with a dust of flour and a few bits of butter. Pour over equal parts of vinegar and water till the fish is well covered, tie a floured cloth over the top to prevent the steam escaping and bake five hours. Let remain until cold, then cut in slices.

Cream-of-Tartar Biscuit.—One quart of flour, one pint of milk, one teaspoonful of soda, two of cream of tartar, and one of salt. Butter the size of an egg. Mix the cream-of-tartar with the flour, rub in the butter and salt, dissolve the soda in a teaspoonful of boiling water, and mix all together lightly.

Potato Balls, or Croquettes.—Four large, mealy potatoes, cold; mash them in pan with two table-spoonfuls of fresh melted butter, a pinch of salt, a little pepper, one table-spoonful of cream, and the beaten yolk of one egg; rub it together for about five minutes, or until very smooth; shape the mixture into balls about the size of a walnut or small rolls, dip them into an egg well beaten, and then into the finest sifted bread crumbs; fry them into boiling lard.

Pudding.—An excellent apple pudding can be made from the remains of a rice pudding. Arrange well-sweetened and flavored apple sauce in alternate layers with cold rice pudding; add a little butter and sugar, sift sugar over the top, and put in the oven to heat through and brown on the top. Any sort of flavoring may be used for this pudding.

Bird's Nest Pudding.—Take six or seven cooking apples, pare them, and remove the cores without breaking the apples. Place them in a pie-dish; next, wash thoroughly four heaped tablespoonfuls of sago; mix with sufficient cold water to fill the dish containing the apples, and bake in a moderate oven. Cherries, prunes, etc., may be used instead of apples, or tapioca instead of sago; and, if well made, the pudding is palatable, wholesome and inexpensive.

Sydney Shores, of Somerset county, Md., caused a furor of indignation by marrying his 13-year-old step-daughter. He has been arrested on a charge of illegal marriage, and will be prosecuted to the fullest extent o the law.

An 18-year-old white boy in Jasper county, Ga., is legally married to a woman 71 years of age.

AGRICULTURAL.

Spring Work on the Farm.

[From the American Agriculturist for March.]

The spring of the almanac now begins; but the spring-like weather during a large portion of this winter has allowed the spring-work of the Middle, Southern, and Western States to be greatly forwarded. For the first time in many years, the writer has been plowing through nearly the whole of January, and hundreds of other farmers have done the same. Fencing, ditching, clearing wood-land, and even sowing grass-seed, has been extensively done, as though spring had already come. Sometimes, "the most haste is the worst speed," and it remains to be seen if, after all, the season's work will be benefited. It is a peculiar time, in which caution should be exercised, lest work done too soon may need to be done over again.

Spring Wheat.—Spasmodic efforts are made now and then, to grow spring wheat in localities where fall wheat only should be sown. Spring wheat requires a cool climate, and the hot and early summers of the Middle States are not favorable to it. Nevertheless, many farmers have "tried once more," and have failed, as might have been expected, and as we have often given warning would be the result of attempts to grow this class of wheat too far south. Southern New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania are out of the spring-wheat latitude, and a line west from Central New York, will as nearly as possible separate the fall wheat and spring-wheat districts. Where spring wheat is sown, the seed should be in the ground as early as the soil can be fitted for it.

Oats follow spring wheat, being somewhat less hardy. It is thought by some that oats will take no harm from careless seeding. But this is a mistake; for a good crop, deep covering in a well-prepared soil is needed; shallow-sown seed does not tiller; while that sown deep will tiller about as much as wheat with good covering, the seed may be sown much earlier, and will be safe against changes of the weather, while seed near or on the surface will be destroyed either by frost or by dry weather, as soon as it sprouts.

Covering Seed.—Experience will satisfy any one that drill-seeding is far better than broadcast sowing; there is a saving of seed, every good seed grows, and none is wasted, and the plants having a better root are hardier and more vigorous. But a drill costs a large sum, is used but twice a year, and for a short time, and for a single purpose only. An implement that will serve more than one purpose is economical. For instance, the acme pulverizer not only breaks up, mellows and levels the ground, but it covers seed as well, and evenly, as a drill, leaving similar ridges and furrows. With such a machine all the work subsequent to the plowing may be done, and well done; for, by a little ingenuity, a broadcast sower may be attached to it. Inventors will, no doubt, in time, furnish us with a machine that will plow several furrows, mellow the ground and sow and cover the seed, at one operation.

Fertilizers for Spring Crops.—Top-dressing fall-sown crops should be done this month if at all. The returning warmth first affects the roots, and they start to grow before the leaves. The stimulant is thus needed for the roots, before the upper portion has appeared to grow. A dressing of 150 or 200 pounds per acre of any good artificial fertilizer can be used with profit on any crop, if applied at the proper time, when the growth begins to start.

The present necessity of American agriculture is larger crops at the same cost, or a less proportionate cost, than our present small ones. This result can only be secured by additional fertilizing. The present average of our crops is not more than one-fourth of that which the soil is capable of producing, and this extra three-fourths may be produced without any more labor by the use of fertilizers or additional manures—but fertilizers chiefly.

Artificial fertilizers add to the soil certain elements in a condition in which they are immediately active, and force a strong, vigorous, early growth, and so enable the plants to push out a large number of feeding roots, which find out and appropriate the manure later, when it is in the best condition for plant food.

A strong plant digests its food better than a weak one, and its appetite, so to speak, is more vigorous, precisely as is that of a strong, healthy young animal. It is with the plant as with the animal; early feeding, and vigor of growth, bring early and vigorous maturity. The farmer should study to get early a strong and healthy growth.

There Is No Fear of a Surplus.—The world's markets are at our feet. The fear that we may produce more than can be disposed of is a bug-bear and a phantom. It has been conclusively shown that, at a certain price, we can control all the European markets, and that this price, while it pays us fairly, is too small for a profit to the European farmers, who have to pay large rents, heavy taxes, employ expensive labor, and use costly fertilizers.

Think for a Moment!—There are 7,000,000 of soldiers in Europe, who are non-producers, and expensive consumers; 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 of army horses, all eating, and not working; Emperors, Kings, Princes, and titled persons of all kinds, who are supported in the greatest luxury out of the public revenues; and "the farmer pays for all." We need not fear to compete with farmers so burdened; our prosperity consists in lessening the cost of our produce, and selling it to these nations who thus hamper themselves with burdens too grievous to be borne; becoming, in fact, the food producers for a large portion of the population of the world, nearly one-half living without labor.

A Natural Gift.

There is no mistake about it—to write acceptably for the press requires a natural aptitude. Some fond parents educate their sons with the special view of making journalists of them, but it is rare that we hear of these young men after a few years. Meanwhile, some youth born among the hills, having nothing more than a common-school education, and the knowledge scraped up in a country printing office, will advance to the front rank in his profession. He has the journalistic knack, and forces recognition because he has it. He gets into a good position, not because he has wealthy parents to influence the proprietors of leading newspapers, but because he knows what to write and how to write it. His articles go in because they supply a demand, while perhaps the elaborate essays of a man educated on two continents are cast into the waste-basket. The good writer is born, not made.

Seward on Foreign Relations in 1862.

Mr. Seward talked very freely of our foreign relations. At the outset of the war, he said, every foreign Minister in Washington except Baron Gerolt, the Prussian Minister, sympathized with secession in one way and another. Their views had been changed until now they were all solicitous to avoid giving us any offense, and anxious to maintain the most friendly relations. France had withdrawn her fleet from the mouth of the Mississippi, and had dismissed her Consul at New Orleans, who had made himself offensive to us by aiding the rebels. England evinced in various ways her kindly feelings, and now asked as favors concessions she had hitherto demanded as rights. As an instance of this he mentioned that an officer of the British army, Maj. Winnie, had been taken at Point of Rocks coming into our lines without authority. He was in prison and was to be tried by court-martial as a spy. Lord Lyons had urged his release several times, but this had been refused. He had finally promised to put a stop to the frequent visits of English officers to the rebel armies, and in consideration of this Mr. Seward had agreed that the officer should be tried, but immediately pardoned. He recited several other instances illustrating the changed disposition of the English Government. And now (said Mr. Seward), just when we have with great difficulty established these relations with foreign powers and given them most distinctly to understand that intervention in any form will not be tolerated, Mr. Greeley comes forward, holds private interviews and opens a correspondence with the French Minister to persuade him that the people would welcome a mediation which should terminate the war! Mr. Seward showed a great deal of indignation at this mischievous interference with our foreign relations, and expressed fears that it might produce very serious and injurious results. Mr. Greeley, he said, had rendered himself clearly and unmistakably liable to the penalties of the law forbidding all such intercourse with foreign Ministers; but his own personal relations with him would render it impossible for him to take any steps in the matter, as it would be charged to personal hostility on his part. Secretary Usher (of the Interior Department) thought this consideration ought not to interfere with his discharge of a public duty. He said the arrest of Mr. Greeley would do great good by satisfying the people that the Government meant to punish all violations of law and all departures from loyalty with impartial vigor. Mr. Seward indulged in a good deal of lively ridicule of Mr. Greeley's proposition to make Switzerland the arbiter of our destiny—a republic half Prussian and half French, half Catholic and half Protestant, held together only by outward pressure, and represented at Washington by a Consul General who kept a "flour and feed store" near the Capitol, and who knew no more of the necessities and conditions of our national existence than he did of the politics of the moon. Mr. Bancroft, who had fallen asleep during the more serious part of the Secretary's exposition, awoke at this sally and expressed the opinion that it would be much better to ridicule Mr. Greeley out of crotchets than to send him to Fort Lafayette. The rest of the company, however, thought the matter one of too much gravity for such treatment. Mr. Seward said that Mr. Mercier (the French Minister) knew Mr. Greeley as a very prominent and influential supporter of the administration—as having in fact almost dictated its policy upon several most important subjects; and it would be very natural for him to receive Mr. Greeley's representations as proofs that, in spite of the assurance of the Secretary of State, the people would not be wholly averse to foreign intervention.—"Journal of Henry J. Raymond," in Scribner.

Why a Letter Doesn't Go.

Because you forgot to address it.

Because you forgot to stamp it.

Because you forgot to write the town or State on the envelope.

Because you used a once-canceled stamp.

Because you cut out an envelope-stamp and pasted it on your letter.

Because you used a foreign stamp.

Because you wrote the address on the top of the envelope, and it was surely obliterated by the postoffice dating, receiving and canceling stamps.

And because you put your letter in a blank envelope, and sealed it and forwarded it to—the Dead-Letter Office, where thousands of valuable letters are destroyed because the people are either careless or ignorant of the postal-laws.

And to the above we would add a few reasons why an answer don't come:

Because you do not sign your name.

Because you sign it so indistinctly it cannot be read.

Because you do not give name of postoffice.

Because you do not give name of county.

Because you do not give name of State.

Because you write with a pencil, which is rubbed off and illegible.

Because you use ink so pale and dim it cannot be read.

Because you write so poorly no one can read it.

Because you do not inclose stamp to prepay postage on the answer.

THE DISCOVERY OF GOLD.

An Interesting Account From One Who Was in California at the Time.

Albert N. Hatch, of Edgemont, Pa., writes the following to the Philadelphia Press: "In looking over my note-book the other day I came across something relating to the discovery of gold in California which I thought might interest your readers, and therefore send it for your consideration. I was upon the ground shortly after the discovery, and was acquainted with the principal actors. The discovery took place exactly thirty-two years before the date of this paper, and occurred in the following manner: Capt. Suter was building a saw-mill and had employed two or three white men, as well as a number of Indians. They had dug a race to the river and built the framework of the mill. In the evening they had turned the water into the race so as to sluice out the tail-race. In the morning one of the white men by the name of Jim Marshall went down into the tail-race in order to find out how much dirt had been washed out. His attention was attracted to some shining lumps. Not knowing what they were he gathered up several of them and took them to his fellow-workmen for their inspection. One of these men had some knowledge of metals, and at once proceeded to test the nuggets. He procured some aqua-fortis, and, after applying it, pronounced it gold and no mistake. It was agreed to keep the discovery a secret, but Marshall was to inform Capt. Suter, who was then at his fort, some twenty miles distant. Marshall took several of the nuggets in a bag and started on foot to the fort. Of the interview Capt. Suter gives the following account: 'Marshall reached my place about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He seemed greatly agitated. He asked me to go into a private room, as he had something to communicate. After we were in the room he asked me to lock the door. I felt uneasy, for the man looked wild. After I had locked the door he desired me to place something over the key-hole. "Now, Captain," says he, "do you think any one can hear us?" He then pulled out his bag of precious metal, and, emptying it upon the table, desired me to examine it, which I did, and pronounced it gold. Marshall immediately prepared to return. I told him to remain all night, and that I would go up with him. I could not persuade him to remain. The next morning I started on horseback, and several miles on my way I met Marshall coming out of the bushes, all wet, it having rained hard in the night. We traveled along together until we reached the saw-mill, where we found all hands had quit work and gone to gold-hunting.

"It is a singular fact that the same man who discovered gold in California was the cause of its being found in Australia, in which country it was discovered by James Hargrave. England, for the benefit derived therefrom, by act of Parliament gave to Hargrave the sum of $75,000, while Marshall has never received a cent from the United States, not even a pension, showing the difference between the two Governments. Hargrave and Marshall were old acquaintances, and Hargrave had just returned from Australia when Marshall met him and induced him to return to Australia and seek for gold. This he did, and the result was the finding of richer deposits than in California."

Source of Revenue.

"Who pays the revenues?" is an interesting question always, but is difficult to answer. "Where does the revenue come from?" is equally interesting, and more easily answered. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, the duty collected upon imports aggregated $133,395,435. This was made up of duty collected upon hundreds of articles of foreign production and manufacture. The following is a list of articles upon which duty amounting to $1,000,000 and over was collected during the year:

Rice, cleaned	$1,253,983
Hosiery	1,765,547
Laces, braids, gimps, etc	1,090,056
Miscellaneous articles of manufactured cotton	1,804,881

"See Me Buy His Soul for Two Cents."

Speaking of goodness calls to mind an incident that happened in one of our shops, showing again the poor side of frail humanity. A man from a neighboring village, wealthy and well known as a generous giver to various institutions, and yet close-fisted and penurious withal, was having a little job done in a shop, and as he came for the work an Irishman who had worked for him said to the men: "See me buy his soul for two cents," at the same time laying a two-cent piece upon the bench where the work was. The gentleman, seeing the money, after hastily looking about the room to see that no one was looking, picked up the money and put it in his pocket. When he came to pay for his repairs he was charged 27 cents. As he had generally paid but 25 cents for the same work, he inquired what the extra 2 cents was for, and, after some urging, he was gently informed that it was to pay for the 2 cents he had picked up. He quickly left the shop.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Famines.

Famines have been lamentably frequent during the last few years. In 1869, absolute starvation prevailed for several months throughout Finland and along the Baltic seaboard, aggravated by a frost of unexampled severity, which destroyed hundreds of those who made for the towns in quest of relief. In 1871, a yet more terrible famine decimated the population of Northwestern China, many of the sufferers being driven to gnaw the bark from the trees, and even to devour the bodies of the dead. Similar horrors were enacted on a smaller scale in Eastern Russia during the great drought of 1873. The failure of the Bengal rice crop at the close of that year swept away, during the early months of 1874, at least half a million of lives. The dearth in Bulgaria in 1876, and that in Cashmere a twelve-month ago, are still fresh in public memory, while the present year has been ushered in by three distinct famines—in Ireland, in Silesia and in the Persian province of Seistan.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The cost of passenger locomotives of ordinary size is about $12,000; heavier cost as high as $20,000.

The Congregationalists have in London 246 churches, 70 of which report 16,205 worshipers. In England and Wales they have 4,348 churches and stations and 2,718 ministers.

The oldest European language is the Basque language, which is spoken in the Basque provinces, Spain, and is also prevalent in Navarre. It is now spoken by about 600,000 Spanish and French. Its native name is Eskuara.

The American Board has expended more than $1,200,000 on missions among the Indians, and gathered 50 churches with 4,000 members. The mission among the Dakotas returns eight churches and 600 members.

The return of the number of wolves and other wild animals killed last winter in France has just been published, and shows the following results: Wolves, 402; young wolves, 153; foxes, 6,771; badgers, 5,036; wild boars, 5,328.

There were in this country, at the end of 1879, about 84,000 miles of railroad; in Great Britain, according to the latest accurate statistics, 11,369 miles; in Prussia, 8,646 miles; France, in 1870, 10,847; and Russia, in 1874, had 10,725 miles.

The last year showed a great increase in the number of emigrants sailing from Liverpool. The returns for the year show that 117,914 persons left England. Of these 68,861 were English and 13,004 Irish, the rest being chiefly foreigners. There was a total increase of 46,762 as compared with the previous year.

The returns of vessels launched in the Clyde in 1879 show a falling off of 49,150 tons as compared with 1878, but an increase of 3,493 tons as compared with 1877. Altogether last year 170 vessels, of an aggregate tonnage of 173,438, were launched, as compared with 236 vessels and 222,359 tons in 1878. A feature of last year's work was a fleet of steel vessels aggregating 18,808 tons.

Nearly 300,000,000 postal cards were used in the United States last year. They are made at Holyoke, Mass., by a private concern, under the general supervision of a Government officer. The work is nearly all done by machinery, even to counting and putting them up in packages of twenty-five. The use of postal cards is said to have driven many makers of writing paper and envelopes out of business.

It is estimated that among the English-speaking population of the world there are 18,000,000 Episcopalians, 16,000,000 Methodists, 13,500,000 Roman Catholics, 10,250,000 Presbyterians, 8,000,000 Baptists, 6,000,000 Congregationalists, 1,000,000 Unitarians. Of minor religious sects there are 1,500,000 adherents, and 8,500,000 are of no particular religion.

The great cast steel manufactory at Essen, in Germany, has existed since 1810. It has been conducted by the present owner, Herr Alfred Krupp, since 1826, and since 1848 for his sole account. The number of workmen at the close of 1877 amounted to 8,500. There are in these works 1,648 furnaces, 77 steam hammers, the largest of all weighing fifty tons, 18 trains of rolls, and 1,063 machine tools. One of the steam engines at Essen is 1,000 horse power. When all existing facilities are employed, the works can produce in twenty-four hours 2,700 rails, which will lay 11½ miles of line, 150 locomotives and car axles, 180 car wheels, 1,000 railroad springs, 1,500 grenades, etc. In one month there can be produced 304 field guns and guns of large caliber. At the various works of Herr Krupp there were also employed 5,300 workmen in addition to those already enumerated. The mines attached to the works embrace four coal mines and 562 iron-ore mines, including iron mines near Bilboa, in Spain.

A Zach Chandler Story.

A citizen of Washington was walking up Pennsylvania avenue, just after the first battle of Bull Run had filled the town with dismay and despondency, and chanced to encounter Senator Zach Chandler, greatly excited over the disastrous defeat, and swearing like a Templar. The Senator seized him by the arm—the two had been friends for years—and said: "Let's go right up and see Lincoln. Something's got to be done, or the country's gone to —— sure." In a few minutes they entered the White House, and found Lincoln—he had evidently been weeping—with his wife, in the Blue room, in a state of agitation. The President held out his hand, exclaiming: "My God, Chandler, I'm glad to see you. We are ruined, ruined. What shall be done?" "Done?" echoed the Senator; "what must be done is this: You must write out a proclamation at once, calling for 300,000 men." Lincoln expostulated. He had not yet had a Cabinet meeting, but he was to have one that evening. "We can't wait," argued Chandler; "we must have the proclamation immediately. It will give confidence to the nation. Without it we'll be in anarchy before a week. Come, Mr. President, there's not a minute to lose," and he urged Lincoln to a desk on which writing materials lay. "I'll wait for the document and take it to the Associated Press, and to-morrow it will be over the country." The proclamation was hurriedly written out, and carried off by Chandler.

An Iowa paper says that "the Des Moines ladies have made a compact to remain at home Friday afternoons to receive calls." But if they all remain at home who will do the calling?

BURIAL OF GEO. H. K. MOSS.

The Last Sad Rites Performed by a Multitude of Sorrowing Friends.

In response to notices of the death of the late Geo. H. K. Moss, issued by DeKalb lodge No. 214, F. and A. M., and others issued by the members of the bar and county officers of DeKalb county, a large number of persons from this and adjoining counties assembled at Auburn Thursday last to take part in the obsequies. A large and imposing procession was formed near the public square, under the direction of the Masonic fraternity. The Butler band, followed by Sir Knights in uniform, a large number of Master Masons, the Waterloo Rifles and the Union ex-soldiers association of Auburn proceeded to the late residence of the deceased and escorted the remains to the Presbyterian church, where those who were so fortunate as to gain admission had the pleasure of listening to the following appropriate

REMARKS BY REV. H. JOHNSON:

There are hours when the heart will not permit the intellect to speak calmly and wisely. The hour that calls us to this temple is one of those hours. Propriety, too, forbids that we multiply our words upon this occasion. That we may speak with calmness and brevity let us read our thoughts. We meet to-day in the name of friendship and sorrow. But while expressing our sorrow at this altar the words of the wise man come to us: "Sorrow is better than laughter." This being true, our sorrow is not without its meaning. Sorrow is better than laughter because in the words of the wise man, "by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better." Sorrow and laughter are two great oceans upon whose shores we have all stood. But according to the statement of Solomon we shall find our richest gems along the seashore of sorrow. Standing, then, upon this seashore, let us contribute a few words to the memory of our friend and fellow-citizen. We are indebted to our friend, James E. Rose, for the facts and dates which shall serve as points of departure in what we may say in memory of Mr. Moss.

When you stand upon the banks of some noble river which carries great ships to the sea, you are led to ask, "Whence is this river? In what land does it begin its flow? What streams have contributed to its growth?" So when an human life reaches a responsible position in society or in the state, you are led to ask, "Whence and where was this one born? What influences have colored and directed his life?" The most humble life is worthy of study. There are heroes all around us; and if we do not see them it is because our eyes are not open. Carlyle says, "Great men, taken up in any way, are profitable company." But it is our opinion that a man may have the elements of a great man without being a king or a conqueror, or a poet or a statesman. There may be better material for greatness in some humble man than can be found in many a one whom history calls great. A man who in the presence of poverty and poor health makes his own way to a responsible position, has within him the stuff out of which great heroes are made. But in studying the life of a fellow-citizen we must limit ourselves to his surroundings. We must measure him by the men in whose presence he has done his work. Thus measuring our friend, it will not be extravagant to say that he was one of the first and most honored citizens of our county. You know the story of his short life. He was born in Ceresco, Calhoun county, Michigan, June 14, 1848, and was left fatherless in the year 1851, upon the death of his father, the Rev. Hiram Moss. In May 1858, when but ten years of age, he came with James E. Rose to Indiana. And in Mr. Rose he found a father who directed the current of his early years. In his family he remained until 1864, when he went into the army. But in 1870 he became a law student in the office of Mr. Rose, at Butler, Indiana, and when his preceptor moved to Auburn in 1872 he left the business of his office with Mr. Moss. Now the real work of life begins. However, we must remember that when he stood alone as a lawyer he was but 24 years of age. But he was ambitious to succeed, and success came as a fruit of his industry. Of course success is a thing of degrees. But when a young man of 24 years of age has a living practice in the legal profession he is to be congratulated. But success did not spoil him; although possessing poor health, he labored on. When most of us with his poor health would have paused in life's work, he toiled and hoped for a better day. And if we speak from the standpoint of success, the better day came; because in 1874 he was elected clerk of the circuit court of this county. He carried such industry and system into his new office as to win a high reputation. His popularity was such after serving the people four years that he was re-elected in October 1878.

But in our haste let us not forget his home-life. From the day of his marriage, May 15, 1878, he was a lover of his home. To him it was the dearest place in the world—a paradise where he found love, sympathy and care. And we think that had it not been for the good care that he received in his home he would not have been spared to his friends as long as he was. Hence his home not only multiplied his happiness, but also his days and years. The words of Emerson are true of our late friend: "The household is the home of the man as well as of the child. The events that occur therein are more near and affecting to us than those which are taught in senates and academies." Nothing pleased him more than to carry comfort and beauty into his home. And the highest compliment that we can pay him at this hour is to write him down a faithful husband and a lover of his home. But passing from his relation to the state and the home, let us study his relation to religion. We say with Carlyle, "That a man's religion is the chief fact with regard to him." Mr. Moss was in one sense a child of the church, because he was born in a christian family. His father, the Rev. Hiram Moss, was a Methodist clergyman, and his mother, we understand, was an earnest christian woman. Although his father died before a father's example would tell upon the future of a son, yet his early years must have been colored by the example of his mother. And when all is said we must concede that a mothers influence is the most potent factor along the path of religious education. A deep thinker does not put the case too strongly when he writes: "From the closets of the great schools we go forth with empty hands compared with the treasures which we carry from the bosom of the noble mother." So far as we can learn, he was always reverent toward sacred things; but be this as it may, George Moss died a christian. About three months ago he returned from the west to die in his own home and in the presence of his fellow-citizens. During the three months of his intense suffering he made a personal surrender of himself to God, and exercised faith in the Saviour of the world. Many of you have known him as a citizen, but none of us have known him as a praying, trusting christian. You are so anxious to hear something about his religious life that you will excuse any personal reference to myself. A few days after his return from the west I called upon him, and, he leading the way in part, we talked of God's love and mercy. During that conversation I discovered that George Moss had tender thoughts upon religion. But we must hasten. Some two weeks since the Rev. Mr. Norris of our city called upon him. Both being Knights Templar, Mr. Norris tells me that he approached him by way of a fundamental doctrine in the creed of Knights Templar. I am informed that when a Mason becomes a Knight Templar he assents to the proposition that Christ is the savior of the world. Well, Mr. Norris asked him how he received the proposition that Christ is the savior of the world when he became a Knight Templar. Said he: "I received it then seriously, but now I wish to receive it feelingly and personally." And as Mr. Norris was about to retire, Mr. Moss said to him: "Tell me more about Christ." But the words, "tell me more about Christ," reveal the fact that he was already a christian sitting at the feet of the world's Savior. During the afternoon of the same day, upon his own request, Mr. Norris and myself, in the presence of a few friends, administered to him the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Upon last Monday, the day before he died, I called upon him to say good-bye, as I never expected to see him again in the flesh. In a whisper we talked about the great salvation, and he said: "I believe that the Savior came into the world for no other object but to save sinners. I have met with a thorough change. Pray for me that I may die." I said good-bye, and that was the last time I ever saw George Moss in the flesh. When upon the following day I looked upon his face again, his spirit had gone to God who gave it. There was something beautiful in his thoughts upon death. As some traveler in a foreign land would gladly step upon a ship that would carry him to the dear home across the great sea, so our friend looked upon death as going home. Let me say in conclusion, that the door through which he entered the kingdom was Jesus Christ, the savior of the world. And the Savior says to us all: "I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved."

After the sermon the body was deposited in its last resting place, the funeral ceremonies being conducted by Right Eminent S. T. Williams, grand commander of Indiana, assisted by J. B. Kimball, acting prelate.

The following Knights Templar were present, most of whom are members of Apollo commandery No. 19, Kendallville, Indiana: S. T. Williams, R. E. G. C., of Indiana; J. B. Kimball, E. C.; Geo. W. FORREST LODGE NO. 239, F. & A. M. BUTLER, INDIANA.

At the regular communication of Forrest lodge No. 239, F. & A. M., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to draft resolutions in memory of our worthy deceased brother, Geo. H. K. Moss, to be put on the records of this lodge, and also that copies be sent to the widow of the deceased, and to the several county papers for publication.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Whereas, our deceased brother, Geo. H. K. Moss, whose death occurred March 2, 1880, was made a Mason in this lodge Dec. 8, 1871, was elected senior warden Dec. 18, 1872, and appointed senior deacon Dec. 18, 1874, in which positions he served the craft in an acceptable manner. He became proficient in the work, and was a regular and constant attendant at all our meetings, unless prevented by disease. While among us, he was an enthusiastic Mason, a congenial and social gentleman. Therefore be it

Resolved, That this lodge will ever cherish with grateful recollection the memory of our noble brother, and that we will ever strive to cultivate and practice the Masonic virtues of which he in public and in private was a living exponent.

Resolved, That we extent our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to the widow and friends of our late brother.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE ADOPTED MARCH 9, 1880, BY DEKALB LODGE NO. 214, F. & A. M., AUBURN, INDIANA.

Whereas, it has become our sorrowful duty to record the death of our honored and worthy brother, Geo. H. K. Moss; therefore Resolved 1st. That we fully realize that in his death this lodge has lost a valuable member, the crafts a master workman, the fraternity a strong and devoted advocate, and the community a faithful and efficient officer.

Resolved 2nd. That we will ever cherish for him a pleasant and grateful remembrance of his many virtues, and the zeal with which he entered into the true spirit and meaning of Masonry, and for his noble though brief life which exemplified the sublime tenets of our order; and though he has ceased to be here, yet we believe he still lives to fill his place in that spiritual building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, whose maker and builder is our God.

Resolved 3rd. That we extend to the widow of our deceased brother our sincere sympathy and condolence, and direct that a copy of these resolutions under the seal of the lodge be presented to her by the worshipful master.

Whereas, The shadow of death has again fallen upon our asylum, and one dear to us, both because of our fraternal relations and of his native nobility of soul, has ended his pilgrimage here and has passed on to the Grand Asylum above, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved brother, Sir Knight G. H. K. Moss, who was indeed a knight without fear and without reproach, Masonry has lost a grand and noble exemplar of its teachings, society a kind and exemplary member, and the public a faithful and efficient officer.

Resolved, That while mourning our loss we can and do all feel that death, while bereaving us, only opened to him the door of eternal happiness, and we take sincere pleasure in testifying of him that while with us he ever met us on the square and his walk was guided by the plumb of rectitude.

Resolved, That to the widow we extend in earnest sincerity our heartfelt sympathy and condolence, reminding her that in each and every Sir Knight, she has henceforth while life endures a true and unwavering friend and protector.

DEKALB BAR AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The officers and members of the bar of the DeKalb circuit court and the officers of DeKalb county met pursuant to adjournment at the court room, Thursday, March 4, 1880; present His Honor C. A. O. McClellan, circuit judge, presiding, and thereupon the committee on resolutions made the following report, viz.:

The committee appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the high esteem in which the late G. H. K. Moss was held by this body and the great loss each feels in his death, beg leave to report the following:

Resolved, That while we lament that death came and cut him down at the early age of thirty two, yet we are grateful that his conceded talents, his great energy and industry and his unquestioned integrity, early recognized and always appreciated, had already enabled him not only to acquire a competency but to acquire an enviable reputation, and to leave his relatives and friends a name more enduring than marble.

Resolved, That in his death the bar has lost one of its most esteemed members, the officials of this county one of their most efficient officers, society one of its brightest ornaments, and the community at large one of its best citizens.

Resolved, That his widow be assured that her deceased husband was held in the highest esteem by each member of this body and that each sympathizes with her in this the hour of her bereavment.

Which, upon motion of W. H. Dills were unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

On motion it was ordered that the secretary of this meeting send a copy of the above resolutions to the editors of each paper published in this county with a request for their publication and also that he deliver a copy of the same to the widow of Mr. Moss.

And thereupon the meeting adjourned sine die.

The COURIER extends its best wishes.

—The entertainment given at the Methodist church last Saturday evening by Miss Lillian Woodward, the young and talented elocutionist, was well attended and highly appreciated. For one so young in years and experience, Miss Woodward must certainly be regarded as an exception in her profession. With a few years practice she is destined to occupy the first place as an American reader.

—One of the inspired writers—inspired by booze—was a visitor at this office last Tuesday. He has written a glorious work on "The Tramp," and is now on the tramp to New York to place it in the hands of his publishers. He undertook to read a portion of it aloud but the clock stopped and the coal fire went out and we went out; and when we came back he had gone out—after another victim and a drink.

He Will Leave.

Our readers will regret to learn that Dr. Jared Spooner, of this place, has decided to remove to another locality, and that the removal will occur some time next month. The doctor has enjoyed the confidence of our people to a degree flattering to himself and friends, while he has at all times been favored with a practice that might well be envied by any practitioner in this part of the state. He has been the county physician for five or six consecutive years, and his appointment from year to year speaks well for his success in this capacity. He has also been chosen by the B. & O. railroad company as chief surgeon for the western division of that road, with quite a large corps of assistant surgeons, which position he has filled for several years with remarkable success, having skillfully performed some of the most difficult operations known in surgery, thereby placing himself in the fore ranks of surgeons of the state.

The doctor is ambitious and has sought a broader field for the exercise of his skill, having chosen Peru, one of the most delightful little inland cities in the state of Indiana, for his future home. The COURIER wishes the doctor and his excellent family success in their new home, while very much regretting that they have decided to leave Auburn, which has been their home for so many years.

A Card From Mrs. Moss.

EDITORS COURIER.

Will you kindly allow me, through your columns, to express as well as I can in words, my deep gratitude to our friends and neighbors for their untiring helpfulness and tender sympathy during my lamented husband's long and painful illness. They were like a strong wall of support to us during all those dark days, and I know not how to sufficiently thank them.

I shall, too, always remember with pride and thoughtfulness the universal manifestation of respect and sorrow which characterized the funeral obsequies. Especially shall I cherish the memory of the fraternal feeling exhibited by the different organizations of which my husband was a member, and to all of which he was devotedly attached.

Where all were so kind, I cannot particularize. My fervent prayer is that the widow's God may bless and reward them all.

Sincerely yours,
HANNAH R. MOSS,
Widow of the late G. H. K. Moss.

Almost Free.

Since last Thursday, when he was permitted to do some out-door running around, Wm. Brown, the little son of Senegambia who was sent to the poor farm for larceny, and who has since been confined in the county jail, has been at work to liberate himself and fellow-prisoners. On the day above mentioned he purchased a three-cornered file and stole two case-knives out of the kitchen, with which tools he and Wm. Butler and Lew Garfield have since been diligently and secretly at work; but their labors were in vain, having been nipped in the bud Monday night at about 8 o'clock. They had filed off two-and-a-half iron bars of the cells, which let them into the main corridor, and were making good headway on the bars over a window in the north wall, only about two or three hours more being required to release the trio. That nigger is a dangerous little cuss to have around, and the sooner he is done for the better.

More Testimony for Hall's Great Catarrh Cure.

The following explains itself:

Toledo, O., Jan. 28, 1880.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Sirs: Through the advice of friends I was induced to try Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. I have been a sufferer from that disease for twenty years past. My case was pronounced incurable and I was obliged to give up my profession. I have used twelve bottles of Hall's Catarrh Cure and am entirely cured. Physicians called it consumption. I was reduced in weight to 125 pounds; am now as sound as ever and back to my old weight, 160 pounds. Hoping this will reach the eye of my professional friends and the public in general, I am respectfully yours.

Dr. A. B. White—Dear sir: I must say something in favor of your "Pulmonaria." For two weeks I had a severe cold, coughing incessantly. I tried several (so called) cough remedies until I was induced by our druggist to try your Pulmonaria. I purchased one fifty cent bottle, and before using half of it I was entirely free from the cough. I believe it to be the best cough remedy in the market.

A constitutional convention to revise the constitution would cost less than one election under a registry law.

The voters of Indiana had a taste of registry law several years ago, and all parties were disgusted with it—republicans as well as democrats.

We shall vote against all of the proposed constitutional amendments because we are opposed to constitutional tinkering. If the constitution needs repairs let us have a constitutional convention and be done with it.

Every voter that casts a ballot at the April election is compelled by law to vote for or against the constitutional amendments, and every voter who is in favor of economy and fair elections will vote "No."

Amendment No. 1, provides that every person must be duly registered before he can vote. If this amendment is adopted in April, there being no law providing for the manner of registration, will any person in Indiana be entitled to vote in October or November next?

Amendment No. 1, provides for a registry law; it also provides for a residence in the township during the sixty days immediately preceeding each election. Thousands of voters move from one township to another in the months of February, March, September and October, none of whom could vote if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. John Schleyer, the proprietor of the Chilton, Wis., Volksbote, a progressive German weekly, gratified us with the following:

With pleasure I add my testimonial to the many already given in favor of ST. JACOBS OIL, which I had occasion to test personally. I suffered extreme pains in the back of my neck, which were almost unbearable. Having heard of ST. JACOBS OIL I dispatched one of my men to the nearest drug store, procured a bottle, and commenced to apply it at once. The pain subsided, and on the next morning I was all right again.

Democrats will please remember the call for township conventions on the 20th of this month. The notice given elsewhere fixes the time and gives the officers to be elected in each township. The Union township convention will be held at Waterloo at 1 o'clock p. m; in each of the other townships the convention will be held at the usual place of voting, at 2 o'clock p. m. It is important that democrats attend these conventions, as several important nominations are to be made. Another very important matter is the selection of a township committeeman—a position which ought to be filled by a wideawake active worker in politics.

The editor of the Steuben Republican, permitted to be inserted in his paper of last week, an unwarranted criticism written by some zealous (?) guardian of the people's interests, (and perhaps their funds) concerning the transaction of business in the Steuben circuit court, in which item the writer charges the judge with neglect of duty, in that four weeks had been consumed in the transaction of business which should have required but ten or twelve days. We have been informed by several persons who we think ought to know, that over one hundred cases were disposed of during the last term of court in Steuben county, a large number of them being old and tedious cases, and, that the greater portion of the time night sessions were held, quite frequently until very late, and we are led to believe that such is truth from the following which appears in the court proceedings in the same issue of the Republican:

"The case of John B. Mugg vs P. S. Jackson et al., action for foreclosure, was partially heard by the court on Friday and furnished considerable excitement for a simple case. About 10 p. m. the sheriff armed with a subpœna, proceeded to the residence of the editor of the Republican and ordered him to climb out of bed and appear in court as a witness, first requiring him to search the files of the Republican for the purpose of finding the notice of the marriage of Theophilus Jackson and Mrs. Sperry. Elmira Jackson, living in the southwest part of town was summoned as a witness, but refused to come. She is an Adventist and would not consent to break her Sunday, which was then close at hand. Upon the court learning of her refusal a warrant was issued for her arrest charging her with contempt of court. Her defense will be heard at the April term. Jack Sperry, of Jackson township, was in Angola until about 10:30, when he left for home. Half an hour later an officer was sent after him to bring him back as a witness, but soon after the case was continued until the next term. Jack, however, made his appearance about two o'clock, and his disgust may be better imagined than described when he learned that his midnight journey through the mud had been in vain."

Democratic Caucus.

The congressional committee, consisting of the chairman of the county democratic central committee of the several counties composing the 12th congressional district, met at Auburn last Thursday evening. The meeting was called to order by Hon. C. A. O. McClellan district chairman, who stated the object of the meeting. After the transaction of other important business the committee agreed upon Auburn as the place, and Thursday April 29th, as the time for holding the congressional convention. The chairman was instructed to issue the call and furnish the democratic papers of the district with the same for publication. The call will be found in another column of the COURIER.

RETROSPECTIVE.

BY WILLIS H. COFFELD.

Down by a babbling brook,
Among the flowers gay,
You'll find a sheltered nook
That's ever dear to me;
It brings back mem'ries dear
Of youthful days gone by,
And paints the old leaf sear
With glories of the sky.
It makes my old heart bound
With transport and with joy
To view those scenes again
Familiar to the boy.

Just forty years ago
We stood within this dell—
I well remember, too,
'Twas 'long with darling Nell—
And here my story told
Of love's fond hopes and fears.
I did not offer gold,
But only love for hers;
And then the half shy look
Of mischief and of glee,
As smilingly she spoke:
"I love if you love me."
My cup was full of bliss—
What can the matter be,
If I did imprint a kiss
Upon her roses free?

Long days have flitted by;
With cares I'm nigh weighed down;
The end is surely nigh;
My race is nearly run.
The sun but sets to rise
Anew beyond the sea;
Though darkened be our skies,
Another people see.
Though man to earth be lost—
Transported from the sight—
Yet lives he none the less,
Though in another state.

The churchyard yonder tells
A tale to me of pain,
For there my darling Nell's
Body long has lain.

Still I love to wander,
Upon a summer's day,
By the brooklet yonder,
Within the flowery lea,
And think of days gone by—
Of words that then were said
And cannot ever die,
Not even when I'm dead.
Soon will the harvest come;
The reapers now are nigh,
To bear me to my home,
To meet her in the sky.

WA KEENEY, KAN.

SENTENCED AND SHOT.

I returned from Shreveport to New Orleans after the surrender of Kirby Smith's army—all that was left of it—just in time to be ordered by Sheridan to report to Custer for duty with the Second Cavalry Division of the Military Department of the Gulf. The orders were to rendezvous at Alexandria, La., and, after due preparation to march across the country into Texas, for the purpose of re-establishing the authority of the Government—to follow up victory with occupation.

Among the regiments ordered to report to the General there was the ill-fated Second cavalry. It had suffered somewhat from indifferent field officers, but more from that bad fortune which overtook so many Western regiments in the shape of garrison duty in small squads or squadrons, so scattered as to make each a sort of independent command, which, in the end, resulted in a loss of discipline and the ruin of those bonds of sympathy that bound most regiments firmly together. To lead such a regiment into a hotly-contested fight would be a blessing, and would effectually set at rest all such trouble; but their fighting had been altogether of the guerrilla kind, and there was no regimental pride of character, simply because there had been no regimental deed of valor.

Two Colonels had resigned—one to accept promotion, and the other to return home—and a Lieutenant Colonel had failed to succeed to their spread eagles; and the majority of the regiment would have rejoiced if, in his wrathful disappointment, he had thrown away his silver leaves and gone home, too. But he never dreamed of it. Whether justly or unjustly, he was despised by his command, and only held his place by sheer force of will, backed by the authorities above him.

Such was the condition of the regiment when it reported for duty. Tired out with the long service, weary with an uncomfortable journey by river from Memphis, sweltering under a Gulf-coast sun, under orders to go further and further from home when the war was over, and the one desire above all others was to be mustered-out and released from a service that became irksome and baleful when a prospect of crushing the enemy no longer existed—all these, added to the disaffection among the officers, rendered the situation truly deplorable. In fact, the men of the whole division were more or less discontented, and would have been troublesome under any commander and any circumstances that kept them in the service; but to be thoroughly organized and subjected to the discipline necessary to the maintenance of good order, and to be forced to treat with consideration the very people whose country they had acquired a chronic habit of devastating—and that, too, by a man whom they called a "yellow-haired circus rider from the Shenandoah"—this seemed to them to be almost beyond the limit of human endurance.

The command had hardly pitched their tents and kindled their camp-fires before the spirit of reckless disregard of authority began to manifest itself. The men hated the commanding General and staff "on principle," without regard to what they did. "No Eastern man can put on style over us!" "Bright buttons and spurs don't make a soldier!" "It's too late to teach us Army of the Potomac notions!" "The war is over; why don't they send us home, instead of sending the upstart Major General, with his first mustache, to lord it over us?" These were such speeches as one could hear at almost any hour of the day or evening, when wandering through the camp, and they were delivered with such emphasis and ill-suppressed bitterness that the effect was exceedingly ugly.

Immediately the men, singly and in squads, began to go on extemporaneous raids through the adjoining country, robbing and plundering indiscriminately in every direction.

They seemed to have no idea that a conquered and subdued people could possibly have any rights that the conquerors were bound to respect. But such expeditions could not be permitted; indeed, the General was under orders to treat the people kindly and considerately, and he obeyed orders with the same punctiliousness with which he exacted obedience from his command. Therefore, the most rigorous and explicit orders were issued against "jayhawking" of every kind, and the offenders were severely punished. But the ordinary punishments were found to be utterly inadequate. The guard-house, police-duty, extra duty, etc., had lost their terrors; and punishments had to be devised that would reach a class of men and offenses unprovided for in the "regulations."

The storm which had been brewing so many months in the ranks of the Second cavalry, suddenly burst upon it. A paper, demanding the resignation of the Lieutenant Colonel, had been largely signed by officers and men, and presented to him. This was the flint that struck out fire. In half an hour the officers whose names appeared on that fatal list were deprived of their swords, and the catastrophe was no longer to be avoided. Blood was in the eyes of the soldiers, and none in the cheeks of the officers—vengeance was in the hearts of the men, and fear in the souls of the commanders. There was a quick roll of the drum—a few explosive orders—a sudden rush—a sort of dizzy whirl; the Lieutenant Colonel narrowly escaped, and, by a quick movement of the guard, a sergeant and several men, whose names were on the paper, were arrested and lodged in the guard-house. A double force was posted to prevent the rescue of the prisoners—and the immediate danger was over.

After the storm, the calm. The anxiety of some men to get into trouble is only exceeded by their solicitude to get out of it. It happened so with these. The violent and headlong haste of the action was eclipsed only by the reaction. To the swordless officers musing in their separate tents, and the imprisoned soldiers discussing the affair between their bars, there came, in due time, repentance and regret.

Through the clemency of the man whom they sought to destroy there was at last afforded, on certain conditions, the opportunity to erase their names from that black muster-roll, and secure restoration to duty. Some quickly, others reluctantly, but finally all, availed themselves of the absolution, except one—the sergeant, the leader, the prime mover and champion of the affair.

He scorned forgiveness; it implied an acknowledgment of guilt. He would stand by the deed; whatever the law called it, he held it just resistance to tyranny. He had sought no man's life. He had felt—"We cannot live together; therefore, do thou go thy way, and I will mine;" and he had simply said so. If that were a crime he could not help it. No matter if a thousand men were cowards, he had not the blood of a poltroon in his veins. He should never promise—touch his hat, and, bowing low, beg to have his name blotted out of that list. His soul revolted at it. He would live and die by that solemn protest against the authority of a domineering coward and incompetent commander.

So the law took him and tried him before a general court-martial, found him guilty and sentenced him "to be shot to death." The General approved the finding and sentence of the court, and the day and hour of the execution were fixed in an order that was read on a certain evening at dress-parade to each regiment of the division. And with the words of that order a cloud fell on the whole command.

The law was inexorable, and the court had no alternative. Being guilty, this was the punishment prescribed, without that saving clause which puts the offender at the mercy of the court—"or such other punishment as the court may direct." But did he deserve death? Not a man in all the command believed it. The men knew it was the letter of the law that was slaying him; but how to invoke its spirit, and whether the spirit could save him if it would, sorely puzzled them. They were satisfied that he should be punished, but by something less severe and irrevocable than death.

With what crushing weight the thought came home to their hearts that a good soldier, a true patriot, was to be shot for a technicality, at the end of a long war through which he had faithfully served! How they talked about that lonesome, weary wife, and her eager and expectant children, away at the North, watching with bated breath the opening of the mail that was so soon, if not to-day, to bring her the news of the final discharge of the Second cavalry? Who could hold a pen to write this other news in its stead? Who could send home to her the picture of her own sweet face, with the curl of baby's hair on the glass, as he had worn it next his heart so many years, through all danger by flood and field, and write the words, "This, with his undying love, he bade me send you—his last request?"

Did ever the reluctant days drag a man to such hopeless, bootless doom?

If only he had fallen on some fierce battle field, madly striking for his country! If only he had been slain on the picket-line, piloting the grand old army to victory! If he could have died in the hospital, slowly wasted away by incurable wounds or disease, or been sacrificed in a Southern prison, enduring outrage and starvation with the fortitude born of honor and patriotism! If only in any way his blood might have been reckoned as a part of the price paid for liberty and free government!

But no—none of these. The very record of his devotion to his country's cause, and of his faithful years of untiring service, was to be blotted out. His memory was to be blackened forever, and his name to become a legacy of shame to his children; and yet they knew he was conscious of no crime!

Was it possible to save him in any way? Could he be pardoned, or his sentence be commuted? Yes, but only one man could do it—the General. Would he do it? Only one man in all the command could ask it and hope to be heard—the Lieutenant Colonel. Would he do it?

The days of respite passed rapidly, and the anxiety and sympathy for the doomed man constantly increased in a cumulative ratio. At last the indispensable man arrived at division headquarters with a "Petition for Pardon," and asked the staff to sign it. Every valid reason that could be found was urged, and he went away with all our names. He fared the same at the brigade headquarters; and, by the time he reached the commanders of regiments, who all signed it, the report had rejoiced the hearts of every tent-squad in the whole division. They knew it would be granted—the General could not avoid it; he wouldn't dare to shoot him in the face of that list of names. There was a threat of vengeance lurking in every expression of joy. "If—," "If—."

Armed with the petition the Lieutenant Colonel went to the General, and, gathering up all the eloquence of all the arguments, laid the case before him. He would "consider the matter;" and the Colonel was dismissed.

A day passed by without an answer. Another, and still no reply. The third—some anxiety was manifested. The fourth—the solicitude increased. On the fifth day the old fear seized them. The sixth—not a word spoken—to-morrow, "between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock——." They lay in squads, scattered through the camps, talking until late into the night, not caring to sleep, and the reveille seemed to break in upon their first nap.

The morning wore away in the midst of its usual duties.

Seven o'clock—breakfast. There was the usual hum throughout the camps, the neighing of the horses, and the voices of the men calling back and forth as they straggled in, each to his own mess. Once more, as they drank their coffee and ate their hard bread and bacon, grumblingly denouncing the shortcoming of the commissariat, they wondered if it were yet possible for the General to speak.

Eight o'clock—sick call. The orderlies reported their latest candidates, the surgeons prescribed, the hospital stewards provided for them; and the sick men, lying on their cots in anguish, turned to inquire of their new neighbors if the word had yet been spoken.

Nine o'clock—guard-mounting. The first sergeants hastily summoned their "details," and reported to the Adjutants on the parade-grounds. The ceremony over, the corporals proceeded to post the "first relief;" and each man, as he resigned his charge and "fell in" at the rear, asked eagerly for the news.

Nine-and-a-half o'clock—the bugle sounded "boots and spurs."

There were no more questions. From the mere force of habit the men obeyed the summons; and by 10 o'clock the whole division was in motion. Silently, sullenly, the troops moved away from camp, down the main road; and, one brigade after another, regiment by regiment, were formed in hollow square around a large vacant sugar-field adjoining the town. The General and staff passed through the line, moved forward to the center of the square, and, being drawn up in line, awaited the appearance of the solemn cortege.

Slowly down the road from the guard-house it came, entered the square, and marched along the inward-facing lines of troops, entirely around the open space—the guard, the firing party with arms reversed, the wagon drawn by four large horses, with their sad-faced driver seated above; and in the wagon, with their arms pinioned behind them, each on his own coffin, facing the rear, road two men, and took their last leave of their comrades.

This second man was a private from the Fourth cavalry, and was tried and condemned by the same court as the sergeant, for desertion—the third or fourth offense. He had been a vagabond and criminal before he became a soldier; and, never having been a patriot, he was a deserter from the first, and was paying the just penalty of his crimes, without even the pity and commiseration of his own mess-mates.

The sunshine; the cloudless sky; the songs of birds; the graceful swaying of the long festoons of Spanish moss in the near woods; the shallow, murky river hastening away to the gulf; the dreary old tumbled-down village behind its dilapidated levee; the long-haired, swarthy, ill-clad remnants of the late Confederate army gathered at the street corners; the distrustful, impoverished citizens moving about disconsolately; the debris of two armies scattered in every direction; the outlying, devastated sugar-plantations covered with camps, and this one the scene of an imposing military execution; these were the obvious details of a never-to-be-forgotten picture. Down into the hearts of 5,000 men it sank—photographed by the indelible and impalpable chemicals of the mind, there to remain forever. They felt the wheels of that monstrous hearse tugging at all their heart-strings, as if they strove to chain them with their sympathies, and forever hold them back from the end of that sorrowful journey.

At last the procession reached the place of entering, filed out into the field and halted a short distance in front of the General and staff. The men were assisted down from the wagon and seated upon their coffins at the foot of their graves. Eight men, with pallid faces, halted in line a few paces before them, and exchanged their carbines for others specially loaded for the occasion by the Provost Marshal, who had charge of all the arrangements. He had loaded seven of them with ball, but the eighth with a blank cartridge, leaving the men in merciful uncertainty, allowing each to think that perhaps his was the harmless shot.

There was no more delay. Everything was done quickly and with the utmost precision.

The Provost Marshal read his warrant for the execution, drew the fatal caps over the eyes of the prisoners, stepped back a little, and, in the midst of the most awful silence, commanded:

"Attention!—Ready!"

The clicking of those eight locks was horrible. The victims stirred a little, as it were involuntarily. The air seemed stifling. The calm, monotonous regularity of the commands was excruciating. The apparently heartless and business-like manner of the Marshal was maddening.

Instantly he slipped to the side of the sergeant, and lightly pulling his sleeve, led him a few steps aside; then, before the action could be fully realized, commanded:

"Aim!—Fire!"

There was a crashing blast—a cloud of smoke—a dull, heavy "thud" as the soldier fell back dead on his coffin, and the sergeant fell limp and motionless into the arms of the Marshal, who stooped down upon one knee to set him on the other, and, pulling off the black cap, nursed him back to life and consciousness.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not been intimidated, and yet had granted the prayer of his men. He had punished the sergeant severely, and yet had been merciful to them both; he had spared the life of one, though sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, though shot.

We didn't know then that the Second cavalry went out to the execution with loaded carbines and forty rounds in their cartridge boxes; if we had, we might not have felt quite at ease—but it would have made no other difference.

BIG RAILROAD FIGURES.

Colossal Debts and Tremendous Inflation of Stock.

[From the Boston Herald.]

A glance at the miles, stock and debt of the leading roads operating over 1,500 miles shows a mileage of 10,705; stock, $181,264,867; debt, $217,639,236. These immense figures represent six roads. Ten other roads, whose mileage each is less than 1,500 miles, but more than 1,000 miles, represent a total of 13,115 miles of road owned, leased and operated. The debts of the leading roads are magnificently ponderous, almost dazing one when he is reminded of tens of millions. Here are a few samples of colossal debt: Michigan Central, Canada Southern, and New York Central has a debt of $62,604,076, and the stock is $123,166,604; Lake Shore and Erie, $102,308,203; St. Louis and Chattanooga, $32,913,900; Baltimore and Ohio, $37,670,351; Pennsylvania, $55,144,760; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, $27,058,725; Chicago and Northwestern, $32,798,000; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, $32,688,000. Beside these, there are the Wabash, Central Pacific, Union Pacific, and several other roads whose debts are on a first-class scale, not omitting to mention the Fort Wayne and Pennsylvania, from Chicago to New York, whose debt is $69,000,000, and the stock $94,000,000. During the speculative craze in September last, the transactions in the bonds of the leading railways amounted to $33,386,950, against $42,927,500 in May, and $39,997,000 in April. Five stocks alone contributed nearly one-half of the stock speculation of September—and much of this speculation was in "water," without regard to the chances of dividends being paid. In the November speculation the aggregate value of the transactions in railroad stocks was $179,399,400, about $42,000,000 of which was in Erie, whose capital to-day is represented by $155,000,000. It is estimated that $40,000,000 would duplicate the road, and $25,000,000 would cover the value of the securities and interest which the road owns in other companies. The capital stock of the road is, therefore, $90,000,000 over the actual value of the property—and this $90,000,000 is an illustration of inflated stock, pure and simple.

Almost $54,000,000 of the $89,000,000 capital stock of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad is "watered," the process having gone on since 1853. When the consolidation of these two roads occurred in 1869, their capital stock was increased 80 per cent. or about $45,000,000. The "water" of the Erie and Central amounts to about $120,000,000, and the combined capital stock $244,000,000, while the actual capital is about $130,000,000. And it is the old story, this inflation of capital stock to the detriment of consumers, which writers on inter-State commerce have almost exhausted in their efforts to attract the attention of Congress to the subject, which needs consideration, and possibly regulation, by the Federal authority. The Reagan Inter-State Commerce bill, or a bill similar to that recommended by Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and providing for the appointment of a permanent Board of Commissioners in the form of a railroad commission, is an entering wedge toward curtailing the extravagances and affecting the well-being of the commerce of the interior of the country, while at the same time it may prevent the watering of railroad stock and correcting abuses which are the direct and primary cause of high rates, which must be charged and exacted in order to pay dividends—while other companies, operating upon honest and legitimate capital and affording low rates, are either bulldozed into the "ring" or crushed by the ruinous rates of their more formidable rivals.

Icebergs.

Icebergs rarely exist more than ten years, for, despite their solid appearance, they are liable to disintegration at any time. They are full of crevasses, into which the water formed by melting penetrates; in winter this water freezes, and, by its expansion all through the glacier, a rupture ensues. "It is highly probable," says a German writer, "that most of the icebergs afloat in winter are in such a condition that a very slight cause is sufficient to make them burst because of their state of internal tension. Every polar traveler can tell how a shot, the driving in of an anchor, or any other sudden vibration, has brought about the catastrophe; cases have even occurred in which the sound of the voice alone was sufficient. An iceberg is always an unpleasant neighbor." The large bergs last much longer than the small ones, for obvious reasons.

DR. RUTH, of San Francisco, is a wonderful shot, but is no better than his wife. The manner with which this lady handles the rifle ought to secure for her universal respect. On one occasion, now noted, she broke six out of nine glass balls thrown into the air; she shot a glass ball out of one of the attendant's hands at a distance of twenty feet; and repeated the trick with the gun held upside down. Exactly the same experiments she performed with a pistol.

SPECULATION.

[From the Economist.]

Business is not healthy when it assumes a speculative character. Values are not legitimate when they are under the control of rings and cliques. An artificial demand may for a time advance prices. Commodities of a staple kind may be forced up, and on the surface there may appear the indications of a sound and healthy trade, when at that very time agencies are at work to precipitate a crash. It is never safe to estimate prosperity as real when an unnatural stimulus is imparted. The iron interest is an example in point. From an era of great depression it suddenly took an upward leap; an active demand occurred, prices rapidly advanced, rolling mills, blast furnaces and forges, long idle, were set in operation, and all departments of trade felt the revival of this great industry. Iron men were not content, however, with a steady, legitimate growth. Speculation grew wild. Nails advanced from $2 to $6 per keg, manufactured iron for buildings, machinery and railroads went up in like proportion, and now the whole business rests on an insecure basis. Iron ore and steel rails, together with fine cutlery, are again imported in consequence of high prices prevailing in home markets. If in this great industry the speculative could be kept from the legitimate demand a sound and steady market would be the result, instead as now of the fear and dread of the break in prices.

The coal movement furnishes another example of like character. Prices so rapidly advanced that a reaction has already set in. Consumers supply their wants in a small, saving way; the supply is accumulating, and there are signs of a break in the combination upheld by the large corporations.

In grain and provisions the same tactics are used to keep up prices and force values beyond their legitimate scope. Bold operators turned their attention from stocks in Wall street to wheat. They bought millions of bushels; still hold it; and, to keep the market firm, have all the elevators in New York, Buffalo, Toledo and Chicago crowded, and millions of bushels afloat in addition. There will be an earthquake among this ring soon that will scatter their prospective profits to the winds.

Wool and cotton are also manipulated by large operators in leading markets. It is true the demand for these staples is unusually large, but the yield was also in corresponding proportions. Wool has so rapidly advanced that supplies are coming from abroad, and in the near future it may be found all at once that the supply is more than ample for the demand, and then will come a reaction as swift as was the advance.

The last thing to feel the speculative movement was dry goods. It may be stated just here, however, that up to this period the movement has been sound and legitimate. The advance in staple fabrics has not kept pace with the rise in raw materials, while the demand has also been greater than the supply. A feeling akin to fear, however, is taking possession of the shrewdest merchants in regard to the permanency of values. Mills are running night and day. Large wholesale dealers have nearly supplied spring wants, and, in the very nature of things, the increased production must after a time overtake the demand. In addition the advances already made have had a tendency to stimulate importations from abroad, and merchandise receipts at New York are greatly on the increase. All this will have an effect on the market. Our exports of domestics are falling off in consequence of the high prices, and we are losing foreign markets that cost so much to command. Mills cannot go on with a stimulated production and prices also steadily advance without a reaction coming sooner or later. And whenever speculation takes the place of sound, legitimate trading in dry goods, then there is danger. The great dry-goods interest to-day is legitimate, and with less speculation than in any other department of enterprise. It should be the interest of all engaged in it to keep it in a healthy condition, for it has more to lose through forced or illegitimate values than any other branch of trade. The only thing this country has to fear as it regards material prosperity is an unhealthy and unwise speculation.

The Bonanza Kings.

Since the death of O'Brien the control of the immense interests of the concern has devolved upon the surviving partners, of whom one, Mr. Fair, is said to be suffering from an incipient softening of the brain, and another, Mr. Flood, seems to be inclined to attend chiefly to his personal comfort and to the approaching wedding of his daughter with the son of ex-President Grant. The burden of work falls mainly upon the shoulders of J. W. Mackay, whose wife is said to have sat for the portrait of Mrs. John Bryan, in Mrs. Lucy Hooper's new novel, "Under the Tricolor." The novel is likely to have a considerable succes de curiosite, owing to the fact that nearly all the characters in it are sketches of members of the American colony in Paris. Mrs. John Bryant takes the lead among them and is made very attractive. But still more interesting would it have been to have the obverse of the medal—a novel portraying the type of the husband of Mrs. Bryan, the Irish-American who sends her and her three children to Paris to lead a princely life, and who himself works in the depths of the Nevada mines from 6 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening. That a man who has nothing or little to eat should be willing to work 2,800 feet below the surface is thought quite natural; but that a man who has $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 should do so is a psychological phenomenon the solution of which calls for something more than a flimsy novel written in a lady-like style.—New York Sun.

IN-DWELLING GOD.

BY HALLIE G. T.

He dwelleth on the mountain tops,
Where the morning mists arise,
And in the glist'ning drop of dew
That in the valley lies;

And in the gloomy caverns deep,
Where sunless waters glide
And stalactic beauties have their birth,
There, too, He doth abide.

I see Him in the silv'ry stream
That to old ocean pours,
And in the wondrous bow that spans
Where "dread Niagara roars."

I hear His voice when the whistling wind
Around my dwelling blows,
And in the jingling hail and rain,
And music of the storm.

In the restless wood-bird's simple song
From thrush to whip-poor-will—
His presence is apparent
As a city on a hill.

The fragrance of each beauteous flower
Is but His scented speech,
And the glory of His eloquence
Far into my soul doth reach.

The light of sun and twinkling stars
Are embodiments of His smile,
And oh, how oft I upward gaze
And worship all the while!

Closer, closer still, I follow Him!
His language I understand;
Through every joy, and sorrow too,
He's with me hand in hand.

And when His mandate summons me
To cross death's darksome tide,
May I interpret the summons thus!
"Nestle closer to His side."

FROM 1869 to 1877, inclusive, 194 deaths—159 of men and 35 of women—from lightning are returned by the Registrar General as having occurred in England. But these returns are admittedly incomplete. In Prussia during the same period of time, with a population exceeding that of England and Wales by only some 5 per cent., according to a report from the Statistical Bureau of Berlin, 1,004 deaths were caused by lightning. In the forty-nine governments of European Russia, 4,540 deaths are recorded from this cause within five years, and 4,192 fires are attributed to the same meteoric energy.

SABBATH READING.

Bearing the Cross.

[illegible] divine! Thou who didst go
Willing with footsteps, sad and slow,
Bowed down beneath such weight of woe
As only Thou canst ever know,
What debt of love I owe to Thee
That Thou the cross didst bear for me!

The pain, the shame, the grief, were Thine,
The pardon and the peace are mine;
Springs in my heart Thy life divine,
And opening heavens above me shine,
While all my powers sing praise to Thee
That Thou the cross hast borne for me.

And Thou dost call me to the cross,
And for its sake all else but loss
Must I esteem. Earth's gold is dross,
Her favor vain, her fame a gloss;
How can they tempt me from the place
Where I may look upon Thy face!

In lowly fellowship with Thee
Let me a burden-bearer be,
And for life's painful mystery
Teach me Thy loving sympathy;
Thus so my cross I, too, may bear,
And so Thy cup of sorrow share.

Old Hickory's Deathbed

Mrs. Wilcox was present at the General's death one bright and beautiful Sabbath morning in the June of 1845, and she describes it as a scene never to be forgotten. He bade them all adieu in the tenderest terms and enjoined them, old and young, white and black, to meet him in heaven. All were in tears, and when he breathed his last the outburst of grief was irrepressible. The congregation at the Presbyterian church on the plantation, which the General had built to gratify his deceased wife, the morning service over, came flocking to the mansion as his eyes were closing and added their bewailment to the general sorrow. Shortly after this mournful event Mrs. W. encountered a old servant in the kitchen who was sobbing as though her heart would break. "Old missus is gone," she brokenly said to the child, "an' now old massa's gone, dey's all gone, and dey was our best frens. An' old massa, not satisfied teachin' us how to live, has now teached us how to die." The poor, unlettered creature did not know that she was paraphrasing one of the most beautiful passages in Tickell's elegy upon the "Death of Addison:"

He taught us how to live, and (oh, too high
The price for knowledge!) taught us how to die.

A Black Angel.

Did you ever see one?

I have.

Most people suppose that angels have shining faces, shedding light around them, and are arrayed in garments as white as snow. All black angels are thought to be ministers of evil.

But I believe that seldom has an angel walked the earth with a better mission than the black angel I am writing about. Assuredly it was an angel's mission.

She had a very dark face, but it expressed amiability, uprightness, and sincerity. You could not have mistaken either her character or her mission, if you had chanced to meet this woman, either in church or by the way. Let me describe her. She was a a washerwoman.

"I never thought that angels were washerwomen," says an unthinking reader.

"Humpbacked, poor, without a family—almost homeless."

"Homeless?"

All this, yet sent forth as a minister of good to those whom others would not seek.

She came to my study. With her was a young woman for whom she had been praying that God would lead from evil ways.

The sexton tried to send both her and her companion away, when the two came to the church. But there was the purpose of an angel written on her face, and he saw it.

When she had been admitted I learned her story. She had been employed by this young woman, who was leading an immoral life. In her visits to the rooms of her employer she had seen the degradation of an outcast's life, and her whole sympathies had been aroused. She longed to lead her back to the paths of virtue, and to God. Rescue her she must, for had not her Master forgiven a Magdalen. This became her aim—her prayer—her mission.

Night after night she followed the young woman in her evening walks in the streets. Whenever she seemed about to join a bad companion, the black angel walked between the two, her heart uplifted to God.

She did not speak. Not a word of reproach or expostulation escaped her lips. Both man and woman sometimes assailed her with angry words, but she did not heed them. She felt that she was God's messenger of mercy and of warning.

This silent, preserving, loving remonstrance aginst sin could not fail in its ministry of good. Months passed. The black angel triumphed.

Conscience-stricken the wanderer was induced to come to my study. And there shrinking, yet longing after the better life, she was led to turn from the way that leads to death, to purity, and peace, and consecration to Him whose divine love and pity can save from sin even an outcast.

I would like to give the history of this restored wanderer. I have only space to say that the black angel on earth rejoices to-day in sympathy with all the angels in heaven over a reformation, the fruits of which are abiding.

How little it concerns us whether we be poor or rich, educated or ignorant, white or black, if, indeed, our lives are angelic in their efforts to help others. This is life's great business after all. Christ's spirit dwelt in the heart of this black angel, and her feet did not do her Master's bidding in vain.

Carbolic Acid as a Prophylactic of Scarlet Fever.

Mr. C. E. Wright, of this city, has been experimenting with carbolic acid as a prophylactic of scarlet fever, and is favorably impressed with its efficiency. It seems to abort the disease. In numerous cases persons in an infected household who took the acid have every one escaped infection, while all who failed to take it were attacked. In the family of Mr. C. L. Divine, foreman of the Journal composing-room, all who took it escaped, while the servant-girl, who refused to take it, is now down with the disease. The subject is one worthy the study of every physician, and, if the theory is established, the discovery is one of the most important ever made in medicine. The Doctor puts five drops of acid in a half glass of water, and gives a teaspoonful four or five times a day.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE CHURCH ROAD.

Burdette's Interview with the Railroad Brakeman.

On the road once more, with Lebanon fading away in the distance, the fat passenger drumming idly on the window pane, the cross passenger sound asleep and the tall thin passenger reading "Gen. Grant's Tour Around the World," and wondering why "Green's August Flower" should be printed above the doors of "A Buddhist Temple at Benares." To me comes the brakeman, and, seating himself on the arm of the seat, says:

"I went to church yesterday."

"Yes?" I said, with that interested inflection that asks for more. "And what church did you attend?"

"Which do you guess?" he asked.

"Some union mission church?" I hazarded.

"Naw," he said, "I don't like to run on these branch roads very much. I don't often go to church, and when I do, I want to run on the main line, where your run is regular and you go on schedule time and don't have to wait on connections. I don't like to run on a branch. Good enough, but I don't like it."

"Episcopal?" I guessed.

"Limited express," he said, "all palace cars and $2 extra for a seat; fast time and only stop at the big stations. Nice line, but too exhaustive for a brakeman. All train-men in uniform; conductor's punch and lantern silver-plated, and no train-boys allowed. Then the passengers are allowed to talk back at the conductor, and it makes them too free and easy. No, I couldn't stand the palace cars. Rich road, though. Don't often hear of a receiver being appointed for that line. Some mighty nice people travel on it, too."

"Universalist?" I suggested.

"Broad gauge," said the brakeman; "does too much complimentary business. Everybody travels on a pass. Conductor doesn't get a fare once in fifty miles. Stops at all flag stations and won't run into anything but a union depot. No smoking car on the train. Train orders are rather vague, though, and the train-men don't get along well with the passengers. No, I didn't go to the Universalist, though I know some awfully good men who run on that road."

"Presbyterian?" I asked.

"Narrow gauge, eh?" said the brakeman; "pretty track, straight as a rule; tunnel right through a mountain rather than go around it; spirit-level grade; passengers have to show their tickets before they get on the train. Mighty strict road, but the cars are a little narrow; have to sit one in a seat and no room in the aisle to dance. Then there's no stop-over tickets allowed; got to go straight through to the station you're ticketed for, or you can't get on at all. When the car's full, no extra coaches; cars built at the shops to hold just so many and nobody else allowed on. But you don't hear of an accident on that road; it's run right up to the rules."

"Maybe you joined the Free Thinkers?" I said.

"Scrub road," said the brakeman; "dirt road-bed, and no ballast; no time card and no train dispatcher. All trains run wild, and every engineer makes his own time just as he pleases. Smoke if you want to; kind of go-as-you-please road. Too many side tracks, and every switch wide open all the time, with the switchman sound asleep, and the target-lamp dead out. Get on as you please, and get off when you want to. Don't have to show your tickets, and the conductor isn't expected to do anything but amuse the passengers. No, sir; I was offered a pass, but I don't like the line. I don't like to travel on a road that has no terminus. Do you know, sir, I asked a Division Superintendent where that road run to, and he said he hoped to die if he knew. I asked him if the General Superintendent could tell me, and he said he didn't believe they had a General Superintendent, and if they had, he didn't know anything more about the road than the passengers. I asked him who he reported to, and he said, 'nobody.' I asked a conductor who he got his orders from, and he said he didn't take orders from any living man or dead ghost. And when I asked the engineer who he got his orders from, he said he'd like to see anybody give him orders; he'd run that train to suit himself, or he'd run it into the ditch. Now, you see, sir, I'm a railroad man, and I don't care to run on a road that has no time, makes no connections, runs nowhere, and has no Superintendent. It may be all right, but I've railroaded too long to understand it."

"Did you try the Methodist?" I said.

"Now you're shouting," he said, with some enthusiasm. "Nice road, eh? Fast time and plenty of passengers. Engines carry a power of steam, and don't you forget it; steam gauge shows 100, and enough all the time. Lively road; when the conductor shouts 'All aboard!' you can hear him to the next station. Every train lamp shines like a headlight. Stop-over checks given on all through tickets; passenger can drop off the train as often as he likes, do the stations two or three days, and hop on the next revival train that comes thundering along. Good, whole-souled, companionable conductors; ain't any road in the country where the passengers feel more at home. No passes; every passenger pays full traffic rates for his ticket. Wesleyanhouse air-brakes on all trains, too; pretty safe road, but I didn't ride over it yesterday."

"Maybe you went to the Congregational church?" I said.

"Popular road," said the brakeman; "an old road, too; one of the very oldest in this country. Good road-bed and comfortable cars. Well-managed road, too; Directors don't interfere with Division Superintendents and train orders. Road's mighty popular, but it's pretty independent, too. See, didn't one of its Division Superintendents down East discontinue one of the oldest stations on the line two or three years ago? But it's a mighty pleasant road to travel on. Always has such a splendid class of passengers."

"Perhaps you tried the Baptist?" I guessed once more.

"Ah, ha!" said the brakeman, "she's a daisy, isn't she? River road; beautiful curves; sweep around anything to keep close to the river, but it's all steel rail and rock ballast, single track all the way and not a side track from the roundhouse to the terminus. Takes a heap of water to run it, though; double tanks at every station, and there isn't an engine in the shops that can pull a pound or run a mile with less than two gauges. But it runs through a lovely country; these river roads always do; river on one side and hills on the other, and it's a steady climb up the grade all the way till the run ends where the fountainhead of the river begins. Yes, sir, I'll take the river road every time for a lovely trip, sure connections and good time, and no prairie dust blowing in at the windows. And yesterday, when the conductor came around for the tickets with a little basket punch, I didn't ask him to pass me, but I paid my fare like a little man—25 cents for an hour's run and a little concert by the passengers throwed in. I tell you, Pilgrim, you take the river road when you want—"

But just here the long whistle from the engine announced a station, and the brakeman hurried to the door, shouting:

"Zionsville! This train makes no stops between here and Indianapolis!"

BY the end of the next building season the new State House will be built up to the second story, and the iron cross-beams put in place. By that time $500,000 will have been expended. The contractors have already expended $50,000 more than they have received from the Board of Commissioners.

A GREENCASTLE correspondent says that some of the farmers in Putnam county have tried hemp culture with very satisfactory results. Experiments show that an average yield of hemp is half a ton to the acre, worth at present prices $65. Allowing $30 for the cost of seed, labor and interest, leaves a clear profit of $35 per acre, which is much better than raising corn.

JOHN F. FILLEY, aged 74, was found dead recently on the floor of his house, in Spencer township, Harrison county, horribly gnawed by rats. He appeared to have been dead a week. There was no food in the house, and nothing to prepare food with. He was refused credit for flour three weeks ago, and it is supposed he died of starvation, though he had money hid away and owned a good farm of 100 acres. He lived alone and was a widower.

THE POSITION OF THE SOUTH.

Reported by Senator Hill, of Georgia, in Answer to a Letter from a Vermont Inquirer.

DEAR SIR: You ask, "Do you favor Gen. Grant for President under any consideration (as some people claim)? Has Grant any following among Southern Democrats, and in case of his nomination by the Republicans do you think he could carry a single Southern State?"

I do not favor Gen. Grant's election to the Presidency under any contingency I can now imagine. Gen. Grant does have some following in the South among those who say they are Democrats, but if nominated by the Republican party he could not carry a single Southern State.

There are a few men in the South who are still unfriendly to the Union. Having failed to dissolve that Union by secession they now hope to see a worse result practically accomplished through the opposite extreme of centralism and despotism. They believe this result can be reached more certainly and speedily through the third election of Gen. Grant than by any other means. An illustration of this class is furnished by Gen. Toombs of my own State, who sent a congratulatory letter to Gen. Grant at Chicago, ending with the expression, "Death to the Union." But this class are very few, and they are all intense original secessionists.

There are also a few men at the South who, while not unfriendly to the Union, have utterly despaired of the preservation of that Union under our constitutional system, who believe its subversion in principle has already been accomplished, and its subversion in form is only a question of time; and they believe this inevitable result can be reached more easily and with less shock through Gen. Grant than through any other man. I doubt whether both of these classes combined number 100 men in Georgia, but they are men of intelligence, and they entertain with favor the idea of electing Gen. Grant nominally for a third term and really for life.

There is a third class in the South who believe Gen. Grant will be elected by the Northern people anyhow; who know his partiality for his friends, and who expect, by announcing themselves as his foremost friends in the South, to command the offices which will then be in his gift. These last are more numerous and more noisy and less intelligent than the two first classes mentioned above, but they are too weak in every sense to authorize any chance of giving the electoral vote of any Southern State to Gen. Grant.

Nearly all the Southern people have a kindly feeling for Gen. Grant. He is stronger at the South than any other Republican. Our people will never forget his manly and magnanimous conduct toward them at the close of the war. If he had manifested the same magnanimity in his administration of the Government he would have become an idol with the Southern people. But his seeming disregard or ignorance of constitutional obligations; his use of the army to sustain the carpet-bag plunderers; his encouragement of the Returning Board frauds, both in State and Federal elections, and his unexpected subserviency to bad men who filled the world with scandals during his administration, have fully convinced our people that Gen. Grant was not equal to his grand opportunities and ought not again to be trusted with power, however personally honest and kind he may be.

It is a national calamity that the Northern people are not permitted to understand the real views and feelings of the Southern people, and those who prevent such understanding are the worst enemies of both sections. Let me state one fact. All thinking men in the South feel and believe that our constitutional system of free government is in very great peril of final and complete overthrow. With the few exceptions I mentioned before we are naturally more anxious to avert that overthrow than are the Northern people. Why should we feel more anxious? It is because our Southern people feel and believe that the causes which produce this peril have derived much strength—perhaps their chief strength—from their own act—the act of secession. While not so intended by them, they yet see that the sectional spirit which dominates the Republican party, and which enables that party to dominate the Northern people, has grown to its dangerous proportions through the passions engendered by secession and the war. If, therefore, this sectional spirit shall finally plunge all sections of our country into despotism, the Southern people feel that they will be held in history as largely responsible for that result, although such result will have been wrought by the Republican party and in a direction directly the opposite of secession.

It is thus proper and natural that our people in the South should be anxious above all people to allay the sectional heats their own conduct so greatly inflamed; to restore the constitutional integrity their own mistake so wofully unsettled, and to preserve the union of States their own madness so nearly destroyed. The fact I have just stated will explain much of Southern history since the war. There never was such a social, industrial and political revolution as that into which we of the South were so suddenly thrust by the result of the war. So, also, there never was such an ordeal of humiliation, insult, robbery and wrong as that through which we were forced to pass in the negro domination and carpet-bag rule of reconstruction. That some resentments were provoked, I do not deny. That some excesses were retaliated, I freely admit; and that some temporary violent remedies were resorted to in the desperation of self-preservation, I concede. But when the history of that terrible ordeal shall be fully known, the world will be amazed at the forbearance, the endurance, the patience and the self-controlling courage which the great mass of the Southern people exhibited. Our people were largely enabled to exhibit these rare virtues because they knew that those who inflicted the wrongs derived their power to inflict them from the passions engendered by secession, and because they saw also that every groan, every murmur, every protest and every individual excess or indiscretion was eagerly caught up by their plunderers, and exaggerated and heralded before the Northern people as evidence of a continuing spirit of rebellion, in order to continue their oppressors in power.

The Southern people have lost everything by sectionalism. The Republican party owes all its successes, all its power and all its offices to this same sectionalism. The Southern people desire above all things to put an end to the sectionalism which has destroyed them. The Republican party desires above all things to keep alive the sectionalism which has made them. But the Republican party cannot keep alive that sectionalism, if the Northern masses can once fully understand the present feelings and views of the Southern people; and, therefore, it is that the leaders and journals of the Republican party are determined that the masses of the North never shall understand the masses of the South. It is to prevent the Northern people from understanding the Southern people that the leaders, journals and beneficiaries of sectionalism have persistently misrepresented everything in the South with all the energy which the greed for power can inspire.

In the last Presidential count the Southern Democrats insisted upon submitting to the loss of a President elected by the people rather than hazard the dangers of another civil war. Yet Republican leaders who knew this fact, and who in private here expressed warm admiration for it, went home to their people and represented that the country would be in danger again if the South, with the Democratic party, should again obtain power! And every Republican partisan paper daily emphasized the falsehood.

During the late extra session it was well known that while the Southern Democrats desired the repeal of certain laws, and most especially an odious jury law under which nearly all white men in the South could be excluded from the Federal jury-box, they were yet determined never to adjourn without voting appropriations to support the Government. Yet the Republicans who knew this brazenly represented to the Northern people "that the rebels, having failed to shoot the Government to death, were seeking to starve it to death!" And all the Republican papers repeated the slander.

All Southern Democrats have admitted on all occasions that secession was settled by the war and it would be treason to attempt again to resort it. But because they believe what the constitution so plainly says, "that the powers not delegated to the United States are secured to the States respectively or to the people," these Republican leaders and journals have actually sought to create a panic at the North by affecting to believe that the South is again reviving the doctrine of secession.

These instances, with many others, illustrate the two great facts: (1) That the Southern people desire to allay sectionalism; and (2) that the Republican party, as a party, is determined that sectionalism shall be kept alive. The truth is, the Republican party is of the essence of sectionalism. Outside of sectionalism that party has neither history, nor policy, nor purpose, nor arguments. When it shall cease to be sectional, it will cease to exist. But sectionalism is the very death of the South. We can have neither hope nor life save in a broad constitutional nationalism. It is not possible, therefore, for Gen. Grant or any other man nominated by the sectional Republican party to carry a single Southern State. I admit the Democratic party is not, in all respects, what we desire. There is much in the history of that party I cannot approve, and it vacillates now on some questions in a manner which is mortifying. But with all its faults it is the only party in sight with which any man can affiliate who sincerely desires to fraternize the feelings, nationalize the interests, and constitutionalize the Government of the American people.

It would, indeed, be a glorious movement which could bring all good patriots, North and South, who hate sectionalism and desire to restore honest government into cordial co-operation. The Southern people would hail such a movement with delight. We of the South present no names for Presidential honors. I believe the very best thing which could happen would be an administration of the Government by a wise Southern statesman, for it would be the pride and pleasure of such a statesman to so administer our national affairs as to banish from the minds of the Northern people the last vestige of distrust and apprehension of Southern national fidelity growing out of past sectional controversies. But we are aware that the sectional temper of the North is not in condition to reason calmly on this subject and would not brook such a suggestion. Therefore no thoughtful man in the South is even expecting such honors. All we expect or ask is that Northern statesmen shall be presented who will do equal justice to all sections, and whose lives show that they do not regard the abuse and calumny of any section as the test of loyalty to the Union. There are many such statesmen in every State of the North in both parties, but not one such is even spoken of for the Republican nomination. I can name men in New England—even in Massachusetts—who would administer the Government in a spirit worthy of Washington, and either one of whom the Southern people would rejoice in aiding to elevate to that high position.

After all, such men must ultimately be chosen, or the people will lose the right to choose at all. The people must end the triumphs of fraud, or fraud will end the liberties of the people, and that, too, at no distant day.

Very truly yours, BENJ. H. HILL.

GRANT.

His Vulnerable Record—"A Perfect Mine of Electioneering Ammunition."

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

When more that two years ago the Republican pointed out the first beginning of the third-term movement and suggested the probability of Grant's nomination in 1880, no Democratic journal and very few Republican organs were willing to admit that there was even a chance of such an occurrence. The dullest eye has no difficulty in discerning the signs of the times now, and the last lingering doubt is removed from the minds of intelligent and impartial observers by the result of the Utica Convention, hotly contested as it was by the friends of Mr. Blaine. True, that result has been foreshadowed for some weeks past and belongs to the class of events usually called "cut and dried," but this does not lessen either its significance or its influence. When delegations from the two foremost States of the Union unite upon the same candidate, his success is well-nigh assured; and when it is known that Illinois will follow the example of Pennsylvania and New York that success becomes practically a certainty. The engineers of the third-term movement have displayed a strategical skill never surpassed in American politics, and deserve the triumph awaiting them at Chicago. Everybody knows, of course, that there is powerful opposition to Grant in his own party. It made itself conspicuously felt at yesterday's convention. It is known to possess great strength in Pennsylvania, and, if concentrated and properly directed, would easily secure his defeat. But the third-term movement is what is know in politics as "a machine." The opposition is not. That explains the whole matter. Pennsylvania and New York having spoken, and there being no doubt that Illinois will speak the same way and with equal emphasis, most of the other States are likely to fall into line without much kicking. Ohio will probably stand by Sherman. Maine is sure for Blaine, and these two gentlemen will get strong support elsewhere, but support within the range of present possibilities is not sufficient to make either of them a dangerous competitor. The Sherman-Blaine strength is hopelessly divided, while that of Grant is thoroughly united, and is marching forward with that calm confidence which is the best guaranty of victory, and nothing short of a special Providence can prevent the victory. Democrats have every reason to congratulate themselves upon the prospect. If they could have the naming of the Republican candidate he would be Grant. If they could not beat him they can beat nobody. No other prominent Republican has such a vulnerable record, such a quantity and quality of administrative scandal attaching to him, such associations of fraud, corruption, and general rottenness. He is a perfect mine of electioneering ammunition, and dig where you will, from 1869 to 1877, the "richness is sure to appear." The history of his two terms, even as written by Republican pens, is an unanswerable argument against a third term if there was no established precedent in the way. With such a nominee as the Democrats are likely to select, they can make the campaign an offensive one from beginning to end, and that they will be assisted by a large number of Republicans, rank and file, who do not want, and will not have, any more Grantism, at any price, there is every reason to believe.

GRANT TO ELECT HIMSELF.

He Will See That He Gets His Place—It Means Revolution.

(From the Nation, Republican.)

Now, what Gen. Grant's supporters propose is, in fact, that in case he—one of the candidates—should not be satisfied with the decision of Congress, he should count the votes himself, admitting such as he thought entitled to admission and rejecting all others, and that if the result thus reached satisfied him he was elected, he should take possession of the White House with an armed force and should set the majority in both houses of Congress at defiance and begin the discharge of executive functions. There are probably not many of them who like to see the plan set down in this way in black and white beforehand, but there is no denying the correctness of this description of it. This is what is meant, and the only thing that can be meant, by choosing a military man for the Presidency, because, if elected (in his own opinion), "he will see that he gets the place." In plain English it means revolution. It means the introduction into the Government of the practice of having each candidate pass on his own claims to the Presidency, and then fight in order to assert them. It means that we have reached a stage in our politics in which strategical skill and military courage are the best qualifications for our chief officer, as they were for the Kings of the Huns, Visigoths and Lombards.

Don't Whip.

The following has been handed us for publication by one who is greatly interested in the proper treatment of children in regard to their government:

A parent who doesn't know how to govern a child without whipping it ought to surrender the care of that child to some wiser person. Sportsmen once thought it was necessary to lash their dogs in training them for the field. They know now that the whip should never be used. Horsemen once thought that it was necessary to whip colts to teach them to start and stop at the word, and pull steadily. They know now that an apple is better than the lash, and a caress better than a blow. If dogs and horses can be thus educated without punishment, what is there in our children which makes it necessary to slap and pound them? Have they less intelligence? have they cold hearts? are they lower in the scale of being? We have heard many people say, "If we were to bring up another child, we would never whip it." They are wise, but a little too late. Instead of God doing so little for children that they must be whipped into goodness, he has done so much for them that even whipping can't ruin them—that is, as a rule. But, alas, there are many exceptions to this rule. Many children are of such quality that a blow makes them cowardly, or reckless, or deceitful, or permanently ugly. Whipping makes them steal. Whipping breaks their spirit. Whipping makes them hate their parents. Whipping makes home distasteful—makes the boys runaways, makes the girls seek happiness anywhere and anyhow. Whipping is barbarous. Don't whip.—Golden Rule.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES!

IMMENSE STOCK OF GOODS FOR 1880.

No Advance on Teas, Coffees, Syrups, Sugars or Tobaccos.

All of these goods, in consequence of the increased demand, have advanced in the east, but we were fortunate in laying in a full supply when the prices were way down and our customers shall have the benefit of our purchases at old prices.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS!

The consumption of TEAS the last six months has been double to what it has been since the panic; this, coupled with the short tea crop, created a great speculation in them, so much so that some grades have advanced 20 to 30 cents per pound, but our method of purchasing is direct of the importers, thereby saving the profits of the speculator and jobber, and enables us to still continue to sell to our customers at the same low prices as last year.

The Constitutional Amendments.

Below we give the proposed amendments to the constitution of Indiana as they have been agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses of the general assemblies of 1877 and 1879, and by an act of the last general assembly, approved March 10, 1879, these said amendments are to be submitted to the electors of the state of Indiana for ratification or rejection at an election to be held on the first Monday in April, 1880. The law providing for the submission of these amendments to the electors of the state enacts that the "secretary of state shall procure ballots of blue paper, on each of which shall be printed the proposed amendments, and below each amendment shall be printed the word 'Yes' in one line, and in another line the word 'No;' that any qualified elector may vote for or against any amendment by depositing one of said ballots in the ballot-box. If he intends to vote for any amendment, he shall leave thereunder the word 'Yes,' and erase the word 'No' by drawing a line across it, or otherwise. If he intends to vote against any amendment, the word 'Yes' shall in like manner be stricken out and the word 'No' left; and if both words are allowed to remain, without either of them being so erased, the vote shall not be counted either way." These amendments are designated by numbers, and are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9, numbers 7 and 8 having failed to receive a majority of votes of both branches of the last general assembly.

What is the Use?

[New York Sun.]

What is the use of getting into the national democratic convention, if the candidates nominated by that convention are doomed to certain defeat? What difference does it make whether the Kelly delegation or the Tilden delegation, or both or neither, be admitted, so long as two delegations are sent? For if two sets of delegates go to the convention from this state, it is pretty sure that the republicans will carry the state by a decisive majority.

We believe Judge Church could carry this state if Mr. Tilden would heartily support him. We believe Mr. Tilden could carry the state if there were no coldness on the part of Judge Church and his friends.

The reason we blame Mr. Tilden for this condition of things is because we think there is no good and sufficient cause for its existence. It has seemed to us a fatal mistake in Mr. Tilden's tactics that he has tried to control everything in detail. Having had the chance at the presidency, he should have been conte t with that and have left all other political and official honors to be shared by the several sections of the democratic party as they themselves could best distribute them.

We are certain that Judge Church would have buried the tomahawk and have burned the calumet on the most honorable basis—the only basis for gentlemen and statesmen—the basis of true friendship for the future, without huckstering, without terms, and without conditions. Woe worth the day was it when Mr. Tilden hesitated and failed to embrace this one, golden, grand opportunity of his life.

Now all is discord. It is said that John Kelly is a shortsighted and incapable leader; but he was powerful enough to defeat Gov. Robinson.

If anybody can tell us where in the present deplorable condition of things a ray of sunshine is to be discovered lighting up the immediate future of the democratic party in the state of New York we will feel obliged for the information.

We know the Kelly men have an answer" all ready: Kill off Tilden. "The Tilden men respond: Kill off Kelly." But neither of these gentlemen is quite ready to be killed off.

If Mr. Tilden were as adroit as he is reputed to be, and as cunning as he is in some respects able, he would have seen to it that these dissensions in the party should never have reached their present height and dimensions.

But Mr. Kelly and Mr. Tilden are both two old to be made over. Such as they are we have them for leaders—almost certainly leaders to defeat.

Mark Twain's Birth-place Again.

[Glasgow, Ky. Times.]

The following letter from a lady well known in Louisville, and a near relative of Mark Twain's would seem to effectually settle the vexed question of that gentleman's birth-place. His mother was quite probably present on that interesting occasion, and her testimony, in common reason, ought to be conclusive:

LOUISVILLE, KY. Jan. 12, 1880—Mr. Editor: I think it time this matter of "Mark Twain's" birth-place was settled. Knowing no better authority than his mother, for such information, I asked the good lady, when she was visiting our house about five years ago, to please to gratify my curiosity on the subject, which she did by saying: "Sam was born in a little village in Missouri, called 'Florida.' "It was a small place; they only lived there a short time, but that is where he first saw daylight, according to his mothers best recollection. His name is Samuel Langhorn Clemens. His mother's maiden name was Jane Lampton; his wife was Olivia Langdon. I have visited Mark at his beautiful home in Hartford and am personally acquainted with all his family, and know whereof I speak. Very Respectfully,

TIP SANDERS.

[Last week.]

Newville.

—Weather cool, and roads bad as usual.

—Oscar and Ralston Young are getting ready to go to Kansas in a few days, if the latter's health will permit.

—Messrs. Moody & Young sold eleven hundred and twenty dollars worth of sheep last Monday, which were the last they had on hand.

—Mrs. Nancy Cole and Loran Cole recently transferred three acres of land in Newville township to a Mr. Boles, for three hundred dollars.

—P. M. Lawrence, of Bourbon, has been making a visit at home, after an absence of two years. He returned to Bourbon last Friday. ALPHA.

St. Joe.

—School will end this week.

—The roads are improving slowly.

—Singing school Friday night at the church.

—J. D. Leighty visited Kendallville Friday.

—Rev. Oviatt, of Newville, preached here last Sabbath.

—C. H. Whiney has purchased the Rhodabeck property, and will soon become a citizen of St. Joe.

—G. H. Munn, Lon Gibson, D. H. Murray and Phil Smith, of Newville, were in town last Thursday.

—A telephone connecting the depot with Case & Olds' store is in running order, and the boys say it is a nice thing.

—The teachers' association of the Hosington school-house is a thing of the past, having adjourned last Tuesday evening sine die.

—Through the courtesy of D. A. Courter, at Garrett, a special train was sent to St. Joe for the accommodation of those wishing to attend the funeral of the late Geo. H. K. Moss.

—Augustus Coburn has enlisted under the banner of Charlie Dean, and has taken his departure for Alabama, where Mr. Dean has a large tract of land on which several saw-mills will be erected.

—S. B. Rex, who has been in the grocery business here for the past six months, has moved to Newville, having traded his property here to Alex. Filley. The latter has now become a fixture at St. Joe.

—The St. Joe correspondent (?) of the Republican got the name of the new church at this place badly mixed last week. If Charley will read the inscription (if he can read) on the corner stone, it may have a tendency to enlighten him some. SPARKS.

Carr's Corners.

—John Sheffer is happy; its a boy this time.

—There was a pleasant little surprise party at the residence of Calvin Grube last Wednesday evening. All present enjoyed themselves.

—The saw-mill of Sheets & Thomas has been doing an immense business this winter. They are at present sawing out ash and walnut lumber for shipment.

—A school meeting was held at the school-house Saturday evening, and it was decided by the members of the district not to have a summer term of school, but to have a six-months' fall and winter term. Several other districts have adopted the same plan, and we understand a large number of the people are trying to adopt it throughout the county They seem to think it a good plan, except that it will throw a large number of our lady teachers out of employment.

—Last Wednesday being the closing day of the school taught by A. H. Provines, a number of the people of the district concluded to give him a surprise. Accordingly about ten o'clock they gathered in, bringing their baskets well filled with eatables. At twelve o'clock a table was set and all present did ample justice. School was called to order at two p. m., after which exercises followed. A few remarks were made by John Shugars and others, stating that the school had been a success this winter. The pupils neither absent or tardy, during the term of fourteen weeks, were: Maggie Carr, Nora Carr, Birdie Calver; number of pupils enrolled, 45; average daily attendance, 35 4 7. MURPHY.

The last day was a glorious treat to the eighty persons in attendance. Noon having arrived, the chickens, cakes, and other things too numerous to mention, all a credit to number one, were neatly arranged by the ladies on a table prepared by the gentlemen, and now came a united effort to eat all there was there; but it was of no avail, and the effort was abandoned. After a social of two hours the house was called to order by the teacher, and after a few remarks he distributed the cards which he had provided for the occasion. Adjourned to meet at seven o'clock in the evening. Seven o'clock having arrived, a crowded house was entertained for two hours by scholars and teacher. The exercises were instructive and amusing. Mr. Brown closes his fourth term with us. Everything seems to be in a flourishing condition. We are united in our efforts to make every good cause a success. Mr. Brown returns thanks to the patrons of number one for courtesy shown him and for the provisions they made to make all a success. BUB.

Indiana and the National Democracy.

[State Sentinel.]

There are times in the history of states, as of individuals, when prudent action produces grand results. It has been said by one of the wisest of men that "there is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood leads on to fortune." There is a tide in the political affairs of Indiana which, if properly taken advantage of, will lead to great results. She is one of the few democratic states in the north. She is virtually a central state. The great commerce between the east and the west passes over her. Her people are not exclusively commercial nor agricultural; they are both. They are not sectional in their political principles. They come from all portions of our country and from all portions of Europe. Such a people are naturally conservative and safe. They do not go off into isms and extravagancies, but hold steadfast to the principles of the fathers, and follow the landmarks they made.

The representative of such a people can safely be trusted by the country. There is no danger that he will lead into the domains of monarchy, nor into those of radicalism. Like father, like son; like leader like people.

Thomas A. Hendricks, the leader of the Indiana democracy, is such a man as we have indicated. He is conservative and safe. He has a large public experience, and his public record is without a blemish. His private life is void of offence; so, both as a public man and private citizen, he is unassailable.

Mr. Hendricks lives in a state that can fairly claim recognition from the national democracy. She has proved her devotion to democratic principles in many a hard-fought contest, and in 1876 she virtually decided (so far as the people could decide) the presidential contest in favor of Tilden and Hendricks. In that contest she presented her favorite son as a candidate for the first office of a free people, and when the Sanhedrim of the party decided in favor of another, her democracy buckled on its armor and fought the battle as fiercely as though it had its choice of leadership. Surely such devotion to democratic principles demands some recognition from the national democracy. Indiana again presents Mr. Hendricks as her candidate for the presidency, and asks for his nomination. She feels that, in justice, she is entitled to be heard, and she demands justice at the hands of her sisterhood of states. She is not content with second place; she feels she is entitled to the first. Which northern state elected the first democratic governor after the war? Indiana. Which northern state decided the contest in 1876 for the democracy? Indiana. She it was that in October of that year elected the democratic ticket, and demonstrated that Tilden and Hendricks would be elected in November. That the fruit she produced was not gathered was not her fault. That Florida and Louisiana returning-boards snatched the victory she won from the hands of the democracy was no blame of hers. She did her duty, and should be honored for it, notwithstanding the victory she won was stolen from her.

The duty of the Indiana democracy is plain. It is to stand by Mr. Hendricks, and insist upon his nomination. It should not be put off with promises of the future, nor satisfied with a second place on the ticket; but it should insist upon performances and demand as an act of justice, no less than of wisdom, that Thomas A. Hendricks be chosen as the standard-bearer of the national democracy. She is in a position to ask this, and she should be satisfied with nothing less.

The saloon keepers of Covington, Ky., having been compelled to close their places Sunday, devote themselves to making lists of all laborers who did work on that day. They will cause the arrest of ministers, organists, coachmen, milkmen and all others found working on that day.

* * *

—We have heard of fellows who hired friends to write obituary notices for them, but the following proceeding, as told by the Kendallville Standard, beats them all:

"Jake Gindlesparger wrote a postal card from Fort Wayne to the postmaster in this city, last Monday, stating that he had been killed accidentally in a coal yard at Fort Wayne. The report did not create much of a sensation, as about the only person interested in Jake is Dr. Gilbert, who holds a bill of sale of Jake's body. It was discovered that the postal was in Jake's handwriting, which tended, somewhat, to make people discredit the truthfulness of the report, and Doc. concluded that he would wait until the report was confirmed before starting after his property."

The Situation.

[St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

Both parties have called their nominating conventions, and the presidential campaign may fairly be regarded as already opened.

On the republican side there seems to be no longer any doubt as to the candidate. Grant is the man. Every indication points that way. The machine is for him. Conkling, Cameron, Logan, Carpenter, Robeson and Chandler's ghost are for him. The great states of New York and Pennsylvania, with a solid phalanx of 128 votes, are already instructed for him. Illinois is sure to follow suit. The carpet-baggers and negroes of the solid south will do the rest. Before 60 days are over a majority of Grant delegates will be known to be elected. Then Sherman and Blaine will withdraw their names. When the Chicago convention meets on the 2d of June Grant's nomination by acclamation will be a mere form and farce.

On the democratic side only two things seem to be certain so far as the nominations are concerned. If when the convention assembles at Cincinnati, on the 22d of June, it should appear that Horatio Seymour could really be induced to accept the nomination, there is hardly a doubt that the democratic ticket will be Seymour and Hendricks. Seymour and Hendricks have unquestionably the heart of the democracy. It seems to be the solution of all difficulties and the restoration of complete harmony. Yet we regard it as entirely problematical whether Mr. Seymour will accept the call under any circumstances. We have no doubt that at present he is sincere in his positive declination.

The second important development of recent events is that of Mr. Tilden, though still influential, can never again receive the democratic nomination. The national committee, which was organized four years ago in his special interest, is a fair evidence of the change of sentiment about Mr. Tilden. Even that committee refused to carry out the Tilden programme, which consisted in having the convention at the same day, the same place, with the same platform and the same candidates as four years ago. Cincinnati means the defeat of Tilden's friends. It is not unlikely that Mr. Tilden will soon withdraw his name from the contest, in which case all danger of democratic division will disappear, and Mr. Tilden would greatly add to his prestige.

All indications point to a repetition of the democratic experience of 1844 and 1852. Unless Seymour accepts, we will probably have another Polk and Pierce campaign. When the convention meets at Cincinnati some hitherto unknown but perfectly available man will be taken, upon whom everybody can unite—the west as well as the east—the softs as well as the hards—the Tildenites as well as the anti-Tilden men, and precisely as the obscure Polk beat the brilliant Henry Clay in 1844, and little New Hampshire's Pierce overwhelmingly defeated the great military hero of that day—General Winfield Scott—so will the next unknown of democracy defeat General Grant at the polls.

Never have democratic prospects been brighter than now, since democracy stands for the preservation of the republic, while false, degenerate and degraded republicanism marches toward centralization, imperialism, and the absolute one man power—toward destruction of real popular self-government.

Physicians' Fees Regulated by Law.

The fees which physicians may charge in Prussia for their services are regulated by law, and according to the most recent ordinance the charge for the first visit to a sick person is fixed at two marks (twenty-five cents standing for a mark), and one mark for each subsequent visit. Where, however, several persons belonging to the same family, and dwelling in the same house, have to be treated at the same time, then, for the second and each succeeding person, only the half of those fees respectively are to be charged—the same rule is to apply to boarding schools and similar institutions; also, to prisons. When there is a consultation of several physicians about the treatment of a sick person, including their personal visits, each physician is to receive for the first consultation five marks, and three marks for each subsequent similar consultation. On the occasion of the first visit to the physician's residence for his medical advice one mark and a half. For the administration of chloroform, when necessary for the treatment of the patient, three marks.

Five Sundays in February.

Somebody writes to the Cincinnati Enquirer saying that, in a dispute with a friend, it was claimed that five Sundays would not occur again in February, as was the case last month, for one thousand years, and he wishes to know if this is correct. As some interesting facts are embraced in the Enquirer's reply—facts that but few people are aware of—we present it here:

"For the enlightenment of yourself and friend and those interested we will go back 1,768 years, or to the year 112. Five Sundays occurred in February of that year, and repeated at regular intervals of 28 years from 112 up to the year 644. It did not occur again until 728, a period of 84 years. It occured again at regular periods of 28 years from 728 up to the year 1372. It did not occur again until 1428, a period of 56 years. It occurred every 28 years from 1428 up to 1596. It did not occur again until 1604, a period of only 8 years. Then from 1604 it occurred every 28 years up to the year 1688, and then missed again for 40 years, occurring February, 1728. It next occurred in 1756 and 1784, 28 years apart, and again missed until 1824, a period of 40 years; then again in 1852 and this year, 1880. It will not occur again until the year 1920, 40 years from date. It will then occur again every 28 years until the year 2088, when it will again miss for 40 years, occurring again in 2128, 2156 and 2184. Five Sundays in February cannot occur in any year except leap-year, as it contains 29 days; hence Sunday must happen on the first day of the month, and terminate with Sunday on the last day. Every four years is not a leap-year, as many suppose. Every year that is divisible by four is a leap-year, unless it ends with a double or three ciphers; in which case it must be divisible by 400 to be a leap year. The year 1900, though in the regular order of events, and divisible by four, will not be a leap-year. The next February that will contain five Sundays will occur in the year 1920, 40 years from date."

The United States District Attorney appeared on the platform, as directed by Mr. Hayes, and read the proclamation warning all people from attempting to locate in the Indian country, the crowd reviling and jeering him as he proceeded. Resolutions condemning the policy of the Government, and indorsing the Vest and Saunders bills, were adopted.

MISS JENNIE RAYMOND has withdrawn her suit for seduction against Senator Hill, of Georgia, and signed a paper acknowledging that she has no claim against that gentleman, that he is entirely innocent, and that the suit was begun by Miss Belva Lockwood, the woman lawyer, without her (Raymond's) knowledge or consent.

THE Chinese agitation in San Francisco has been the source of considerable excitement, and not a little apprehension, among the business men in that city. The armories of the local militia regiments are closely guarded, and Gen. McDowell, commanding the Division of the Pacific, has been instructed by the President to move all available Federal troops in his district to that city at once. The workingmen are considerably excited over these movements, and many of them assert that the authorities are trying to force a quarrel with them. Meantime the eastward exodus of the Chinamen continues. Nearly every train carries away a lot. Most of them go to the manufacturing districts of the Eastern States; a few stop in Chicago, St. Louis, and other Western cities, while a few others are directing their steps to the cotton fields of the South.

Senator Bailey has introduced a resolution reciting the facts and providing for the appointment of a committee to inquire and report what legislation is necessary to prevent the execution of the corrupt compact.

WASHINGTON.

IT is stated in a Washington dispatch that "the subject of the tariff will again be forced upon the Ways and Means Committee in some shape or other. Mr. Fort has been promised by Mr. Wood that the committee will fix a time to hear arguments for and against the passage of his bill to reduce the duty on paper, and to abolish the tariff on soda-ash. He thinks that a majority of the committee will favor the bill. Mr. Fort is confident that a two-thirds majority of the House would vote for his bill if he could obtain a chance to put it upon its passage under a suspension of rules."....Commodore Hanscom, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, has just died at Washington.

THE House special committee on the inter-oceanic canal has unanimously voted to report to the House resolutions reaffirming the Monroe doctrine, and declaring that the United States must control any canal that may be cut through the American isthmus.

COUNT DE LESSEPS explained his canal project to the House Committee on the Inter-oceanic Canal last week. He claimed that his plans were quite feasible and practical, and argued that, in the interest of American commerce, he should be aided and encouraged rather than checked and thwarted in carrying forward his scheme.

THE Washington friends of Senator Ferry say that his name will be urged upon the Chicago Convention as a candidate for Vice President, in the event of Blaine's nomination.

NEARLY 300 colored Methodist preachers called on the President one day last week. He listened to the remarks of their spokesman and thanked them for the visit, but when it was proposed that each brother be introduced to him he objected on the score of lack of time, and fled.

M. DE LESSEPS was before the House Inter-oceanic Committee last week. He told the committee that while he was not present to talk politics, but to give scientific views about the canal, he could not refrain from expressing his delight with the President's message on the subject of the canal, because it would certainly be advantageous to have the protection of the United States during the work and after the opening of the canal. He sent a message to his son, at Paris, saying the President's message assured the safety of the canal.

THE cases coming up from Ohio and Maryland, involving the constitutionality of the Federal Election law, have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. State Judges of Election, having interfered with National Supervisors and Marshals, were sentenced by Federal courts to fine and imprisonment. The Republican members of the Supreme Court affirmed the regularity of the proceedings and the constitutionality of the law under which they were had. Justices Clifford and Field dissented, holding that it is not competent for Congress to punish a State officer for the manner in which he performs the duties imposed on him by the laws of the State, and that the Federal Election law is clearly unconstitutional.

GEORGE L. MILLER, of Nebraska, a member of the Committee of Arrangements for the National Democratic Convention, has resigned, and Austin H. Brown, of Indiana, has been appointed....Five women have been elected members of the Board of Education at Middletown, N. Y., their opponents being men.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The President Emphasizes It in a Message to Congress.

TO THE SENATE: I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 11th of February last, requesting "copies of all correspondence between this Government and any foreign Government since February, 1879, respecting a ship-canal across the isthmus between North America and South America, together with copies of any project of treaties respecting the same which the Department of State may have proposed or submitted since that date to any foreign power or its diplomatic representatives." In further compliance with the resolution of the Senate, I deem it proper to state briefly my opinion as to the policy of the United States with respect to the construction of an inter-oceanic canal by any route across the American isthmus. The policy of this country is a canal under American control. The United States cannot consent to surrender this control to any European power, or to any combination of European powers. If existing treaties between the United States and other nations, or if rights of sovereignty or property of other nations stand in the way of this policy—a contingency which is not apprehended—suitable steps should be taken by just and liberal negotiations to promote and establish the American policy on this subject consistently with the rights of the nations to be affected by it. The capital invested by corporations or citizens of other countries in such an enterprise must, in great degree, look for protection to one or more of the great powers of the world. No European power can intervene for such protection without adopting measures on this continent which the United States would deem inadmissible. If the protection of the United States is relied upon the United States must exercise such control as will enable this country to protect its national interests, and maintain the rights of those whose private capital is embarked in the work.

An inter-oceanic canal across the American isthmus will essentially change the geographical relations between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, and between the United States and the rest of the world. It will be the great ocean thoroughfare between our Atlantic and our Pacific shores, and virtually a part of the coast line of the United States. Our merely commercial interest in it is greater than that of all other countries. While its relations to our power and prosperity as a nation, to our means of defense, our unity, peace and safety are matters of paramount consideration to the people of the United States, no other power would, under similar circumstances, fail to assert rightful control over a work so closely and vitally affecting its interest and welfare.

Without urging further grounds of my opinion, I repeat, in conclusion, that it is the right and duty of the United States to assert and maintain such supervision and authority over any inter-oceanic canal across the isthmus that connects North and South America as will protect our national interests. This, I am quite sure, will be found not only compatible with, but promotive of, the widest and most permanent advantage to commerce and civilization.

The New-Fangled Puzzle That is Filling the Lunatic Asylums.

(From the Philadelphia Times.)

Various accounts have been given of the invention of the "Fifteen Game," otherwise known as the "Gem Puzzle," which is just now having a run second only to that of "Pinafore." According to one story, it is the invention of a deaf mute in Hartford, who made it for the entertainment of the inmates of the asylum where he lived, without a thought of the insane asylums for which it seems likely to make so many patients. Another story ascribes the thing to the Postmaster at Canastota, N. Y., who gave the game to a lady in Syracuse, who sent it to a lady at Watch Hill, who took it home to Hartford, where a Boston man saw it, and so on. But, whoever invented it, it is the manufacturers who are reaping the profit. It is not patented, but the manufacture appears to have been confined, thus far, to two New England firms, who are said to have been turning out the games at the rate of 6,000 or 8,000 a day, and still hardly to have supplied the demand. The puzzle is to be seen everywhere. From the Judge on the bench to the bootblack on the sidewalk, everybody is puzzling over it. The scientific people are discussing it and, for the last few days, the newspapers have been full of it. The apparatus consists of sixteen little squares of wood, numbered consecutively from one to sixteen, and fitting exactly in a shallow square box. In use, the numbered sixteen is removed, and there is thus one blank space left, which allows the blocks to slide, one square at a time, and they are thus to be arranged without removing them from the box. The fifteen squares being mixed and placed indiscriminately in the box, the problem is to arrange them in regular arithmetical series, as in the following diagram:

1	2	3	4
5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12
13	14	15

Any one can make the game for himself by cutting the little squares from a cigar box, or by dividing the bottom of a square pasteboard box, first into quarters, and then into sixteenths, and using the lid of the box, which will, of course, just contain them. Or it can be played with counters on a quarter section of a checker-board. The game as it is sold in the shops, however, is more convenient, and it can be had anywhere for a quarter or even less.

The early moves of the game are simple enough. Starting with the 1 and working it gradually toward the corner, and following with the 2, and so on, a beginning is easily made. Then you start this line in procession around the sides of the box, gradually working the numbers in in the required order. This process cannot be described minutely, but one soon discovers a certain sort of method in it, and it looks as though the solution of the puzzle was only a question of time and patience. Gradually the lines are formed: 1, 2, 3, 4; 5, 6, 7, 8, and so on. Victory is at hand, and the player subdues his excitement as best he can, while the lookers-on say: "He has it." But he hasn't. Although so near, the end is yet so far that sanguine hope gives way to despair. After working for a longer or a shorter time, according to the familiarity of the player with the method of the thing, this is the way it comes out:

5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12
13	15	14

and no art can get that 15 into its right place. The more you struggle with it the worse it gets, and the laboriously-arranged rows become all mixed up again. It is at this point that grim despair settles down upon all but the most courageous. Sometimes the 13, 14, come in their right order, while two other numbers are misplaced, but we believe that every combination can be reduced ultimately to that given above, so that the real problem is to get the 15 after the 14. An enterprising Yankee lately advertised to send the solution of this problem for two stamps, and to the many who applied he sent back the answer: "Take up No. 15 carefully between the thumb and forefinger and place him where he belongs." This is on the principle of Alexander's solution of the Gordian knot; it is heroic, but not satisfactory.

A City's Wonderful Strides.

Ex-Gov. William Bross, of the Chicago Tribune, lately read a paper before the Historical Society of Chicago, on the sources of the city's past and future growth. In 1855, after carefully studying the map, he became convinced, he said, that there were about 700,000 square miles of territory between Lake Michigan and the Rocky mountains whose trade would go to Chicago. The estimate has never been disputed, and agrees very nearly with the figures of the national census. There is space enough for seventeen States as large as Ohio, and he ventures to predict that before 1976 the whole region will be far more populous, more productive, and vastly richer, than Ohio is to-day. It will be agriculturally, minerally, and commercially prosperous beyond any precedent, and all its prosperity will count for Chicago. The history of the city for a quarter of a century past is most remarkable. The town was organized in 1837; the year following, the first shipment of wheat, 78 bushels, was made eastward by the lakes. In 1854 the receipts of wheat had risen to 3,038,955 bushels; last year they were 39,358,074. The receipts of corn for 1854 were 7,490,753; last year they were 62,194,238 bushels. The total receipts of cereals for 1854 were 12,902,310; last year they were 137,624,833 bushels, and their value $78,080,000. The number of hogs received in 1854 was 74,339; last year, 6,483,935; of cattle, in 1854, 23,651; last year, 1,215,672, and the total value of live stock handled was $107,310,000. The total value of the produce trade last year was $253,000,000; wholesale trade, $341,000,000; manufactures, $236,500,000, from which $66,500,000 are to be deducted for articles manufactured there and also sold at wholesale, leaving the actual value of trade of the city for last year, $764,000,000. Enormous as these figures are, they have been gathered, it is said, by experts from authentic sources. The population in 1854 was 65,872, and it is confidently asserted that the census about to be taken will show at least 450,000. Gov. Bross used to be thought rather wild about Chicago; but his intimates aver that every one of his prophecies, extravagant as it may have seemed when uttered, has been more than realized by the absolute facts.

Tight Lacing.

The belief has been current of late years that the dreadful habit of tight lacing is out of fashion, but there is reason to fear that it is not so much an evil of the past as has been supposed. A painful impression has lately prevailed that a young married lady, moving in very fashionable New York society, whose death occurred not long since, was a victim to the pernicious practice, and those very well qualified to form an opinion aver that there are many who pursue it. The Lancet quite lately remarked on this subject: "Surely enough has been said as to tight lacing to make it plain that danger must attend the process. The notion of improving nature by forcing the feet into tight boots, and the divers other devices with which fashion beguiles the love of personal embellishment, are sufficiently monstrous; but the audacity of attempting to compress the trunk, which contains the central organs of life, for the sake of appearances, surpasses belief. Perhaps the recent death from tight lacing, in which the heart was found to be so impeded in its action as to render life impracticable, may have some deterrent effect; but we doubt it. Fashion will prevail, and wasp-like waists will be cultivated in defiance of nature."

A Negro's Thanks.

An Irish beggar-woman, having received the loan of a shilling, expressed her thanks by saying: "May you live till I return it to you." We think, however, that the thanks of the negro of whom this story is told in the New York World were better put:

Some time ago, one of Arkansas' most widely-known statesmen, who is now dead, was passing along a street in Little Rock, when an old colored man, who had once belonged to him, approached, took off his hat, and passed a hand over his white wool, as he asked:

"Marster, gin de ole man 50 cents."

"Dan, you are a robber!"

"How?" asked the astonished darky, opening his eyes, around which rough-shod age had walked.

"Didn't you see me put my hand into my pocket?"

"Yas, sah."

"Well, you old rascal, you rob me of the pleasure of giving you money without being asked."

The old man received $1. Bowing almost to the ground, while tears came from his eyes, he replied:

"Marster, wid rich a heart as you hab, and wid Abraham, and Isaac, and de Lord on your side, I don't see what can keep you out of heaben."

That Saucy Boy.

Boy to ticket agent—"Say, that lady paid you a compliment." Ticket agent—"What did she say, sonny?" Boy—"She said you must be an oil-car conductor, the way your hair is greased."

"I DON'T have enough of religion to brag of," says an old Nevada miner, "but I never get into the cage to go up or down without feeling how puny I am, and how great my Maker is."

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

THE standing army of the British Government has been fixed at 131,859 men.

BY a vote of 19 to 10 the Wisconsin Senate has passed a bill giving the Supreme Court the power to decide contested-election cases.

THE actors are as liberal toward the Irish relief fund as they always are when want cries for aid. Most of the leading actors and actresses around the country have contributed to the fund. McCullough, Barrett, Raymond and others have sent in substantial amounts; and one theater in New York city augmented the fund with $900.

A FRENCH newspaper, in discussing the probable results of the coming Presidential campaign in the United States, expresses confidence in the election of Gen. Grant, and predicts "that his success will effect a profound transformation in the electoral habits of the American republic, and lead to many modifications in its internal as well as external policy."

AFTER all the trouble attendant on the Khedive diamonds donated to the Sherman family, they have been mounted in four magnificent pendants, four pairs of splendid solitaire ear rings and eight brilliant finger-rings, and equally divided among the four daughters of the General—Mrs. Fitch, nee Minnie Sherman, Ella Sherman, Lizzie Sherman and Rachel Sherman. The value of each set is over $50,000.

ACCORDING to Commissioner Le Duc, the wants of the Government Agricultural Bureau are numerous and urgent. A suitable building is needed for the accommodation of employes and the continuous exhibition of the agricultural productions of the country; additional divisions of forestry, meteorology and veterinary are recommended; and, lastly, the Commissioner says "the department needs opportunity."

THE bitterness of feeling against the Jews in Roumania is curiously shown in the story told of a murder at a place called Folticzay. A Greek murdered a Jew there under the most disgraceful circumstances, with no excuse whatever to be pleaded for him. Nevertheless, a jury acquitted the Greek, and the ruffian was, after the verdict, paraded through the Jewish quarter amid general popular rejoicing. There is no doubt that there is a growing hatred of the Jews, not only in Roumania, but even in Germany and Austria.

THE bridegroom was not present at the time appointed for a wedding at Harmony, Ga. The bride, who knew his bashfulness, said his courage had probably failed him. Somebody suggested that a horn be blown to call him, and this was done. A responsive whoop was heard from the woods near by, but the young man did not appear until a scouting party brought him in by force. It was not until he became fearful of losing the girl, whose patience gave way to anger, that he mustered enough courage to face the ceremony.

SOME years ago a wealthy old bachelor in Hoboken, N. J., named Joseph L. Lewis, died, leaving his property, valued at $1,000,000, to the United States Government, for which he appeared to cherish unusual respect. The singularity of the case excited the cupidity of several sharpers, and a conspiracy was entered into for the purpose of producing a "widow" who would contest the will, secure the money, and divide handsomely. In due time some of the schemers, including the woman, were arrested on suspicion, and, the case coming on for trial at Trenton a short time ago, the female turned State's evidence, implicating the villains whose dupes she had been, and detailing, apparently without reservation, her own part in the matter.

IN 1859 absolute starvation prevailed for several months throughout Finland and along the Baltic seaboard, aggravated by a frost of unexampled severity which destroyed hundreds of those who made for the towns in quest of relief. In 1871 a yet more terrible famine decimated the population of Northwestern China, many of the sufferers being driven to gnaw the bark from the trees, and even to devour the bodies of the dead. Similar horrors were enacted on a similar scale in Eastern Russia during the great drought of 1873. The failure of the Bengal rice crop at the close of that year swept away, during the early months of 1874, at least half a million lives. The dearth in Bulgaria in [illegible], and that in Cashmere twelve months ago, are still fresh in public memory, while the present year has been ushered in by three distinct famines—in Ireland, in Silesia and in the Persian province of Seistan.

THE Czar of Russia has celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne, and still lives. Nihilism to the contrary notwithstanding, the Czar is not such a very bad fellow, after all. He is, to be sure, somewhat arbitrary in his style of ruling; he declines to lend money to strangers; he does not permit his venerable cheeks to be whacked with impunity by his fellow sovereigns, and he is reputed to be a little off color in his morality; but then he has done a great deal for the good of his country. He has freed 21,000,000 serfs; done some good fighting; given his country a whopping national debt, which many people hold to be a blessing, and has kept his prisons and penal colonies well stocked with brains and blue blood. He has also been a convenient target for the knives and pistols of assassins.

GEN. MELIKOFF, appointed to supreme control of the operations against Nihilistic and insurrectionary movements in St. Petersburg, is the commander who made so brilliant a record in the Asiatic campaign against the Turks in the late war. All Governors General in Russia are given almost as much power in their vice royalties as is given in this case to Melikoff. The operations against the insurrectionists are taken out of the hands of the several military commanders and placed in the hands of a special bureau or commission, which is to have the support and co-operation of all civil, police and military officers. The talk about the new order being equivalent to abdication is all nonsense. Melikoff has simply become the instrument of the Gortschakoff Ministry to carry on a relentless warfare against the Nihilists and other factions hostile to the Government.

IN the midst of the great events of the war, such incidents as the following were comparatively unnoticed, and left to be long afterward related in print: Miss Annie Pickens, daughter of the Governor of South Carolina, was to be married on April 22, 1863, in Charleston, to Lieut. Andrew De Rochelle. The wedding party was assembled in the Pickens residence, and the clergyman was asking the bride if she was ready, when a shell from a Union gun in the harbor broke into the room and burst. Nine persons were hurt, but only Miss Pickens' wound proved mortal. She bore the pain with wonderful fortitude, and was unmoved when informed that she had only an hour or two to live. De Rochelle said that he would like to have her die his wife, and the poor girl smiled sadly in assent. The guests remembered the scene as far more pitiful than they can describe. The bride lay on a sofa, her white dress dabbled in blood and her hair disheveled, while her pallid face was so wrung with agony that her efforts to smile became futile. The ceremony was hurriedly performed, though the bride's "Yes" was in a faint, labored whisper, and her lips hardly moved in response to her husband's kiss. She died immediately afterward.

The German Army.

Some idea of the increased efficiency in the early stages of a campaign which will accrue to the German army through the training in time of peace of the first class of the ersatz reserve may be gathered from an examination of the losses suffered by different regiments during some of the earlier actions of the war of 1870-71. In the battle of Worth the First West Prussian Grenadier regiment lost 33 officers and 876 men, and the First Silesian regiment 35 officers and 982 men. In the battle of Spicheren the Second Brandenburg Grenadier regiment lost 36 officers and 771 men. The King's Grenadier regiment lost at Wissenburg 23 officers and 329 men, and at Worth 16 officers and 551 men, or, together, 39 officers and 880 men, in three days' time. During the fighting on the 16th of August, 1870, in the neighborhood of Vionville and Mars la Tour, the Sixth Brandenburg regiment lost 1,202 men, the Fourth Brandenburg regiment 1,099 men, the Second Silesian Grenadier regiment 1,119 men, and the Fourth Thuringian regiment 852 men. These large gaps should have been at once and were ultimately filled up with men drawn from the ersatz reserve; but as up to the present time this ersatz reserve in time of peace has comprised only untrained men, and as when the battles mentioned above were fought sufficient time had not elapsed since war had been declared to allow the comparatively-raw levies to be converted into trained soldiers, the much-needed reenforcements could not be at once sent to the front. When the new Army bill comes into force, however, all the men of the first class of the ersatz will be ready at once to take their place in the ranks.

WHILE Russian royalty is pursued by dynamite, the English royal family seems afflicted with bad drains. An Ottawa correspondent says that the Princess Louise suffered from severe headaches while working in her studio, and other ladies there were similarly afflicted. While she was in England the studio floor had to be taken up to enlarge the building, when an open cesspool was discovered beneath it.

THERE is a young lady at Vassar who is an expert boxer. She can box the compass beautifully.

FARM NOTES.

SEPTEMBER calves escape the trying heat of summer, and can be pushed through the winter with grain.

STAGNANT and impure water which cows drink while at pasture is one of the most prominent causes of bad odor in milk.

TO PREVENT abortion in cows give a table-spoonful twice a week of a mixture of equal parts of plaster, ashes and salt.

DAMAGED corn is exceedingly injurious as food for horses, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases.

THE best remedy for the sting of a bee, wasp or hornet is liquid ammonia, and nothing will equal its dilution in water in allaying the irritation caused by mosquitoes.

A WRITER in the Country Gentleman says that of everything he has tried for cure of roup in fowls, the best is to take pulverized copperas and put a teaspoonful in three quarts of water and give it to them to drink. Should they not drink much in a day or two, mix it into corn-meal and feed to them.

THERE are localities where it may pay to grow small crops cheaply—where one may skin the land for a few years and leave it, just as in some places cattle have been killed for their hides, leaving their carcasses to decay—but farmers cannot afford to adopt this style of farming. The aim with them should be to grow larger crops by the expenditure of more labor upon the land, and upon doing this depends their future prosperity.

WHEN once you have determined to fatten an animal for beef let the process be as quick as possible. Any stint in feeding at such times will tend to make the meat tough and dry. Stall-fed animals will fatten more readily than others, and younger animals require richer food than older ones. In winter fattening do not forget that much depends upon the warmth of the stable. The warmer the cattle are kept the less food will be needed.

ASHES are worth 50 cents per bushel to apply to orchards, and are the cheapest manure for that purpose. That ashes have a very beneficial effect is shown by the fact that, on all virgin soils recently burned over, we get the fairest fruits and the best vegetables. Salt, as a manure for orchards, has no beneficial effect on land near the ocean, where the atmosphere is constantly saturated with salt, and it should be sparingly used on all soils, especially those disposed to be low and wet.

A WATERPROOF whitewash may be made as follows: "Take half a bushel of lime, slake it with boiling water, and cover to keep in the steam; strain and add seven pounds of salt dissolved in hot water; three pounds of ground rice, boiled to a paste, and added hot; half pound Spanish whiting, and one pound clean glue, previously dissolved to a thin paste; add five gallons hot water, and stir the whole; cover it, and keep it a few days. It must be used hot. One pint covers a square yard."

A COUNTRY woman says: "The wise man, in enumerating the 'time and season,' made no mention of the time to skim milk; yet, nevertheless, there is a time—a right time, too—and that is just as the milk begins to sour in the bottom of the pans. Then the cream is all at the surface, and should at once be removed—with as little of the milk as possible. If allowed to remain until the acid reaches the cream, it impairs it in quality. The housewife or dairymaid who thinks to obtain a greater quantity by allowing the milk to stand beyond that time labors under a most egregious mistake."

MANY farmers who keep horses do not think it profitable to feed much grain, and frequently feed poor hay. As a consequence of such management the animals are not worth much for labor. When the occasion arises for putting horses thus fed at hard work, they are found out of condition and unable to perform a reasonable task; while in the spring they require extra feeding for a few weeks, or else the work must go on with horses unfit for the business. It is far better to give the horses a little grain during the winter, when, should an emergency arise, they are equal to the occasion.

A NOVEL system of agriculture has for a number of years been practiced on a farm in Hertfordshire, England. The owner, Mr. Prout, instead of harvesting the crops himself, divides the fields into lots when the grain begins to ripen, and the crops are sold upon their roots at public auction. No live stock is kept, and the fertility of the soil is entirely kept up by artificial manure. For the thirteen years since 1866, the average expenses of running the farm have yearly amounted to $16,500, and the net income for the same period has yearly averaged 16 per cent. of that sum, or $2,640. It has thus proved a decided success, while numberless farms cultivated by the ordinary method have been barely able to pay expenses, and many have run behind hand.

English Struggle With the Letter "H."

The ill-treatment which the letter "h" receives from a very large proportion of the English people is, of course, known to the most superficial observer of their speech. It is the substance and the point of a standing joke which never loses its zest. Mr. Punch's artists, when hard put to it for the subject of a social sketch, can always fall back upon the misfortunes of the aspirate. "H" in speech is an unmistakable mark of class distinction in England, as every observant person soon discovers. I remarked upon this to an English gentleman, an officer, who replied: "It's the greatest blessing in the world—a sure protection against cads. You meet a fellow who is well dressed and behaves himself decently enough, and yet you don't know exactly what to make of him; but get him talking, and, if he trips upon his 'h's,' that settles the question. He's a chap you'd better be shy of." Another friend said to me of a London man of wealth, and of such influence as comes from wealth and good-nature: "The Governor has lots of sense, and is the best fellow in the world, but he hasn't an 'h' to bless himself with." And there seems to be no help for the person who has once acquired this mode of pronunciation. Habits of speech, when formed in early life, are the most ineradicable of all habits, and this one, I believe, is absolutely beyond the reach of any discipline, and even of prolonged association with good speakers. In England I observed many people in a constant struggle with their "h," overcoming and being overcome, and sometimes triumphing when victory was defeat. The number of "h's" that come to an untimely end in England is quite incalculable. Of the 40,000,000 of people, there cannot be more than 2,000,000 who are capable of a healthy, well-breathed "h." Think, then, of the numbers of this innocent letter that are sacrificed between sun and sun! If we could send them over a few millions of "h's" a week, they would supply almost as great a need as that which we supply by our corn and beef and cheese.—Richard Grant White, in Atlantic Monthly.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

SAUSAGES.—To every 100 pounds of chopped meat take two and a half pounds of salt, one ounce of sage to every ten pounds of meat, and one-half ounce of black pepper; mix well and fill.

LEMON CAKE.—Two and a half cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of butter, one cupful of sweet milk, one teaspoonful soda sifted in four cupfuls of flour, three eggs well beaten, the grated rind and juice of one lemon; two loaves.

NICE TEA CAKE.—One cupful of sugar, a cupful of butter, three eggs, a cupful and a half of flour, three tablespoonfuls of milk, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, a half-teaspoonful of salt, spice with lemon; bake in a sheet.

SALT MACKEREL.—Soak salt mackerel over night, after washing them carefully in plenty of cold water; lay them in a dripping-pan, cover with hot water, and bake till tender; drain from the water, and serve hot with butter gravy.

MRS. MORSE'S PANCAKES.—A half cupful each of sugar and molasses, two-thirds cupful of milk, a half teaspoonful of mixed cinnamon and cloves, two beaten eggs, flour to make a batter that will just drop from the spoon, a little salt; fry in hot lard.

BROWN BREAD.—One cupful of Indian meal, one cupful of flour, one cupful of molasses, two cupfuls of Graham meal, three cupfuls of water, one teaspoonful saleratus, also a little salt. Steam three hours. It is quite thin before steaming.

TO MAKE chocolate caramels take two cups of brown sugar, one cup of molasses, one table-spoonful (heaping) of butter. Boil twenty-five minutes; then stir in half a pound of grated chocolate, wet in one cup of sweet milk, and boil until it hardens on the spoon, with which you must stir it frequently. Flavor it with a teaspoonful of vanilla.

EARTHENWARE IN COOKING.—The flavor of food baked or boiled in earthenware is said by those who have made the experiment to be far superior to that of vegetable or animal food cooked in the same way in iron vessels, for the reason that iron is a conductor of heat, while earthenware is a non-conductor; consequently, food cooked in the latter is rarely ever burned, the degree of heat not varying perceptibly during the process of cooking, thus preserving the flavor of what is cooked, as well as uniformity throughout the substance of the meat, vegetables or grains, until the process of cooking is completed. The fire in stove or range that parches and burns in iron vessels, and either impairs or spoils the food, is powerless to injure the contents of earthenware. So earthenware takes the premium, as it deserves to.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

An Even Thing.

Two strangers were toasting their shins on opposite sides of a big stove in a saloon, and it was noticed that they often looked at each other as if almost certain that they had met somewhere before. Finally one of them got up and said:

"Stranger, I've seen a face almost like your. Did you ever have a brother Bill?"

"Yes."

"Was he a sailor?"

"He was."

"Did you hear of him last about ten years ago?"

"Yes, just about ten years ago."

"Stranger," continued the first, seeming greatly affected, "I've sailed with your brother Bill. We were wrecked together on the Pacific, and before help came I had to kill and eat him! I knew you must be related. I'm awful sorry it was your brother, and, though I was driven to it, and the law can't touch me, I'm willing to pay you damages. Be kinder fair with me, for Bill was old and tough. About how much do you think is fair?"

The other wiped a tear from his eye, spat across the stove, and replied:

"Stranger, where is your dad?"

"Been dead these twelve years."

"Died in Nevada, didn't he?"

"Yes, out there somewhere."

"Well, I killed him! I knew you were his son the minute I saw you. He and I were in a mine, and, one day, as we were going up in the bucket, I saw that the old rope was going to break under the strain. When we were up about 200 feet, I picked up your old dad and dropped him over. It was bad on him, but it saved me. Now, you ate my brother Bill, and I murdered your dad, and I guess we'd better call it even and shake to see who pays for the drinks."

They shook, drank, and the old Captains who could not tell a lie had to sit back and realize how sad it was that they were born with such tender consciences.

TWO TINSMITHS fought on the roof of a St. Louis house, and an excited crowd witnessed the perilous struggle. Finally, one was knocked down with a hammer, and fell to the ground, receiving fatal injuries.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

IT has been discovered that potato bugs dried and crushed can be used for blisters.

THE person who keeps the outside of the neck covered with heavy wraps, has the inside covered very frequently with what is popularly known as a hard cold.

DR. FOOTE'S Health Monthly says that one of the chief offices of a good nurse is to think of her patient. An invalid should never be teased with the exertion of making a decision.

NEW MODE OF ADMINISTERING CASTOR OIL.—To the oil add sufficient pulverized sugar, flavored with cinnamon or lemon, to convert the whole into a plastic dough; then form into boluses. Compound liquorice powder may be substituted for the sugar. Children, says the Boston Journal of Chemistry, quarrel over this confection. For grown people the boluses may, in some instances, be enveloped in wafer-paper.

ACCORDING to Hamilton the severest catarrhal cold can be cured in about ten hours by a mixture of carbolic acid, about ten drops; tincture of iodine and chloroform, each seventy-five drops. A few drops of the mixture should be heated over a spirit lamp, in a test tube, the mouth of which should be applied to the nostrils as soon as volatization is effected. The operation should be repeated in about two minutes, when, after the patient sneezes a number of times, the troublesome symptoms rapidly disappear.

COUGH MEDICINE.—Take three tablespoonfuls of whole flax seed; put in an earthen vessel or pitcher; pour on a quart of boiling water; let it stand by the fire for an hour, then add the juice of four large lemons, half teacup pure honey, one large stick of licorice broken in bits, one stick of rock candy pounded fine; stir often, and, when licorice and candy dissolve, stir. If too thick and jelly-like, add more boiling water; some people like it to jelly. Take a good drink of this whenever you feel inclined to cough; it is best drunk cold, as it will not induce perspiration. This can be drunk by either young or old.

THE science of life consists in knowing how to take care of your health, how to make use of people, how to make the most of yourself, and how to push your way in the world. These are the things which everybody ought to know, and which very few people do know. How never to get sick, how to develop your health and strength to the utmost, how to make every man you meet your friend—all these and many other things are to be included in the science of living, and the pity is that we appreciate it at its true value only when the bloom of life is gone.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Bald Heads—Some Eminent Examples.

If one may judge from the exceptional case of Elisha, says the Pall Mall Gazette, baldness seems to have been considered a disgrace among the Jews in remote ages, still a disgrace with which it was not permitted to reproach an honorable man. The punishment inflicted by divine interposition, and at the express solicitation of the prophet, upon forty unfortunate children, seems to persons in the present day—even, it may be added, to those who have lost their hair—rather severe. Lovers of analogies, coincidences and contrasts may be invited to remark that the grease of wild beasts employed as instruments of vengeance against the little ones who taunted the good old prophet with his baldness was in later centuries to be employed as a capillary restorative. The strength of Samson and the beauty of Absalom lay in their hair, and there is significance, no doubt, in the fact that through their hair both of them came to grief. Among the Greeks the two most famous bald men were Æschylus and Ulysses. The baldness of Æschylus is known to have been the cause of his death, an eagle, carrying a tortoise in its claws, having dropped its prey with the view of breaking the shell upon what it took to be a rock, but which was in fact the shining skull of a great tragic poet. The baldness of Ulysses is commemorated in the "Odyssey," and the fearful vengeance taken upon the suitors of Penelope seems to have been in a great measure due to the pleasantries in which one of them indulged concerning the glittering aspect presented by her husband's cranium. Baldness, however, was no more admired in those days than in our own; and when Ulysses was restored to youth a stress is laid upon the fact that locks of the most luxuriant kind were given back to him. Julius Cæsar was notorious for his baldness, and the jokes made on this subject by his soldiers on the occasion of one of his triumphal entries into Rome are only too well known. Nor need the story be here repeated of the pleasure he took in wearing a wreath which covered his denuded temples, and which, according to one Roman historian, was his chief reason for valuing it. It may be remarked, however, that the lifelike bust of Julius Cæsar, in the British Museum, is not that of a man who in the present day would be considered bald. The hair is not thick and is brushed forward in a style which indicates a desire to make up for a certain want of hair in the region of the forehead and the temple. Something, however, must be allowed for the complimentary disposition of the sculptor reproducing the head of an all-powerful commander and ruler who was known not to be without personal vanity.

Trouble Over a Trade Dollar.

On being offered a trade dollar for fare the driver of a street car in New York refused it, having been so ordered by the Superintendent. The passenger pocketed the money and refused to hand over any other piece. The driver vainly undertook to eject him, and, during the long struggle, the road became blocked with the other cars. The drivers came to the rescue of their comrade, but the obstinate passenger would not budge. A policeman would not interfere, and at last the other cars jumped the track and went by. The baffled driver went on and at length consented to pocket the dollar, but refused the change, and the passenger was at last obliged to get off without it. He has begun a suit against the company for damages. The driver was, however, legally right in refusing the money, the trade dollar not being legal tender.

Jefferson's Manners.

When Jefferson became President he carried his simple manners and taste into official life. He determined that his inauguration as the chief officer of the republic should be as free from display as possible. Dressed in plain black clothes, he rode on horseback to the old Capitol, without guard or servant, dismounted without assistance, and hitched his horse to the fence. On the steps he was met by a number of friends, who accompanied him to the Senate Chamber, where he delivered his inaugural address. During the administrations of Gen. Washington and John Adams the sessions of Congress had been opened in a style similar to that by which the English sovereign opens Parliament. The President, accompanied by a large escort on horseback, drove in state to the Capitol. Taking his seat in the Senate Chamber, and the House of Representatives being summoned, he read his address. Mr. Jefferson, to whom such ceremonies were distasteful, swept them all away by one act. He sent a written message to Congress, which was read to both houses by their respective Clerks, and that practice has been observed ever since. Against one of his reforms, however, the ladies of Washington rose up en masse. Mr. Jefferson, disliking the levees which had been held at the White House, abolished them. He established two public days for the reception of company—the 1st of January and the Fourth of July. On other days he was at home to all others who came on business or out of courtesy. Many of the Washington ladies, indignant at their social pleasures being thus curtailed, determined to force the President to hold the customary levees. On the usual levee day they resorted in full dress to the White House. The President was out taking a ride on horseback. On his return he saw that the public rooms were filled with elegantly-dressed ladies. At once divining the plot, he appeared before his fair guests booted and spurred and covered with dust. So courteous was his reception of them, and so graceful his manners, that the ladies went away delighted with the President, but chagrined with themselves. They felt that they had been guilty of a rudeness in visiting a guest who did not expect them. It was their last attempt to break through the rules of Jefferson's household.—Youth's Companion.

Col. Forney's Plea for the Abused Characters.

I say, then, give me the best-abused characters of the ages, give me the men and women who make us think, the men who run the gantlet of criticism. Give me in preference to sneering doubters and shallow sciolists, rather the iconoclasts who break the old bad ideals. I do not want to startle you, but in the present world I would rather trust another William Cobbett than another John A. Roebuck; another Tom Paine than another Louis Napoleon; and of the present age in our own country, I like old Bob Toombs, of Georgia. He is a bully and a braggart, but he is honest in his insanity. And Jeff Davis I have always known to be honest, although he is as cautious as Edward Everett, and as cold. I need not repeat how I honor Ben Butler, who says more good things and does less selfish ones than forty such money-hoarders as the elder Astor. A sincere pessimist is Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania—able, sour, honest and utterly intractable; but I like him because he has stuck too long on the wrong side to judicially see the right one. Such dead aggressives as Ben Wade, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, Zach Chandler and Henry C. Carey stood in the pillory of criticism all their lives and retaliated with all their best ability; I knew better than their antipodes that I have named, and every bitter word they spoke, I can match with a number of sweet acts of goodness. Like their Southern opposites they were real, earnest and plucky, as far removed from the chronic conceit of many of the modern English as if they were creations of another planet.—Forney's Progress.

An Indian's Composition.

The Hallequah Times is a literary publication issued by the children of the Friends' School, Wyandotte, Indian Territory. The following extract—a boy's composition on girls—shows that Indian children have as keen a sense of humor as white children:

"Girls is the only folks that have their own way every time. Girls are of several thousand kinds, and sometimes one girl can be like several thousand girls if she wants to do anything. This is all I know about girls, and father says the less I know about them the better off I am."

"LET me look at a revolver," said a man who walked into a store at Sandstone, Mo., and a weapon was shown to him. "Show me the cartridge," he added, and he carelessly loaded one of the chambers. "Excuse me for using this a minute," he further remarked, and shot himself through the brain.

FOR PRESIDENT.
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

Township Democratic Conventions.

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the county democratic central committee, at a meeting held in Auburn, February 21, 1880, the democratic voters of DeKalb county are requested to meet at the usual place of holding elections in their respective townships (except in Union township) on

SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1880,

at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for the following township offices, said candidates to be voted for at the township election, to be held on the first Monday (5th day) in April, 1880.

The officers to be elected in the several townships are as follows:

TOWNSHIPS.	Trustee	Assessor and Land Appraiser	Justice of the peace	Constables
Butler	1	1	2	2
Jackson	1	1	2	3
Concord	1	1	2	2
Newville	1	1	2	2
Stafford	1	1	2	4
Wilmington	1	1	2	4
Union	1	1	1	2
Keyser	1	1	2	2
Richland	1	1	2	2
Fairfield	1	1	2	2
Smithfield	1	1	2	2
Franklin	1	1	2	3
Troy	1	1	1	2

The convention (or caucus) for Union township will be held at Waterloo, at 1 o'clock p. m., on the day above named as agreed by the precinct committeemen for said township.

In addition to the nomination of candidates, it will be the duty of the democrats assembled, to choose a township (or precinct) committeeman, who shall be, by virtue of his office, a member of the county central committee. At the same time a secretary and such other officers as many be deemed necessary for the vigorous prosecution of the campaign in the township shall be selected. A copy of the proceedings of such convention together with the postoffice address of each officer elected and candidate nominated, shall be forwarded to the chairman of the county central committee, not later than Monday, March 22, 1880.

In every precinct in the state there are aged and infirm men who can scarcely get to the polls to vote. Imagine the trouble and expense of conveying them to the place of registry two or three times during one season, in order that they may not miss voting, as they never have done. If the proposed amendments are adopted many a sick and crippled man will lose his vote, for we are sure to have a registry law.

The democrats of the several townships will please bear in mind that the proceedings of the conventions to be held next Saturday, with the names of the officers elected and candidates nominated, are to be forwarded to W. L. Blair, chairman of the county central committee, not later than Monday, March 22. Mr. Blair's postoffice address is Butler, Indiana. Any returns left at this office will reach him.

The legislature of Indiana in the year 1867 was republican. That legislature passed a registry law which created so much dissatisfaction that the next legislature, which was also republican, repealed the law by a party vote, every republican in the senate voting for the repeal. If the people were not satisfied with registration then they would not be now.

If the constitutional amendments are adopted, the time may come when we will have a registry law; then every farmer will be compelled to spend a half day or more before each election in order to be duly registered and entitled to vote. Vote against the amendments.

It would seem that the clerk of Wells county, Mr. Craig, and Thomas A. Hendricks don't dwell together in humming-bird harmony.—Decatur Democrat.

The Democrat is so anxious to have Mr. Hendricks second to some person, that it even places him second to Bill. Craig. "Mr. Craig and Thomas A. Hendricks."

If the constitutional amendments are adopted, and a registry law is passed, old farmers who have lived just across the line in Jackson township for twenty or thirty years could not move to Auburn or into Union township within 60 days prior to any election without losing their votes.

Democrats of the Auburn precinct are expected to attend the convention at Waterloo next Saturday. The train leaves Auburn at 12:56 and returning leaves Waterloo at 3:10, giving ample time to attend the convention.

The democrats of Union township will meet at Winslow's hall, in Waterloo, at 1 o'clock p. m. next Saturday, for the purpose of nominating officers. We hope every democrat in the township will be present.

A registration law would necessitate the creation of a lot of new offices to be filled at a large expense to the townships. Vote against the proposed amendments.

We are curious to know whether the democrats of East W[illegible] can elect the township ticket nominated last Saturday.

Can Tilden carry Indiana?

Vote Against the Amendments.

We have published the proposed constitutional amendments no less than three times since the adjournment of the last legislature, in the belief that the people ought to investigate and weigh the importance of rejecting the amendments as a whole. We now take the liberty of suggesting to the democrats of DeKalb county, that what little good there may be in one or two of the amendments was only inserted to assist in carrying out a republican scheme for party success. We are always inclined to hesitate about advocating any measure or supporting any proposition when it is evident that the entire machinery of the republican party is being used in the same direction. When the republican leaders succeed in making their party a unit in favor of any scheme, as they have in this, it is safe to conclude that the sole object is political gain, which is always uppermost in the minds of that class of politicians who lead and dictate to the republican party. The republican party was never known to advocate or support a proposition that was not intended to injure the chances of democratic success somewhere along the line. For these reasons we consider it safe on general principles, to oppose whatever the republican party seems anxious to consummate. The leading republican newspapers of the state are urging the party to vote as a unit for the adoption of the amendments, which admonishes us that there is a "nigger in the wood-pile" somewhere. We do not, nor does any honest man of any party, object to throwing all necessary safeguards around the ballot-box to prevent fraud and illegal voting, but we fail to see the necessity here in Indiana where elections are always quiet and peaceable—where we seldom hear of illegal voting, of creating an additional election expense throughout the state of not less than $150.000 for each election, besides disfranchising thousands of voters. We well remember the perplexities and annoyances to members of all parties during the existence of a registry law in this state from 1867 to 1869, when large numbers of persons neglected to register and were disfranchised from voting. It was charged then that, where republicans were in power, they entered fictitious names upon the registry lists, and when election time came the same names were entered upon the poll-books, and tickets put into the ballot-box to correspond with the number of names so registered. This is one of the tricks that it is possible to accomplish under a registry law, besides many other chances for fraud which might be practiced by the majority in any precinct.

Amendment number three provides for holding the state election in November instead of October, which, upon first thought, appears to be an attempt at economy, which is not the case, as the same amendment provides that the general assembly may provide by law for the holding of another election for the election of judicial officers. The same amendment provides for registration in order to make it sure in case amendment number one is rejected.

For brazen impudence and unequaled arrogance we submit the following base slander upon the fair name and integrity of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, which item we find in the editorial column of the Decatur Democrat

"It is now pretty certain that Mr. Hendricks will and is rather anxious to accept the vice presidency on a ticket headed with Samuel J. Tilden. We have for some length of time held to the belief that when the proper time for making it public comes around it will be found that whoever started the report that Mr. Hendricks was averse to again running for the vice presidency did so without authority form the Indiana statesman. An act of that kind by a presidential aspirant would be exceedingly impolitic, and it can be looked at in no other light than an insult to Mr. Hendricks' intelligence to presume that he has been guilty of anything of the kind." * * *

Such belittling of a man who is as far superior to Tilden as a statesman as Tilden is superior to Grant, is characteristic of the Tilden hirelings who are continually manifesting a spirit of contempt and a desire to domineer over Mr. Hendricks and his friends. The editor of the Democrat well knows that Mr. Hendricks has time and again said that he would not accept the second place on the next presidential ticket, his friends believe him and honor him more highly for the position he has taken, while the Democrat ridicules the idea that Mr. Hendricks knows his own mind. To retain the confidence of his friends Mr. Hendricks will be compelled to decline the second place, and he will do it.

The COURIER this week contains an article from the pen of W. H. Dills Esq., on the proposed constitutional amendments. Personally we do not exactly agree with Mr. Dills as to voting for part of the amendments and rejecting the others; we shall vote "no" on every one of them, and we advise others of all parties to do the same. We hope every voter in the county will consider the matter of enough importance to at least read the proposed amendments, for they will be required to vote one way or the other if they vote for any candidate. Mr. Dills' article above referred to is worthy of a careful reading and nonpartisan consideration.

Auburn and Waterloo are in the same township, yet if a registry law was in force all persons moving from one town to another would be required to do so thirty days before an election or they could not vote at that election.

The Constitutional Amendments.

EDITORS COURIER: I have been asked to give my opinion of the constitutional amendments which are to be voted upon on the first Monday of April next; and also whether a voter can vote at the election on that day, and not vote upon the amendments.

It is my opinion that the first five of the proposed amendments ought not to be ratified; that is, that the voters should strike out the word "Yes," printed just below each amendment, and leave the word "No" remaining. The other two amendments are proper enough.

As to the second point of inquiry stated above, I will say that the first clause of the third section of the act submitting the amendments to the vote of the people says that, if "any qualified elector" at such election "does not vote for any officer, may vote for or against any amendment," and the last clause of the same section says, "if he votes for any officer, shall at the same time vote on such amendments." It will be seen that by the law the voter may vote upon the amendments without voting for the officers to be elected at that election, and then says if he votes for officers at that election he shall vote upon the amendments. Now, my opinion is, that the latter clause of that section is clearly unconstitutional and void. I do not think it in the power of the legislature to compel any voter to vote; it is a personal privilege, and not to be interfered with by any power or authority.

But it may be said that these clauses do not mean as I have stated, but only that a voter shall not at one hour on that day vote for officers only, and then afterwards at another hour vote only on the amendments. It may be that something of the kind was intended, but if so intended the legislature did not so state.

My reasons for my opinion to vote against the first five proposed amendments are in short, these:

The first amendment proposed requires a residence in the township of sixty days, and in a ward or precinct thirty days immediately before an election, and that the voter shall have been duly registered according to law, to entitle a man to vote at any election, in addition to the requirements of the present constitution. The objectional points are, first, the unnecessary expense of registration, which in an average township would be at least two hundred dollars for each election; second, expense, trouble and denial of the right to vote in case a voter was omitted in the registration; and third, that if a man has the other necessary qualifications, of residing in the state six months before an election, etc., he ought not to be deprived of voting because he may have been compelled by duty or otherwise to change his residence within the thirty or sixty days prior to an election. Among the mechanics, farmer-tenants and the poor who frequently change residences for only a few miles, or a few rods or blocks in a city or town, this amendment would work injustice, and would disfranchise at each election a large number.

The first and second amendments also propose to change our constitution so as to make every male citizen of the United States voters, whether they are white, black, red or any other color. I think, without giving any reasons, it ought to be left as it is now—"white," the emblem of purity.

The third amendment proposes to abolish the October election and have the general election held in November, with two very objectional clauses added thereto, one is that the legislature shall provide for the registration of all persons entitled to vote, and the other is that the general assembly may provide a law for the election of judges of courts at a time when no other officers shall be voted for.

As long as the law provides that judges shall be elected, it is best that they be voted for when the largest number of people are voting; that it should remain as it is now. At present, we never hear of a candidate for a judgeship canvassing for voters, as we do the candidates for other offices; but let this amendment be adopted and the change made, then we have on our hands an additional registration, an additional election, but the worst of all, we will see the candidates for the judgeships compelled to bear the expense of the campaign of such an election alone. He would have to see to the printing, paying for and distributing and handling of tickets; hire men to canvass for him before and at the election, and the candidate who had and would use the most money, however improper a person he might be, would be elected over the best, most intelligent and upright man in the state. Not only that, but after an election many a man could and would approach such a judge and say, "Now as I have a case before your court you must remember how I worked and labored for you, and if I had not you would not be judge," etc.

My objection to the fourth amendment is that it changes the basis of apportioning the senators and representatives in the state legislature, and instead of basing that apportionment as it now is on the white male inhabitants over twenty-one years of age, it proposes to make the basis on all male inhabitants over that age, regardless of color. To say nothing of the fact that only last winter a new apportionment bill was passed, and no new one is now needed, the main objection to the amendment is, if the negro or other colored man was not entitled to such representation it is not so likely that he would seek to become an inhabitant of our state, nor would the politicians be so likely to get up their "negro exoduses" as they have recently been doing.

To the fifth amendment, which proposes that the fees and salaries may be graded according to population, etc., the following objection can be raised: First, it is too sweeping. It is not limited to the state or county officers, but extends to district, circuit, city, town, township and every other kind of officers in the state. Should a legislature see fit, were it either a democratic or republican one, it could cut down the fees of all the officers in ever county, circuit, district, city, town or township politically opposed to the legislature, and could enhance the fees and salaries in those localities of its own political complexion to any extent it pleased.

I might add further that there is no doubt that if the first or third amendments should be ratified the legislature would be called together soon after such ratification, in order that the necessary laws should be passed to carry out their provisions. This would cost the people of the state probably two hundred thousand dollars, and this should also be taken into consideration.

It is to be hoped that all voters will exercise their rights in voting upon these amendments, and as stated above, especially as to the first five, by striking off the word "Yes," and leave as the vote the word "No." Nor do I think it prudent or wise to not vote, nor to put in the vote with both words "Yes and "No" unscratched. If both words are left on the ballot the law says it shall not be counted either way.

Although some differ upon the law as to whether it requires the majority of all the electors in the state to ratify an amendment, or whether it requires only that more votes should have the word "Yes" on them than there are votes with the word "No" on. It is quite plain that the safest plan is to get more votes that have "No" on than of the other kind. The law does say that only those votes "Yes" and "No" shall be certified from the different election boards through the proper channels to the governor, and he shall issue his proclamation declaring the number of votes cast for or against each amendment, and it does not provide any mode of ascertaining the number of electors in the state, nor for having certified the number of votes cast at such an election.

W. H. DILLS.

The democrats of Lagrange county met in convention at the county seat last Saturday for the purpose of appointing delegates to the congressional and state conventions. The delegates to the congressional convention, to be held at Auburn, on the 29th of next month, were instructed to vote for Colerick, which, with a solid delegation from Allen county, will give Mr. Colerick the nomination on the first ballot. Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks is the unanimous choice of the Lagrange democrats for president, as indicated by a vote of the convention. The chairman of the democratic committee of that county informs us that last Saturday "was a gala day with the democracy of Lagrange county." We are pleased with the increased enthusiasm of our Lagrange friends, which is due in a great measure to our old friend Snyder of the Democrat. The day is not far distant when the harmony, good feeling and true democratic grit exhibited by the democrats of Lagrange will make the county democratic, as it was in the beginning.

A citizen cannot, if he would, throw off the obligations of citizenship. He must, under all circumstances, perform them when called upon by the proper authorities; white or black, learned or ignorant, old or young, he must respond to the demands the state and the country make upon him. Whether he votes or does not vote matters not. Under such circumstances why should the citizen voluntarily vote for an amendment to the constitution which in any event abridges his right of citizenship, since it confers no benefits whatever upon the state? Calm reflection upon the subject will, we conclude, convince a large majority of the people of Indiana that a registration amendment to the constitution is unwise, and ought to be defeated.

It is claimed by some persons that a registration of voters will prevent fraudulent voting. We want to know if there are not men of all parties in every township and precinct in DeKalb county who know every voter in the township or precinct? A registration would certainly make them no better known, but it would add hundreds of dollars to election expenses in every county.

—If the senior editor of the Courier is a professional obstetrician of some French institution, we would respectfully advise him to rehearse his knowledge of the language. The word is not spelled right.—Steuben Republican.

The word referred to in the above item is ACCOUCHEMENT, the letter "e" in the second syllable having been omitted by a typographical error. But pray, how did you happen to discover the error, S. R., were you examining Webster to ascertain the meaning of the word?

—A day or two since we accidentally picked up a DeKalb County Republican of two weeks ago for the first time, in which we noticed a characteristic production containing the following: "The editor of the Courier keeps up the crushing argument of 'you lie.' It takes lots of brains to write these two words," etc. In view of the fact that we have never made use of these "two words" in the COURIER, our readers will no doubt conclude that they would be very appropriate on this occasion.

—We are requested to announce that the many friends of A. J. Little will present his name as a candidate for Justice of the peace, subject to the decision of the democratic township convention of Union township, to be held at Waterloo, Saturday, March 20, 1880.

Dr. A. R. White—Dear Sir: I must say something in favor of your "Pulmonaria." For two weeks I had a severe cold, coughing incessantly. I tried several (so called) cough remedies until I was induced by our druggist to try your Pulmonaria. I purchased one fifty cent bottle, and before using half of it I was entirely free from the cough. I believe it to be the best cough remedy in the market.

Yours truly, GEO. F. STITT,

—Two ladies were talking about the sparrows and their usefulness in ridding the city of measuring worms, which used to be such an annoyance. One thought the noisy chirping of the sparrows early in the morning, when she wanted to sleep, as great an evil as worms. The other disagreed. Just then a gentleman came in, and was appealed to: "Mr. A——, which do you think the worst—sparrows or worms?" He immediately answered: "I don't know; I never had sparrows!"

—A novel sight was presented to a crowd of interested folks, Tuesday morning, in front of Ed. Baker's bakery, which consisted of a traveling barber-shop tied to a pair of antiquated, hunch-backed horses and accompanied by a forlorn looking, peg legged man; it was indeed a sorry-looking outfit, and there wasn't a dry eye in the audience as they contemplated the mournful scene; the emaciated quadrupeds, well matched, bore more of a resemblance to deformed camels than to horses, and were so thin that the man had to build a fence around both to keep the wind from blowing the hay out of 'em.

—The Corunna Headlight gives our boss jeweler the following merited "send-off," all of which we endorse:

Joe Abright, the popular Auburn jeweler and silversmith, recently sold two handsome Rockford "quick time" gold stem-winding watches, Messrs. Cal. Husselman and Harry Yesbera of that place being the purchasers. The watches are of a very unique pattern, having the names of the owners nicely lettered on the face in plain characters. Mr. Abright is in truth the people's jeweler, and he has as neat an establishment as one could find elsewhere outside of the metropolis. His stock in trade is large and varied and prices reasonable. And what is still better, when you purchase at his store you can rely upon the quality and be assured that you are not getting "snide" goods.

—Somebody's team got very wild last Monday morning, just opposite Kiblinger's hardware store, and did their level best to smash somebody's head, who could not manage them owing to the entanglement of the lines; so they dashed up toward the court-yard fence, upsetting somebody's mule-team and wagon, twisting the latter in several pieces and scaring about two years' growth out of somebody else's single horse, which was hitched at the rack near by. For some two minutes or upwards, this group formed an animated picture to look upon, but finally resulted in nothing more serious than a ruptured breast and a broken up system of spinal joints—the former belonging to the single harness and the latter to the two-mule wagon.

A young man by the name of William Kotz, coachman for Mr. Charles McClellan, came to my store one morning complaining that his feet hurt him very badly, and expressing fears that they were frost-bitten. He had in vain tried to get relief by consulting physicians, and had endeavored, without success, to ease the pain by rubbing his feet with snow and ice, the remedy applied in such cases. Being exposed a great deal to the cold by his occupation, his feet got worse daily, until one day he fainted in the street. A few days after he again came to my store and showed me his feet. I have seen a great many sores in my life, but nothing to equal this, and was afraid the poor fellow would lose his limbs. He asked me for ST. JACOBS OIL; but at first I refused, as I did not wish to take the responsibility upon myself, not being a great admirer of so-call Patent-Medicines. However, some friends, who happened to be in the store at the time, begged me to give the ST. JACOBS OIL to the sufferer; so we rubbed his feet with the OIL, and he took the remainder with him. After nine days the same man again came into my store, perfectly well, and requested me to write to you of the most wonderful cure; he also stated, that two other persons had been cured of Rheumatism by the same bottle which helped him. John Lenzen.

A Pugilistic Dutchman.

There is a German animal named Habenicht—Ludwig Habenicht—residing almost in the heart of Auburn, who needs the combined attention of the marshal and a hickory club. He lives down on south Jackson street with a wife and one boy about six years old—the rest of the span being in the penitentiary—and every few days the good people of that neighborhood are favored (?) with a matinee, in the shape of a family rumpus. Habenicht—we believe that's how to spell it—gets fired up with corn-juice quite frequently and always endeavors to clean out the establishment, in which performance he sometimes succeeds and other times gets left. Last Monday evening, at just about dark, he got on his muscle and thrashed his wife and boy, assisted by another drunken brute named Henry Landgraf, and we merely want to ask, Can these heathenish practices continue in a civilized community? Will not somebody, out of consideration for the neighbors, if not in mercy to his wife, see that this fellow gets what he deserves, in case of a repetition of his cruelties?

DEATH.

WOOLSEY.—At the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. James Provines, near Auburn, Ind., Mrs. Maria Woolsey departed this life March 10, 1880, aged 73 years and 11 months.

The deceased was born in Roxbury, N. Y., April 10, 1806, and was married to Joseph Woolsey, April 29, 1825. She moved to DeKalb county, Ind., with her family in 1845. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom survive her, and she had been a widow over twenty-one years.

She professed a hope in Christ in 1829, and two years later was baptized by Elder Richard Woolsey, becoming a member of the first Baptist church of Colechester, N. Y., remaining in the faith of an earnest and devoted christian until the Master said, "Come up higher." She was a worthy member of the Baptist church of Auburn at the time of her death, was a faithful mother, a wise counselor and highly esteemed by the community.

Tired of Life.

Early last Saturday morning, at his farm one-half mile southwest of Corunna, in Richland township, Richard Dearborn breathed his last, and by his own hand. He was found at about ten o'clock, by his wife, suspended by the neck with a halter-strap, in a corn house near his dwelling. Mr. Dearborn was about 53 years of age, an old and much respected resident of Richland township, having lived for 29 years on the farm which he owned at the time of his death; he was held in the highest esteem by each of his neighbors, and was, in a word, an upright man and a consistent christian. At times he has been subject to spells of melancholy and temporary aberration of the mind, to which alone is attributed the cause of his act. He leaves a devoted wife, who is herself about distracted, but no children.

That Rebus Solved.

Last Monday being the day fixed, the prizes were awarded to the persons handing in the first correct solution to W. J. Austin's big rebus, which has appeared for sometime past in the COURIER. Joe. McKay was the lucky man who froze to the gentleman's prize, while Mrs. A. Robbins secured the lady's. Here is the key, and now you can all read it:

"Our new rebus is to inform the public generally that in everything belonging to the boot and shoe trade, the undersigned stand A. Number One in the estimation of thousands of ladies and gentlemen who purchase their supplies at our store. The mystery of our extensive trade can be easily explained: Our stock is equal in all respects to any in the market, small profits and quick sales content us, and kind treatment, fair dealing and strict attention to business are our rules. For Josh Billing's advice see lower right hand corner. If you are handsome, cultivate your boots; if you are homely, hoe your brains." That's easy, isn't it?

Coroner's Inquest.

I, the undersigned, coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, on the 12th day of March, 1880, in Wilmington township, in said county, and legally authorized to inquire and true presentment make in what manner and by whom James Watson, whose body was found at the railroad station of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad company, at Butler, in said township and county, on the 12th day of March, 1880, came to his death, after having heard the evidence and examined the body, do find that the deceased came to his death by falling from a coal-derrick on coal dock, striking his head against some hard substance causing instant death.

Given under my hand this 13th day of March, 1880. J. J. LATSON,
Coroner DeKalb Co.

Sprung A Leak.

Under the head of "Don't Mention It," the Chicago Times of last Monday gave a two-column-and-a-half account of the Coombs vs. Coombs divorce case, which was disposed of very quietly in the superior court, at Ft. Wayne, about one month since. All the papers in the case had been carefully removed from the files, and nothing more than a casual mention of it appeared in any of the home papers; but now the Times comes out and gives the whole thing "dead away," while the defendant, Mr. J. M. Coombs, is "doing the grand in a distant land 3,000 miles away." A decree of divorce was granted the plaintiff, with $16,500 alimony, which was paid within forty-eight hours; and a few days afterward Mr. Coombs departed for California.

WHY?

BY MILTON M. MARBLE.

I.

My own darling, tell me why
In my dreams you to me fly?
Oft you come in angel form,
Then again you look forlorn.

II.

Other time, with witching smile,
Which my heart can but beguile,
Thy sweet eyes look in mine own,
And I hear thy angel tone!

III.

Oft thy hand rests on mine arm—
Knowing it would shield from harm—
While thy cheek, pressed close to mine,
Makes me mad with Love's own wine!

IV.

Then from off thy lips there drop
Such fond words as bid me hope;
Words of cheer and happy glee—
I forget, then, all but thee!

V.

So I journey ever on—
Not as formerly, alone—
E'en my dreams companions are,
Making life so very fair!

VI.

Oh! come oft and cheer my heart,
Bid the clouds to aye apart;
Come to me in witching dreams,
When the star light o'er me gleams!

VII.

Where the spirit loves to be,
There it sails in dream-land sea;
My own darling, is this why
In my dreams you to me fly?

TABLE ROCK, Neb.

UNDER FALSE PRETENSES.

BY J. B. HOAG, M. D.

The city of New Haven, in the State of Connecticut, is a beautiful place. As our readers are doubtless aware, from the number of a certain kind of shade trees that abound in and beautify it and afford a luxurious shade during the sultry summer months, it has received the appropriate cognomen of the City of Elms. The inhabitants are noted for their intelligence and erudition, the benefits of a thorough education being enjoyed by all in all classes of society—the operative, producer and mechanic, as well as those who belong to what are usually termed the learned professions.

Here for many years dwelt Charles Lathrop, a wealthy merchant. He was a man who commanded the respect and esteem of all who formed his acquaintance. He was known as a man of the strictest honesty and probity, and noted for his deeds of benevolence and generosity to those whose circumstances in life demanded the active sympathy of those who were able to administer to their needs.

At the time of which we now write, he was a widower. Five years previously the death angel had spread his dark and murky wings over the couch of the companion of his youth, with whom he had trod the rugged path of life for twenty years, and transported her chaste and pure spirit to the better land, leaving behind her the only child that had ever been vouchsafed to them—a daughter, Helvia by name—now of the tender age of 17 years, when bereft of a mother's care. On her Mr. Lathrop lavished all his affection. She had been thoroughly educated, both at home by her parents, who were fully competent to the task, and by private instructors, and had attended the best seminaries of learning that the country afforded.

Mr. Lathrop had, after the demise of his wife, no inclination to turn a second time to the shrine of love, but, as before intimated, centered his entire affection on the pledge of their mutual love that the loved one had confided to his care.

As may well be supposed, her accomplishments, her beauty—which was above the common order—and her wealth in prospect secured to her a large number of suitors for her hand. She treated all respectfully, but, surmising that perhaps sinister notions influenced them, and not willing to leave her father's society and the home that had sheltered her since her birth, she gave encouragement to no one.

A year passed, and a second time she was compelled to pass through the deep waters of sorrow, affliction, and bereavement by the death of her father. She felt the loss keenly. For a year she refused to go into society or to receive the addresses of any of the opposite sex. At the end of that time her suitors flocked around her, and numerous were the offers of marriage she received. There was one at least who truly loved her. His name was Richard Conley. He was 25 years of age. For ten years he had been fatherless, and for the last seven years had been the principal support of his widowed mother. For that length of time he had been employed in a mercantile establishment, and, by steady application to business, had secured a yearly increase of his salary as well as the confidence and good will of his employer.

He dwelt with his mother in the humble cottage that had been their place of abode during his father's lifetime—indeed, ever since his recollection.

He had frequently met with Helvia at social parties, at church, in the Sabbath-school, and at his place of business, and she invariably treated him with marked respect. Indeed, she held him in the highest estimation. She knew him to be intelligent and well-informed; that by dint of his own exertion he had acquired a better education than many of her acquaintances who were furnished with all desirable facilities for acquiring knowledge; that he had the reputation of being scrupulously honest and trustworthy; and, above all, that he was an affectionate and dutiful son, and justly the pride and joy of his mother.

On his part, he loved our heroine with true and ardent devotion, but felt it would be a bootless task to attempt to win the regard of one so far above him in the scale of society, and he had a perfect horror of the idea of being regarded as a fortune hunter; consequently "he never told his love," but smothered his feelings in his own bosom.

Two years had passed since Helvia had been left fatherless, and it had occurred to her that it might result in benefit to her, so far as her future welfare was concerned, to test the sincerity of those who seemed so anxious that she should regard them with favor. She confided her plans to no one save the aged attorney who for many years had transacted her father's business, who had been his firm and true friend during his life-time, and since her orphanage had retained her confidence. He entered heartily into her plans and promised her all the necessary assistance.

Before she had taken any step in the furtherance of her design she received an offer of marriage from a young man by the name of William Manning. He was of a family that were regarded as belonging to the aristocracy of the city, and moved in the best society.

She requested a month's time to consider the matter, promising at the expiration of that time to give him a definite answer.

A few days subsequent to the above event the acquaintances of our heroine were astounded on learning that she had left her home, which was closed, her servants dismissed, and the entire property left her by her late father assigned to her attorney for the benefit of his creditors.

The next week the leading newspapers of the city contained the following paragraph:

> We regret to learn that unexpected claims have come against the estate of the late Charles Lathrop to the amount of its entire value. Miss Helvia, the only heir, we understand, has given up all her claim to the estate, for the benefit of the creditors.

Our heroine found a home with an old lady who had formerly been her nurse, and had ever since her first recollection been firmly and affectionately attached to the family. Mrs. Dermont really believed her young friend to be penniless, but assured her that while she had a roof to shelter herself she was welcome to share her humble home with her.

Helvia resorted to her needle, in the use of which she was an adept, for the purpose of obtaining a livelihood.

A week had not elapsed after she had become the guest of Mrs. Dermont, or rather one of her household, ere she received from her quondam lover a note, of which the following is a copy:

> MISS HELVIA LATHROP—RESPECTED LADY: I embrace the present opportunity to inform you that it will not be necessary for you to further consider the proposition I recently made to you. The unfortunate change in your circumstances will render it impossible for me to support you in the style that I should desire, and I must ask you to no longer regard me as a suitor for your hand. I shall ever remain your friend. Yours truly,
> WILLIAM MANNING.

In truth, our heroine had, until the reception of this epistle, regarded the writer of it in a more favorable light than any of the suitors for her hand, but now most heartily did she congratulate herself that she had an insight into his true character and understood the true motives that influenced him in the professions of affection and preference he had made to her.

A few days subsequent to her reception of the above epistle she received another. It was from Richard Conley, and ran as follows:

> MISS HELVIA LATHROP—Respected and Honored Lady: I have long since given you all that strength of affection of which my nature is capable, but, until the recent unfortunate change in your circumstances, have locked the secret in my own bosom. Conscious, owing to the difference of our positions in life, that I might be thought to be influenced by sinister motives were I to reveal to you the real state of my feelings, I have refrained from doing so; but, now that circumstances have changed, I venture to ask you to allow me to prove to you and to the world the sincerity of my affection for you. Will you allow me to visit you and become better acquainted? I have no fortune to lay at your feet; no splendid home to offer you; only true, ardent affection, and a desire to be your future protector and dearest earthly friend. Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. Your true friend and sincere lover,
> RICHARD CONLEY.

To this she replied immediately, inviting Richard to visit her in her humble home. His visits were repeated at short intervals for a few months, when she promised him to brave life's ills with him, guided by his protecting arm.

She told him that she had but one condition to require—that their marriage should be celebrated in the church, and that she be allowed to have the wedding feast prepared. To this he at first objected, but she was persistent in her demand. She told him that hereafter she would be guided by his judgment, but that in this instance she should insist on having her whim—if he chose to regard it as such—indulged. He finally acquiesced.

They issued a number of cards of invitation to the marriage ceremony and feast.

The day arrived on which the twain were to be united in the most sacred bonds known to mortals. After the ceremony had been performed, the happy couple, followed by the invited guests, most of whom belonged to the humble walks of life, proceeded directly to our heroine's former residence. Great was their surprise to find it open for the reception of company, and a sumptuous feast prepared.

After the departure of the guests, who enjoyed the occasion intensely, our heroine remarked, "I know you are surprised at what has occurred, and an explanation is due. I had reason to mistrust the motives of many, indeed, of most of those who were soliciting my hand in marriage, and resorted to this ruse in order to test their sincerity, and am satisfied with the result of true love's test. Henceforth this is to be not only your home, but that of your mother, and I wish her to feel herself as much at home as she ever did in her own domicile. So good a son as you have always proved yourself ought not to be separated from his mother."

Our hero replied: "I do not know that your property is any objection, but I should have been satisfied with you alone." He then playfully bantered her for obtaining him under false pretenses, and declared himself the happiest of mortals.

Mrs. Conley arose from her seat, and, encircling Helvia with one arm, imprinted a kiss on her brow, and thus gave utterance to her feelings: "God bless you, my daughter. I can never be sufficiently grateful for your kind offer to give me a home with you for the future. May you be as happy as you deserve to be. Richard was always a good son, and I doubt not will make a kind husband."

It would be a bootless task to attempt to describe the chagrin and mortification of our heroine's unsuccessful wooers, and especially of Mr. Manning, and we will leave this to the imagination of our readers, and the newly married couple to their happiness.

CHICAGO, Ill.

WHAT A DEED CONVEYS.

Something of Interest to Farmers.

The following extracts from an address delivered before the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, by Hon. B. H. Bennett, will be of interest to our land-owners:

Of course every one knows it conveys the fence on the farm, but all might not think it also included the fencing stuff, posts, rails, etc., which had once been used in the fence, but had been taken down and piled up for future use again in the same place. But new fence material, just bought and never attached to the soil, will not pass. Standing trees also pass as a part of the land; so do trees blown and cut down, and still left in the woods where they fell, but not if cut and corded up for sale; the wood has then become personal property. If there be any manure in the barnyard, or in a compost heap in the field, ready for immediate use, the buyer ordinarily takes that also as belonging to the farm, though it might not be so, if the owner had previously sold it to some other party and had collected it together in a heap by itself. Growing crops also pass by the deed of a farm, unless they are expressly reserved, and when it is intended to reserve those it should be so stated in the deed itself; a mere oral agreement to that effect would not be valid in law. Another mode is to stipulate that possession is not to be given until some future day, in which case the crops or manure may be removed before that time. As to the buildings on the farm, though generally mentioned in the deed, it is not absolutely necessary they should be. A deed of land ordinarily carries all the buildings on it belonging to the grantor, whether mentioned or not; and this rule includes the lumber and timber of any old building which has been taken or blown down and been packed away for future use on the farm. But if there be any buildings on the farm built by some third person, with the farmer's leave, the deed would not convey these, since the buildings are personal property, and do not belong to the land-owner to convey. The real owners thereof might move them off, although the purchaser of the farm supposed he was buying and paying for all the buildings on it. His only remedy in such a case would be against the party selling the premises. As a part of the buildings conveyed, of course the window-blinds are included, even if they be at the time taken off and carried to the painter's shop to be painted. It would be otherwise if they had been newly purchased and brought into the house, but not yet attached or fitted to it. Lightning rods also go with the house if the farmer has any on his house. A furnace in the cellar, brick or portable, is considered a part of the house, but an ordinary stove with a loose pipe running into the chimney is not, while a range set in brick work is. Mantel-pieces so attached to the chimney as not to be removed without marring the plastering go with the house, but, if merely resting on brackets, they may be taken away by the former owner without legal liability. The pumps, sinks, etc., fastened to the buildings are a part of it in law, and so are the water pipes connected therewith bringing water from a distant spring. If the farmer has iron kettles set in brick work near his barn for cooking food for his stock, or similar uses, the deed of his farm covers them also, as likewise the bell attached to his barn to call his men to dinner. If he indulges in any ornamental statues, vases, etc., resting on the ground by their own weight merely, and sells his estate without reservation, these things go with the land.

A Washington Character.

Near the United States Medical Museum, the scene of the assassination of President Lincoln, stands an old hovel, and in this lives Washington's "character," John Birch by name. Birch was born in the same hovel about the time that Gen. Washington died, and during the last twenty-five years he has never been away from it. In his boyhood he was apprenticed to a repairer of musical instruments, so that a natural turn for mechanics was in a manner developed. Since about 1860 he has been at work on a perpetual-motion machine, which he at first hoped to complete before the end of the war. His simple food is earned by regulating musical instruments. Indeed, he could make a great deal of money out of that trade if he were willing, for Ole Bull is his great friend, and Remenyi once gave into his hand a $2,000 violin which needed restoration. This job would be a difficult one, for Remenyi's ear apparently could not be satisfied, Ole Bull thought, but the "old hermit of F street" did the mending in exactly one minute. He then took the instrument, sounded it, removed the bridge and, having rubbed its edge with sandpaper, handed it back to the famous musicians. Sure enough the old virtues of the violin had been restored. Billy Birch, who was a famous minstrel many years ago, was the hermit's brother, the present Billy Birch, minstrel, having taken the former's name.

Bears as Pets.

Although young bears are playful and good-natured, they are not to be trusted when full grown; hence it savors of foolhardiness to adopt them as pets. A story is told of a planter in Louisiana who once picked up a young cub that had either been abandoned by its mother, or had run away from the parental den. He carried it home and threw it down in the yard, where it was immediately adopted by the little negroes. It became a great favorite with them, sharing their corn bread, and taking part in all their sports. Billy—that was the name given to him—thrived and grew large and stout, and learned to box and wrestle with the boys so well that visitors to the plantation were always entertained with these droll exhibitions. But one day Billy was detected in making free with the young cabbages in the garden. A stout negro man picked up a branch of rose bush, and gave the marauder a playful stroke. Filled with rage, Billy sprung upon the man, shook him as if he had been a bundle of straw, and bit the poor fellow so severely that he died. Billy was at once shot—thus paying a heavy penalty for his loss of temper.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

HENRY, upon being asked how many boys were in his Sabbath-school class, replied: "If you multiply the number of Jacob's sons by the number of times which the Israelites compassed Jericho, and add to the product the number of measures of barley which Boaz gave Ruth; divide this by the number of Haman's sons; subtract the number of each kind of clean beasts that went into the ark; multiply by the number of men who went to seek Elijah after he was taken to heaven; subtract from this Joseph's age at the time when he stood before Pharaoh; add the number of stones in David's bag when he killed Goliath; subtract the number of furlongs that Bethany was distant from Jerusalem; divide by the number of anchors cast out at the time of Paul's shipwreck; subtract the number of people saved in the ark, and the remainder will be the number of boys in the class." How many were there?

ONE of the most curious railroads in the world is the 10 inch-gauge road running from North Billerica, Mass., to Bedford. It was at first hooted at by the people, but the road was completed, making a length of 8½ miles. There are 11 bridges on the road, one of which is over 100 feet long. The rails weigh 25 pounds to the yard. The road is well built and equipped; one grade is 155 feet. The cars and engines will at first sight create wonder and admiration. Their perfect proportions give them a handsome appearance. They are constructed very near the ground, giving them great advantages of safety. The cars have an aisle with one seat on each side, in the same manner as ordinary cars have two seats. The length of the cars allow 30 seats, each person having a seat to himself. The cars are supplied with closets, water tank, are heated by steam, and have all the modern improvements. They weigh but 4½ tons, ordinary cars weighing on average 18 tons. The trains run at the rate of 20 miles an hour with perfect safety. The engine is placed behind the tender, giving it greater adhesion to the track. They weigh 8 tons, and draw two passenger and two freight cars. The cost of the road was about $4,500 per mile.

THE origin of the allusion to New Jersey as a foreign country was as follows: After the fall of the first Napoleon his brother Joseph, who had been King of Spain, and his nephew, Prince Murat, sought refuge in this country, bringing with them great wealth. Joseph Bonaparte wished to build a palatial residence here, but did not desire to become a citizen, having hopes of returning to Europe. To enable him, as an alien, to hold real estate required a special act of the Legislature. He tried to get one passed in several States, but failed. He was chagrined, especially because Pennsylvania refused. After this he applied to the New Jersey Legislature, which granted both him and Prince Murat the privilege of purchasing land. They bought a tract at Bordentown, and built magnificent dwellings, and fitted them up in the most costly manner. Rare pictures, sculpture, etc., were profuse and selected with the greatest care, and the grounds laid out with exquisite taste. Joseph Bonaparte's residence was perhaps the finest in America. Thousands of people from all parts of the country visited him, and were treated courteously. He was extremely liberal with his money, and gave great impetus to the business of the little town. The Philadelphians, finding that he had apparently no end of money, and that he used it to benefit business generally, regretted, when too late, that they had refused to let him locate among themselves, and, to keep their mortification, would continue to taunt Jerseymen with having a King—with importing the King of Spain to rule over them. They were called Spaniards on that account. But these taunts harmed no one, as the Jerseymen lost nothing by allowing him to settle among them, and thus foreigner, jokingly applied to Jerseymen, has come down to us long after its origin has been forgotten, except by a few of the past generation.

That Million of Postage Stamps.

I really have solid reasons for believing that there have been cranky people who have made the acquisition of 1,000,000 of postage stamps a condition for the accomplishment of some vital matter. A legacy may depend upon it. A marriage may depend upon it. Some old imbecile may have insisted on having the wall of his bedroom pasted with 1,000,000 of postage stamps. It is not perhaps so difficult as might be thought to bring together 1,000,000 of used-up stamps. It might, under certain circumstances, even be worth while to buy a few thousand stamps to get them stamped. If you have the waste paper of very busy offices, you will be greatly helped in the accumulation. Most people who begin such an accumulation break down after a time. A lady told me the other day that she was saving up her postage stamps toward 1,000,000, and I calculated that it would take her 250 years at the present rate to complete her task. If you can't complete your own collection, you may make yourself helpful in the matter of helping to complete collections of luckier people. A million of postage stamps is a possession decidedly worth the having. It would have its value in the universal market. —London Society.

"The Tree."

A small boy got up to read a composition on "The Tree." He got as far as "This subject has many branches," when the teacher said, "Stop! you have not made your bough yet." "If you interrupt me again," said the boy, "I'll leave." "If you give me any more impudence, I'll take the sap out of you. Do you understand?" said the teacher. "I twig," said the boy, and then the regular order of business proceeded.

AN INCIDENT OF 1862.

The Trouble of Managing Unorganized Troops.

[From the St. Peter (Minn.) Tribune.]

An incident connected with the Indian massacre came to our knowledge recently, which illustrates how important is the presence of mind and bravery of a single individual at a critical time. All who lived here then remember the anxiety felt for those hemmed in at Fort Ridgely by these Indians. Rumors reached us that the small force in command there could not hold out against the persistent attacks of the bloodthirsty enemy, and we were in daily expectation of hearing that the soldiers and men, women and children who fled there for protection were all massacred. At last Gen. Sibley sent a force of 180 mounted men under Col. McPhail to relieve the fort, but we did not all know how near that force came to being demoralized and broken up. The detachment consisted of militia; that is of citizens not enlisted in the United States service, as was the main body under Gen. Sibley. The evil of dependence on unorganized militia, however patriotic and brave the individual men were, had an illustration on that somewhat perilous night's march. A part of this detachment was a company of about fifty men, who had chosen Anson Northup, of St. Anthony, Captain. Northup was a brave man, with good qualities for a soldier, but hardly the right material for an officer. He was inclined to go his own gait and not obey the orders of McPhail on the march. McPhail, who had seen service in the South, had been commissioned by Gov. Ramsey to take command of all mounted men who reported under the Governor's call for relief of the frontier. By the order of Gen. Sibley he had command of this detachment, and there was no reason why Northup should not obey him. It was important that the small force should not divide on the road, but should keep together and be ready at any moment to encounter the Indians. Northup wanted to gallop ahead whenever he felt like it. McPhail finally reproved him sharply and ordered him back to his place in the column. Northup took offense, said he would go back altogether, wheeled his company and took the road back to St. Peter. Marshall, who accompanied the detachment but had no command, galloped back to remonstrate with Northup, who was an old friend; but Northup's blood was up, and he swore he would have nothing more to do with McPhail. Marshall, despairing of argument, and fearing that the expedition would be defeated, called out at the top of his voice: "All who are for the relief of the fort, forward to Ridgely! Let cowards turn back!" He wheeled his horse and galloped back to rejoin McPhail. Before he had reached the latter he saw Northup coming up. Northup rejoined just as a halt was ordered for dismount and a brief rest. When the march was resumed Northup and his men were in their proper place in the column, and there was no further trouble. The fort was reached at daylight and relief given to the long-beleaguered garrison.

The Unrest of This Life.

Eau Claire is to have a corn festival at the temperance hall, for the benefit of the Methodist Church, at which the bill of fare is entirely of eatables made of corn, such as succotash, green corn, etc. Well, if they don't have trouble there, then we are no judge. Talk about indulging in intoxicating beverages, we had a thousand times rather have a stomach full of liquor than to indulge to excess in succotash. The succotash does not intoxicate, it is true, but it causes a feeling of unrest that is truly painful, and dire distress is in many instances the result of looking on the succotash when it is red, when it giveth its color in the tin skimmer. We would go as far as anybody to contribute funds to a Methodist Church, but the church that would smuggle succotash into us in large quantities, as a charitable incentive, regardless of our feelings, would have something to answer for. When that succotash festival comes off the quiet man who goes to work and establishes a bazar outside for the sale of pain-killer and brandy and peppermint is going to not only make money, but become a philanthropist. Of course money can be made at such festivals, but is it right to thus trifle with the feelings of men and women, to make a few paltry dollars for a church? Does it not prove hurtful, in the end, to a church that adopts such financial schemes? Now, there has been no more successful festival, financially, than the watermelon festival, held at Waukesha a few years ago, but no person who attended that festival could again be induced to patronize any money-making device that the church should get up. It will be remembered by readers of profane history that on that occasion people were admitted free to the festival, and given all the watermelon they could eat. All partook of the melon for the benefit of the church, a thousand hearts beat happy, and when music arose with its voluptuous swell, soft eyes looked love to eyes which spake again, and pretty soon everybody wanted to go out doors to get some pain-killer. Then it was found that the doors were locked, and muscular deacons stood guard and not a mother's son of the vast audience could get out without paying 2 shillings. The sufferers were got into a line and had to take their turns going out doors, and much suffering resulted. Positions near the door were sold at a premium, and when all were out, and the sufferers had been to Mr. Dunlap's drug store and obtained some peppermint, they swore they would never attend another festival. While the church made money for a day, it lost money eventually. No, we maintain that a church should stick to the time-honored collection plate, and not go into the boiled-aquarium business, with a dwarf oyster for a basis, or into any of these strange corn and watermelon devices. Give us a square deal, and we will all take a hand, but when a church deals a brace game, the wayfaring man has no show for his money.—Peck's Sun.

A WISEACRE'S WISDOM.

BY [illegible]

Spake Rabelais of old, this queer story I'll tell,
[illegible]
How oft penny-wise men, who seek to compel
Pay that's due them, get beat in their greed.

At a roast meat cook'ry, in Paris, of France,
Smoked a fat goose on a spit by the fire;
Near by sat a lean, hungry porter, by chance,
Striving to satisfy hunger's desire.

He ate very slowly his loaf of dry bread,
Sniffing the reek and the steam of the fowl,
And wishing, no doubt, a sweet slice, yet he said
Naught, as he noted the cook's angry scowl.

His loaf he consumed; when he sought to depart,
"Hold!" cried the cook, and his gorget secured:
"The smoke of my goose of your meal formed a part.
Pay I demand!" but the porter demurred.

While thus the two argued, the fool, Seny Jean,
Entered. They chose him a judge of the case.
Complying, he donned an official's grave mien—
Heard both their pleas with quite dignified grace.

Then from the defendant two coppers he took;
Jingled them loudly between his two hands,
Returned them again, disappointing the cook,
Who thought that the judge had approved his demand.

Then, turning to plaintiff, this judgment conferred
"True, this poor porter thy reeking goose smelt
As thou of his money the jingle hast heard—
He hath his money; no loss hast thou felt.

"This seemeth," quoth he, "to be proper and right
Now I decree, or express what I fear,
It's best we depart out of each other's sight,
Lest we have too many fools gathered here."

JUDGE BLACK ON THE THIRD TERM.

The Argument of a Statesman and Patriot.

[From the North American Review.]

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States, in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term, has become, by universal consent, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions.

This is a resolution passed by the House of Representatives on the 15th day of December, 1875. It was offered by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, after consultation with leading friends of the principle, and was carried immediately and almost unanimously, being opposed by the votes of only eighteen members out of 251. It received the support and approbation of all parties. Men who quarreled bitterly upon all other political subjects were of one heart and one mind, when it came to be a question whether the custom established by Washington and other Presidents of retiring after their second term ought to be respected or could be safely departed from.

And now here, to wit, in the pages of this Review, comes Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, and on the part of Gen. Grant, for whom he appears, denounces the resolution aforesaid, impugns the doctrine embodied in it, and assails the integrity of its supporters in the most violent manner. I am asked, "Under which King, Bezonian?" Do I give in my concurrence? If not, what grounds of opposition can I presume to stand on? Believing in the resolution of the Representatives, and dissenting from Mr. Howe's article, the readers of the Review shall have the why and the wherefore; not because my individual opinions are worth a rush, but because, on a subject so important, truth is entitled to every man's defense; because this faith is shared, in our time, by the most respectable citizens of all classes, and because it is delivered to us from a past generation strongly stamped with the approbation of the best men that have lived in all the ages.

A President of the United States may legally be elected and re-elected for an indefinite number of terms; there is nothing in the constitution to forbid it; but the two-term precedent set by Washington, followed by his successors, consecrated by time, and approved by all the public men of the country, ripened into a rule as efficient in its operation as if it had been a part of the organic law. A distinguished and very able Senator of the Grant party, who carefully inquired into the state of popular feeling, told me in 1875 that the sentiment which opposed a third term was stronger than a constitutional interdict; the people would more readily assent to a breach of positive law textually inserted into the constitution than to any disturbance of an unwritten rule which they regarded as sacred.

Certainly it was adhered to by all parties, with a fidelity which some of them did not show to the constitution itself, down to 1875, when the first attempt was made to contravene it by putting up Gen. Grant for a third election. This was everywhere received by the rank and file with mutterings of mutiny, and the most devoted partisans responded with curses which if not loud were deep. The movement, as Mr. Howe tells us, was met by solemn warnings from the newspaper press, by strong protests from political conventions, and finally by the resolution quoted at the head of this article, which was a rebuke so overwhelming that the supporters of the third-term candidate fled from him in fear, deserted him utterly, and left him without a single vote in the nominating convention of his own party.

Mr. Howe has no doubt that this resolution was the sole cause of Grant's defeat in 1876. He is equally certain that it was all wrong. However that may be, the present intent of Mr. Howe is to rally the routed third-termers and restore the courage of the recreants by the assurances that the jobs and offices are safe, after all.

Popular veneration for the men who built up our institutions is the strongest support for the institutions themselves. It is not only a great good intrinsically, but also the motive principle to other virtues which are indispensable in a Government like ours. Anything, therefore, which unjustly detracts from their reputation is a grievous public injury. This applies most especially to Washington, who is acknowledged, not only by us, but by every nation, tongue and kindred under heaven, to have been incomparably the greatest man that any country ever produced. An indecent criticism upon him shocks and shames us like blasphemy. Nevertheless, we would not abridge the liberty of speech. A raging third-termer has as good a right to sneer at the Father of his Country as an independent Hottentot has to beat his mother.

Jefferson also comes under review. His precedent, whether good or evil, is at least "to the purpose." In letters addressed to the Legislatures of Vermont, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, dated on the 10th of December, 1807, and printed in the Aurora, at Philadelphia, on the 19th of the same month, he solemnly and publicly announced to the country that he would not disregard the precedent of his illustrious predecessor by accepting another election. His reasons are brief, simple and clear, like all the productions of that master hand, and expressed in language so transparently truthful and dignified that no man of rightly constituted mind can read the paper without being stirred by the strongest emotions of respect and admiration for its author. It compresses into a few sentences all that needs to be said in favor of the two-term limitation, and is at the same time a perfect answer to all objections. Mr. Howe is fair enough to take a passage from it and incorporate it with his article; it shines there like a piece of solid gold set in a shapeless mass of lead. In these times, when the subject is up for renewed consideration, this letter should be read again and again; every citizen ought to have it by heart and teach it to his children, write it on the lintels of his door, bind it as a frontlet between his eyes, and make it the subject of his meditation day and night.

DEC. 10, 1807.

To the Legislature of Vermont:

I received in due season the address of the Legislature of Vermont, bearing date the 5th of November, 1806 in which, with their approbation of the general course of my administration, they were so good as to express their desire that I would consent to be proposed again to the public voice on the expiration of my present term of office. Entertaining as I do for the Legislature of Vermont those sentiments of high respect which would have prompted an immediate answer, I was certain, nevertheless, they would approve a delay which had for its object to avoid a premature agitation of the public mind on a subject so interesting as the election of a Chief Magistrate.

That I should lay down my charge at a proper period is as much a duty as to have borne it faithfully. If some termination to the services of a Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the constitution, or supplied by practice his office, nominally for years, will in fact become for life; and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance. Believing that a representative government responsible at short periods of election is that which produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind I feel it a duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and I should unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first example of prolongation beyond the second term of office.

Truth also requires me to add that I am sensible of that decline which advancing years bring on, and, feeling their physical, I ought not to doubt their mental, effect. Happy if I am the first to perceive and to obey this admonition of nature, and to solicit a retreat from cares too great for the wearied faculties of age.

For the approbation which the Legislature of Vermont has been pleased to express of the principles and measures pursued in the management of their affairs, I am sincerely thankful; and, should I be so fortunate as to carry into retirement the equal approbation and good will of my fellow-citizens generally, it will be the comfort of my future days, and will close a service of forty years with the only reward it ever wished.

Similar expressions are scattered all through his correspondence as long as he remained in office, and after he retired to Monticello he continued to repeat them. His conviction deepened, as the years rolled on, that the principle of two terms was the only safe one, and he constantly expressed his gratitude for the universal approval of his conduct in adopting it.

But Madison also adopted the principle of his two predecessors, and retired at the end of his second term. Can nothing be urged against the father of the constitution to depreciate his authority or make his example worthless? Was not he also unpatriotic and selfishly fond of his farm? This could be as easily said, and is not harder to believe, of him than of Washington.

And there was Monroe, apparently so clear in his great office "that rivalry itself shrunk from his presence, and he was elected a second time without effort, without opposition, without one vote against him. Is it nothing to the purpose that he acknowledged the value of the Washington precedent? Concede that he, the most popular of all Presidents, except the first one, could not have got a third term if he had asked for it, then his retirement proves not only that the two-term practice was right in his individual opinion, but that the general judgment of the nation was in its favor."

Gen. Jackson does not get off easily. We are told that "there is ground for believing that, if Mr. Van Buren had not secured the succession to Gen. Jackson, the latter would have been retained for another term." This is like the account we have of Jefferson's boom. If there was any practice of Jackson's great predecessors in which he acquiesced with more deference than another, it was their voluntary retirement after a proper period of service. He was wholly opposed to the indefinite continuance of power in the same hand, and he expressed his opinions on that, as on other subjects, with an emphasis which left no chance for misapprehension. The ground for believing that "in a certain contingency he would have been retained another term" is not anything he ever did or forbore to do—nothing that he ever wrote or spoke—nothing that ever was authorized by him or by the party which supported him, or by any representative of either.

Such is the outcome of Mr. Howe's assault upon the lives of our great retiring Presidents, from Washington to Jackson inclusive. It must be admitted that, if the predetermined object of the attack was to make himself ridiculous, it is a marked success; but, if it was an effort in real earnest to diminish their fame, lower their standing, or shake the confidence of the country in their virtue, then it is the flattest failure in his essay—and that is saying a great deal.

I think it may be affirmed with some confidence that Washington was not unworthy of the profound veneration in which he is held in this country and throughout the world; that succeeding Presidents, when they followed his footsteps, not only acknowledged his wisdom and patriotism but showed their own; that the American people of our day, when they refused a third term to a candidate who had already served for two, were not behaving like cowards scared by a senseless clamor, but doing what a prudent regard for their true interests required; that when the House of Representatives, in obedience to the universal sentiment of its constituents, unanimously and without distinction of party, put upon its records and published to the world its solemn declaration that the example of Washington must be adhered to in the future as in the past, they did not enact charlatanism or repeat a vociferation, or issue a strange fulmination, or impeach the constitution, or libel its framers, or counterfeit history, or insult common sense, but spoke what they at least believed to be the words of truth and soberness.

We are not to set up political dogmas or invoke a blind faith even in the founders of the Republic. The mere authority of names, however great, ought not to command our assent. But a fundamental doctrine, self-evidently true, though easy to defend, is the hardest of all things to support by affirmative argument. We cannot help but sympathize with the indignation of Pitt when he thundered out his refusal to look at books or listen to logic in defense of English liberty.

In the matter before us, it should be plain to every "reasonable creature in esse" that long continuance of supreme executive power in one hand is not only perilous to free institutions, but perfectly certain to destroy them. Some fixed time there ought to be when the people will not only have the right, but exercise it, to displace their Chief Magistrate and take another. If they do not possess this right, they are political bond servants by law; if, holding it, they forego the use of it, they make themselves, quoad hoc, voluntary slaves, and they soon come to be governed in all things by the will of their superior. A lease for years, renewable and always renewed, gives the tenant an estate without end, and makes him lord of the fee.

Where the Chief Magistrate is vested, as ours is, with great power liable to gross abuse, if there is no law or practice which forbids him to be re-elected, he can remain in office for life as easily as for a term. He has the appointment of all officers, the making of all public contracts, and a veto upon all legislation, besides the command of the army and navy. By an unscrupulous use of these means he can coerce not only his horde of immediate dependents, but he can control the corporations and become the master of all the rings, put the business of all classes under his feet, corrupt the venal, frighten the timid, and check all ambitions but his own. He can force the elections of every State he desires to carry by the bayonets of his army. If that fails, he can order a false return, and pay for it out of the public treasury. The people would soon perceive opposition to be useless and accept the situation; elections would be as mere a matter of form as they were in Rome when such Consuls as Nero and Domitian were elected regularly every year under the supervision of the Pretorian guards.

If these were no more than remote possibilities, prudence should guard against them. But they are near probabilities; the signs of the times warn us that the peril to our institutions is imminent; the danger is already on the wing. It is vain to remind us that the President swears to preserve, protect and defend the constitution, and see the laws faithfully executed. This is true; and it is also true that, if there be no perjury in the case, the constitution, laws and liberties of the country are safe. But the last twenty years have given us ample proof that an oath is not much restraint upon a President who is incited by ambition, rapacity or strong party feeling to break it.

It is true that this presupposes a people much degenerated and a magistrate animated mainly by the vulgar love of power for its own sake; but exactly such a conjunction of things has always been feared with good reason, and hence comes the desire to put every check on that tendency to "strong Government" which is now manifesting itself in many quarters.

What is the remedy? How shall we avert the dire calamities with which we are threatened? The answer comes from the graves of our fathers: By the frequent election of new men. Other help or hope for the salvation of free government there is none under heaven.

If history does not teach this, we have read it all wrong. In the republics of ancient and modern times, the chief magistrate was intrusted with only temporary power, and always went out of office at the end of a short period, fixed and prescribed by law or custom. It was this, indeed, which made the substantial distinction between them and the monarchies around them. An unpunished transgression of the customary limitation was uniformly followed by destruction. Everywhere and always it was the fatal symptom of decay—the sure forerunner of ruin. When Cæsar refused to lay down his Consulship, as his predecessors had done, at the end of a year, and was re-elected time after time with the acquiescence of the Senate and the people, all that was real in Roman freedom ceased to exist. Two republics in France were brought to an end in the same way. Napoleon began by being Consul for a term, then was elected for life, and finally became Emperor, with the powers of an absolute despot. The last Bonaparte was President for four years, was re-elected for ten, and ended, like his uncle, in grasping the imperial crown.

—"May this be washed in the Lethe and forgotten?" Shall these lessons be lost? Shall the lamp which guided our forefathers be extinguished? Shall the broad daylight of all human experience be closed up in a little dark lantern manufactured at Milwaukee? I think this cannot be done; "the eternal verities" are against it. The most powerful third-termer may as well try to blow out the sun, as he would a tallow candle, with the breath of his mouth.

Moreover, the two-term principle ought to be adhered to by us and by those who come after us (if there were no other reason), simply because it was the practice of those who went before us. It is to the traditions of the fathers that we owe our civilization.

I do not expect anything I can say to be received as a vindication of the two-term rule. Nor is it necessary. All the support it requires was long ago furnished by another, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. Jefferson, the stainless citizen, the sterling patriot, the unequaled statesman—at once the greatest apostle and truest prophet that freedom ever had—gave his judgment, not only at the time he acted upon the rule, but expressed his convictions after they were strengthened by many years of later reflection.

The practical object of Mr. Howe's article is to make Gen. Grant President for another term. It is not for an abstraction that he denounces the two-term precedent and vilifies the Springer resolution. The rule might stand if Grant could be elected without breaking it down. But Mr. Howe thinks that the superiority of his candidate is so very great that all authorities which oppose him should be disregarded, and he supports this opinion by assertions so extravagant that we only wonder how any man in his sober senses could have made them.

A third term for Grant does not mean a third term only, but any number of terms that he chooses to demand. The imperial method of carrying all elections by corruption or force, or of declaring them to be carried when they are not, is to be permanently substituted for the system of free popular choice.

The figure of Grant standing with the seal of primacy on the mountain top, and looking down on the inhabitants of the plain below, gives a measure of the elevation which his sycophants flatter him with the hope of attaining. They urge the necessity of a strong government almost in the very words used by the adherents of Cæsar and the two Napoleons. Strong government, in their sense, means weak laws and a strong ruler; in other words, a substantial monarchy, powerful in its scorn of all legal restraints.

A free democratic republican system of government honestly administered by agents of the people's true choice; a government such as ours was intended to be, with the power of the Federal Government, the rights of the States, and the liberties of the people so harmoniously adjusted that each may check the excesses of the other—such a government, scrupulously administered within its constitutional limits, is, without doubt, the choicest blessing that God in His loving kindness ever vouchsafed to any people. On the other hand, it is quite as sure that the false administration of a Government theoretically free, which acknowledges the rights of the people and yet continually treads them under foot; which swears to save and perjuriously works to destroy; which receives and promises to execute a most sacred trust, according to terms prescribed with unmistakable clearness, and then dishonestly breaks the engagement—such a Government, so conducted, is an unspeakable curse. It is not only an oppression, but a most demoralizing cheat; a base imposture, more degrading to the nation which submits to it than the heaviest yoke that despotic tyranny can fasten on its neck. If, therefore, a constitutional and legal administration of our national affairs be out of the question—if our only choice lies between a perverted republic and a monarchy—then stop this hypocritical pretense of free government, and give us a King. And who shall be our royal master but Grant? That he will serve the turn as well as, if not better than, another, will, I think, be admitted by all who attend to the reasons now presently to be enumerated.

In the first place, a new monarch (that is, one who has no hereditary claims) ought to be an approved good soldier, with skill to enforce obedience; otherwise, his sway could not last long over people disposed to be turbulent. All, or nearly all, the founders of royal lines have been military men, from Nimrod downward. It is vain to deny that Gen. Grant's reputation for military talent is well founded. It is more than doubtful if any officer of our army could have subjugated the South so completely, even with all Grant's advantages, or taken so many defeats and still won a complete victory in the end. It is not, however, what he has done, but what he has shown himself capable of doing, that gives him his leading qualification for masterdom now. The fear that goes before him will make actual violence unnecessary. His strength of character will frighten his subjects into submission where a weaker man would be compelled to butcher them for insurrection.

Gen. Grant is a good hater of those who thwart him, which is natural, and not a serious fault; but he is not fiercely vindictive, and his career has been marked by no act of savage cruelty. He could not be an Antonine or a Titus, but we can trust him not to be a Nero.

It may be objected that his moral behavior and mental acquirements do not bring him up to the mark which ought to be reached by the permanent ruler of a great, intelligent, and highly-civilized nation; but in this respect he is as good as the average of sovereign Princes. The present reigning family in England has never had a male member who was his superior. For centuries past the potentates of continental Europe, with only a few exceptions, have had habits as coarse as his, and he is wholly free from some terrible vices to which many of them were addicted. It seems to me that he will do well enough to "herd with vulgar Kings."

The nepotism from which our democratic tastes revolt is virtue in a King. All monarchs are expected to look after their own families first, and all have their minions and favorites whom they fatten, spoil, and corrupt. Who among them has not given his protection to a worse set than Grant?

The favor which Grant bestows upon corrupt rings is given for a purpose. As a candidate he cannot be elected, as President he cannot sustain himself, without their support; but enthrone him and he can afford to defy them.

What we call the greediness of Gen. Grant for the wages of official iniquity would be entirely proper in the supreme ruler of an absolute Government. It is not bribery to buy the favor of a King with presents, and a King is not guilty of stealing when he helps himself to public money without legal right.

It looks to us like a terrible outrage for a President to have himself represented at a State election by the bayonets of his standing army to install Governors that were rejected at the polls, to tumble the chosen Legislature of a free State out of its hall, to procure the fabrication of false returns and force them on the people. But Gen. Grant's lawlessness would be lawful in a country governed by the mere will of a personal sovereign. Where there is no law there can be no transgression.

But, while Gen. Grant has some qualities which would make him a tolerable King, and none that would make him an unendurably bad one, he is not at all the kind of person that is needed as President of the United States on the assumption that our system of Government is to be continued. I think it is to be continued. Unlike Mr. O'Conor, I believe that the struggle to get it honestly administered is not hopeless. We are not yet reduced to the necessity of choosing between a republic wholly corrupt and a monarchy founded in pure force. Therefore I conclude with Jefferson that, if any man—Gen. Grant particularly—"consents to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he will be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views."

REPUBLIC OR EMPIRE!

A Letter from Mr. Tilden.

15 GRAMERCY PARK,
NEW YORK, Feb. 21, 1880.

MY DEAR SIR: My engagements here will deny me the pleasure of being present at the dinner of the Democratic Association of Massachusetts on the anniversary of the birth of Washington. I need not say how much I should be delighted to meet the company who will be assembled on that occasion.

Nothing could be more fit at the present time than to commemorate that day. It was the Father of his Country, "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," who set the original example against a third term in the Presidential office. He made that memorable precedent as a guide to all his successors, and as an unwritten law of the American people. He did so in the light of a prevalent fear in the minds of the most ardent of the patriots who had achieved our national independence and created our system of free Government, that indefinite re-eligibility would degenerate into practical life tenure.

The vast power acquired by the Federal Government over the elections by its officeholders, its patronage, the money it levies, and its various forms of corrupt influence, have developed this danger until it darkens the whole future of our country.

In the choice between the republic and the empire, we must believe that the people will be true to their ancestry and to mankind.

Tendering you assurances of my esteem, I am respectfully yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

Henry Walker, Esq., Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Democratic Association of Massachusetts, Boston, Mass.

FOOD ADULTERATION.

An Interesting Report to Congress Upon the Subject.

The Committee on Manufactures of the House of Representatives has prepared an elaborate report upon the subject of the manufacture of articles of food and drink, and in favor of a bill to prevent the evils of adulteration in the District of Columbia and the Territories. The committee hold that Congress has no constitutional right to regulate this subject in the States, except in so far as the subject relates to inter-State commerce. They say: Some few leading articles, selected from the markets, have been subjected to analysis. Six packages of coffee from Baltimore, each containing two small boxes of coffee berries, were submitted to the chemist of the Agricultural Bureau. We quote from his letter:

These berries were accurately weighed, and washed with water, and the turbid washing evaporated to dryness. By this treatment the following quantities of substance were removed from the several samples submitted for the analysis. The results given indicate the per cent. of total weight of berries:

	Colored berries.	Uncolored berries.	Per cent. of difference.
No. 1	143	79	64
No. 2	72	53	19
No. 3	[illegible]	62	8
No. 4	108	94	14
No. 5	114	81	33
No. 6	91	88	3

The residues from the artificially-colored berries left, when burned, a yellowish residue, which contained in every case chromate of lead, phosphate of calcium (indicating bone-black), and sulphate of barium. These salts were added to these berries for the purpose of "facing" them, and, by improving their appearance, to enhance the market value of the berries. These above-mentioned salts were in no case found in the residues of the uncolored samples examined.

* * * * * * * *

These coffee berries had been passed through two cylinders coated with a compound of chrome, the base of which is lead and bone-black; in which process each berry was coated, and made to assume a polished surface and greenish hue. These cylinders are in the mills openly erected for this very purpose. And we are informed that jobbers in the coffee trade buy large lots, take it from the ship in which the coffee is imported to the mill, replace it in the same bags, and ship it West, as the original importation.

The adulteration of tea is notorious. Much of this is done in processes of drying and preparing for export in the countries where grown. Yet in the worst samples imported a very large percentage is theine. Our own citizens have far surpassed the heathen Chinese in successful adulteration of this article which adds so much to the enjoyment of the evening meal in palace and hut. Samples of what seemed good "gunpowder tea" found in the Washington Market may be seen at the Agricultural Bureau. Under the microscope it seems to be one-half Prussian blue. Its analysis is found on page 120 of the report on agriculture for 1878. There was in 100 parts only a trace of tea—only enough tea dust to impart the smell. Upon page 118 of same volume is an analysis of sirup not manufactured from the juice of any plant producing saccharine matter. It is made from matured corn, and, though not unwholesome, is a fraud when sold as a sirup.

Like this glucose syrup in resemblance to a genuine sirup we have oleomargarine, an artificial butter, of which Mr. George T. Angell, who has devoted many years to investigation of adulteration of food, says: "More than 90,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine butter and cheese were manufactured in this country in 1878, and I have microscopic photographs showing the fungi, living organism, and eggs resembling those of the tape worm." The same writer says: "The evidence of adulteration of sugars and sirups is simply overwhelming. One of the best chemists of the West has found chloride of tin, a poison, in twelve samples out of fourteen he analyzed. One of the most reliable sugar dealers of the West testifies that probably ninety-nine barrels of sugar out of every 100 sold in Chicago recently are adulterated. These are simply samples of volumes of evidence I have gathered from the as-yet unfathomed and unfathomable sea of adulteration."

The article of candy, which, since emancipation, has become throughout the South no mean article of commerce, we have had no opportunity to submit to chemical analysis. Its manufacture has increased with great rapidity, and we believe its cost has been considerably reduced. We do not know that foreign substances are used, but learn that "alba terra," or kaolin, has in recent years become in great commercial demand. It is estimated that 1,000 barrels of this substance, which is used to polish with, would fill every legitimate demand, while not less than 10,000 barrels are annually used. Sugar, flour, candy and perhaps other articles of food may readily be adulterated with this substance. Under the microscope its atoms present a jagged circumference, not unlike miniature circular saws.

Instances might be multiplied of the multiform devices by which nearly all that goes to form the mass of human food is represented to be what it really is not. In that which we drink, little, indeed, besides the water, beneficently made too cheap to adulterate, is that which it is represented to be. To give body and color, and often flavor, to alcoholic drinks, drugs most deleterious to health are frequently used. Angell says: "Probably 90 per cent. of the milk sold in Boston is adulterated, and infants fed on it are being starved, if not poisoned."

The great evil of adulteration is felt by the honest merchant in every section of our country, and memorials from cities come up praying Congress to stay its ravages by the restraining power of penal enactments.

ERNEST HART, the advocate of kitchen economy, gave in London a dinner recently. He had a clear soup, roasted herrings with mustard sauce, curried eggs, scalloped lobster, beef with beans, turnips with gravy sauce, mince pie and an ice. The whole dinner cost for each person 16 cents.

INDIANA ITEMS.

GEORGE INMAN, aged 65, fell dead while chopping wood near Bedford.

THE promising trotting mare, Kate Bennet, valued at $10,000, is dead, at Rushville.

THE recent death at Fort Wayne of Alexander Godfrey was followed on the following day by the death of his son James.

CITIZENS of Knightstown make serious charges of cruelty against Mr. Ibach, Superintendent of the Home for Feeble-Minded Children, near that city.

A SALOON-KEEPER at Vincennes came near losing his life by poison, which some one placed in a glass of seltzer which he was about to drink at his own bar.

THERE are now filed in the Governor's office ninety petitions for pardons and remissions of fines and forfeitures Many of them date back for several years.

THE Baker bridge, near Crothersville, on the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis railroad, which has caused the death of eighteen persons, has been burned.

INDIANA has one of the very largest school funds of any State in the nation, and her public-school system is in perfect trim, with its 13,000 teachers and 400,000 school children.

AN 8-months-old child of Mrs. Issa Casten, of Cloverdale, Putnam county, crawled under the stove during the mother's absence, and, getting wedged there, was roasted to death.

A FORMERLY REPUTABLE citizen of New Albany, but now a confirmed drunkard, has been arrested for stealing chairs from one of the temperance organizations of the city which he sold to purchase whisky.

GEO. WOODS, who has already been tried twice for the murder of Millie Hobb, July 15, 1877, committed suicide in his cell in jail, at Evansville, the other night. He left a letter saying he would not stand a third trial.

THE Governor has remitted a fine in an adultery case—a marriage following a Utah divorce. It is said that there are several more cases of the same kind—marriages consummated after the procurement of Beaver county (Utah) divorces—over the State.

AN old man named John Fells, who had resided alone in a small cabin in Spencer township, Harrison county, since his wife died a year ago, was found dead in his house, the other day, with the eyes gnawed out and arms and face badly eaten by rats.

THE Richmond street-railroad stables burned the other night. All the rolling stock of the company was destroyed. The stables and part of the cars had been built but a few weeks. They were owned by J. F. Miller. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

MISS FLORA GATES, daughter of Albert Gates, a farmer living about four miles southeast of Muncie, was fatally burned, her clothing catching fire while she was engaged in smoking meat in a smoke-house, near her father's residence. A sister was also badly burned in attempting to extinguish the flames.

A MONTH ago Joseph Clevenger, of Rushville, was bitten between the index and middle finger of his right hand by a rat. Two weeks ago his hand and arm became so much swollen and the pain so severe that the most powerful anodyne failed to quiet him. He got some better, but took a relapse, and is now likely to die.

FRED SEIZER, a former barkeeper, of Evansville, more recently of Rockport, fired through a window of A. J. Hickman's saloon at the barkeeper, who had put him out. The barkeeper, seeing the movement, dodged behind the counter and escaped. Hickman went to the door, when Seizer shot him through the head, killing him instantly.

CAMPBELL LOVELESS, living near New Lisbon, stricken with palsy about two months ago, has complained bitterly ever since of his misfortune, saying he didn't see why God Almighty didn't cause both sides to be paralyzed and kill him, and be done with it. Twenty days ago he declared his intention of starving himself to death, and since that time he has refused to take any food or nourishment whatever.

WILLIAM M. RUSTON and OSCAR H. KNOX, two highly esteemed Evansville young men, went out hunting in the low land across the river. They did not return in the evening, as expected, and search was instituted, but without success. Next morning another party renewed the search, and found the dead bodies of both in close proximity to each other. The supposition is that, night overtaking them, they became lost, and perished from cold and exhaustion.

A High-Toned Merchant.

The Chinese are remarkable for their business talent. So sharp and clever are they, that some one has named them "the Yankees of the East." In one respect, they excel not only the Yankees, but all the people of the United States. They carry on their Government on business principles, just as we manage a cotton factory or a railroad.

Two thousand years ago, they formed their civil service on the basis that "merit only, established by public examinations, gives the right to every public office."

England, imitating the Chinese, some fifteen years ago elevated her civil service to a similar plane. The United States, however, is still in the slough from which the Chinese extricated themselves long before our ancestors wore decent clothing.

Another custom of this peculiar people is worthy of the imitation of the "outside barbarians." It is said that before New Year's day—which occurs on the 28th of January—every Chinaman who values his reputation pays all his debts. What value a Chinese merchant puts on his reputation may be learned from a suggestive story.

During the troubles which preceded the war with England, the Chinese Viceroy, Ye, issued an edict condemning to death every native convicted of holding the slightest intercourse with the "barbarians."

The English, French, and other European merchants were thus forced to close their counting-houses in Canton; for the native clerks and porters left their employ, and no Chinese merchant dared openly to transact business with them. Besides, they feared for their lives, and many of them made preparations to leave the city.

Among these was a Swiss merchant. While he was packing up his goods one night, he was surprised to see a Chinese merchant, who owed him a large sum, enter his store. With him were two coolies, carrying ingots of silver with which to pay the debt.

The Swiss merchant expressed his astonishment at the temerity of his Chinese debtor.

"I did not wish," replied the Chinaman, "that any one should think I would take advantage of these unfortunate circumstances and not pay my debts."

A Cautious Sentinel.

At Cambridge, Gen. Washington had heard that the colored soldiers were not to be depended upon for sentries. So one night, when the password was "Cambridge," he went outside the camp, put on an overcoat, and approached the colored sentinel.

"Who goes there?" cried the sentinel.

"A friend," replied Washington.

"Friend, advance unarmed, and give the countersign," said the colored man.

Washington came up and said, "Roxbury."

"No, sar!" was the response.

"Medford," said Washington.

"No, sar!" returned the colored soldier.

"Charlestown," said Washington.

The colored man immediately exclaimed:

"I tell you what, sar, no man go by here 'out he say, 'Cambridge.'"

Washington said "Cambridge," and went by, but the next day the colored gentleman was relieved of all further necessity for attending to that branch of military duty.

A Chinese Rip.

Never heard the Chinese version of Rip Van Winkle, did you? The Chinese Rip was a patriarch named Wang Chih. He was gathering firewood one day on the mountains of Ku Chow, when he found a grotto where some old men were playing chess. As he watched them one of them gave him what looked like a date-stone, telling him to put it in his mouth. No sooner had he tasted it than he ceased to feel hunger and thirst. By and by one of the players said: "It is long since you came here; you should go home now." Wang Chih went to take up his ax, and found the handle had moldered into dust. Undismayed, however, he went home, but found that centuries had passed since he went out wood-cutting. No vestige of his kinsfolk remained. He retreated to a cell in the mountains, and, devoting himself to religious exercises, finally attained immortality.

An Astonishing Woman.

[Newburg (N. Y.) Letter to the New York Times.]

Esther Yates, the Amazon of Plattekill, Ulster county, died a few days ago at her home, near Break-neck Hill, on the mountains, in that town. She was born in the town of Plattekill in 1798, and resided there until the day of her death. Physically, she was more like a man than a woman, her shoulders being broad and her muscles well developed. She acquired little or no education. She is credited with being self-reliant, and asking no favors from any one. During the winter season Mrs. Yates cut cord-wood on the mountain, and, in the language of one of the natives, "it took a good man to swing an ax alongside of her." On several occasions she cut as much as three cords of wood in one day, in addition to performing the household duties in her home after sunset. In the summer this remarkable woman cut grain for the Plattekill farmers, and was rated as "a good hand." She cultivated a small garden-patch of her own, the product of which she sold principally in this city. She carried her garden truck in two large baskets. Farmers, while driving here to ship their hay on the boats, would offer her a ride, and her invariable reply was: "I am in a hurry; take you all day to get there." She could easly outwalk any team with a load behind them. Six years ago a horse, while passing her home on Break-neck, fell, and become fast in the harness The driver and several other men could not succeed in getting the animal loose. Mrs. Yates lifted the horse up bodily, but in so doing fractured her leg. The bone never set. Her spirit, however, was not curbed, even if she was an octogenarian and a cripple. Though suffering much pain, her daily employment consisted in chopping up kindling-wood on a block while she sat in a chair in front of her house. A short time previous to her death her general health began failing, but she retained her faculties to the last. Prior to the accident she never was sick a day in her life. Mrs. Yates was buried from the Plattekill Methodist Episcopal church of which denomination she was an adherent. Mrs. Yates was married twice. She leaves no family.

Aristocratic Kleptomaniacs.

About eight years ago an alarm reached the chief police office in London that jewels of great value had been stolen from a lady of high rank while a guest at a quiet northern country house. A handsome reward was offered and not long afterward the property had been recovered. Astounding as it may seem, it is nevertheless true, that the temporary appropriator of the fine things was a millionaire peer, who, albeit in no wise penurious is singularly simple in his personal habits, and does not spend one-fourth of his income. The matter was all hushed up, and very few persons outside of the family knew who the thief, if we can so call him, really was. This was a genuine case of kleptomania, and proves beyond a doubt that it really exists. An English earl of high distinction had this weakness from boyhood, and it involved his leaving Eaton. When, in after year, he entered the cabinet, it was rumored that Lord —— had entirely conquered the propensity, "except that at a cabinet council he could not resist 'Dizzy's' new green kid gloves." The alarming disappearance of wax candles at the Travelers' club, London, some twenty years ago, caused much dismay. The mystery was at length solved by a member of the committee seeing the old duke of C. (with a clear $750,000 a year) ambling along a corridor with a candle sticking out of each coat tail-pocket. His family were communicated with, and his grace ceased to come to the club. Possibly a similar tendency may perhaps explain an untoward incident which occured last season at Newport, and has lately been recalled by a concatenation of curious circumstances. There is doubtless a great deal of sham kleptomania, but it is not the less true that sometimes it is perfectly genuine. It is however, very unfortunate to be at once kleptomaniac and impecunious.

A Lingual Struggle.

[All the Year Round.]

Hindu-English is ceartainly funny reading. Among the 400 applications for employment as census enumerators received by the president of the Madras Municipality, one ran: "I am seeing in the papers that you is going to make a census of the peoples. I shall feel very much glad for to become an enumerator. I can make fast, fast count. You can see by my writing that it is distinct and clear. I learned writing of one writing-master. I am living on the back-side of Veerasaurny Chetty's house." Quoth another candidate: "Allow me the prerogative to intrude on your valuable time, whose wheels roll in amber and gold. Yet to try by scroll is a useful maxim to young and old, rich and poor, and a great deal may be got by those who put this simple but useful rule into practice. Having heard that enumerators for the preliminary census are about to exist in the municipal department, I most respectfully beg to offer my services for the forecited post. If I fortunately succeed, I will give you all the satisfaction I can produce in discharge of duties intrusted to me. I can speak Tamil, Hindustance, Burnese and Malaylum languages."

WRITE THEM A LETTER TO-NIGHT.

Don't go to the theater or ball,
But stay in your room to-night;
Deny yourself to the friends that call,
And a good long letter write;
Write to the sad old folks at home,
Who sit when the day is done
With folded hands and down-cast eyes
And think of the absent one.

Don't selfishly scribble "excuse my haste,
I've scarcely the time to write,"
Lest their brooding thoughts go wandering back,
To many a by-gone night,
When they lost their needed sleep and rest
And every breath was a prayer
That God would leave their delicate babe,
To their tender love and care.

Don't let them feel you've no more need
Of their love or counsel wise,
For the heart grows strongly sensitive
When age has dimmed the eyes.
It might be well to let them believe
You'd never forget them quite;
That you deemed it a pleasure when far away
Long letters home to write.

Don't think that the young and giddy friend
Who makes your pastime gay,
Has half the anxious thought for you,
That the old folks have to-day.
The duty of writing do not put off,
Let sleep or pleasure wait,
Lest the letter for which they looked and longed
Be a day or an hour too late.

For the sad old folks at home,
With locks fast turning white,
Are longing to hear from the absent one—
Write them a letter to-night.

Short novel: A Boston woman became stage struck; cruel husband refused to let her become an actress; she got a divorce and then failed on the stage; went back and asked hubby to forgive her. He was sucker enough to do so, and they were remarried.

Virginia, the home of presidents, is rapidly becoming the asylum of statesmen and the hotbed of oratory. In the course of a debate the other day, a member of the house of representatives observed: "In the awful presence of Almighty God, and in the awful presence of the assembly, the gentleman from Rockbridge is a d—d liar."

"What a delightful place the country must be," said a young Fitzaltamont to an etherial being who had lived on a farm all her life. "Nothing to do but to pluck the buttercups and daisies and to hear the little birds chirping all day. And then the gurgling brooks. Ah, me! we city folks don't know what the country is." Then the maiden looked up into his face with the coyest kind of a smile, and warbled: "You're way off, young'un; this is a pig-stickin' time, an' we don't have no daisies an' buttercups and gurgling brooks. Somebody's been a stuffin' you!" That young man will not visit the country soon again.

Taking Oath Upon It.

[London Sporting Times.]

A clergyman who lately left Liverpool in one of the huge ocean steamers began to feel rather uncomfortable soon after leaving the mouth of the river, and having had an introduction to the captain sought him out to learn if there was any danger. The captain did not answer immediately, but led his passenger to the forecastle and told him to listen to what was going on. The clergyman was shocked to hear a party of sailors swearing vigorously, and expressed his horror to his conductor. The captain merely remarked: "Do you think these men would swear in such a manner if there were any real danger?" Whereupon the parson seemed satisfied and retired. A day or two afterward, when they encountered rather a severe storm, the clergyman, remembering what he had been shown before, managed to make his way with great difficulty to the forecastle, and was overheard by the captain, as he came away, exclaiming to himself. "Thank God they're swearing yet!"

Township Assessors.

Among the officers to be chosen at the April election that of township assessor is not the least important. It is made doubly so this year on account of the appraisement of real estate which is to be made in addition to the duties of listing the personal property. It is the case in too many instances that but very little attention is paid to the qualifications of those who seek to fill the position. It is an important matter that all classes of property should be properly assessed. It requires peculiar qualifications for a man to be a good assessor. He must be possessed of an unusual amount of common sense and an extensive experience in the affairs of life. What is needed as much as anything else is a tact of finding sequestered property. There is entirely too much that escapes taxation. The property must be found and assessed. The question of township assessor is therefore of no little consequence, and should receive that attention from those who choose these officers that its importance demands.—Crawfordsville Journal.

The formation of a new through passenger and freight line from Detroit to Chicago, via the Detroit, Hillsdale and Southwestern, the Fort Wayne and Jackson and the Baltimore and Ohio roads, is probably a fixed fact, which, if it be the case, will also, after the consolidation of the Fort Wayne and Jackson and the Muncie and Cincinnati roads, make a through and direct route from Detroit to Indianapolis.—Ft. Wayne Sentinel.

A Lagrange County Democrat.

We were favored with a call on Saturday from Cyrus Fillmore, of this county, residing near Orland. He is one of the early settlers of this county, and, by the way, is a staunch democrat, being a brother of Millard Fillmore, who stepped into the presidential chair on the death of Zachary Taylor, in 1850. Mr. Fillmore, though 88 years old, has, it would seem, the promise of at least casting many votes with his party, as he appears quite supple in his movements.—Lagrange Democrat.

Advertising.

There is one reason for advertising that business men rarely consider—its general effect on the prosperity of their own place. The newspaper goes out into the world from week to week as the representative of the city, and men judge of the city more by the newspaper than anything else. If it is newsy and able, and many local firms are represented in its advertising columns, they assume at once, and generally correctly, that it comes from a live city—a good city to live in and live near—and they thus are drawn thither. The effect is not slight and the suggestion is one which deserves the consideration of every tradesman.

Obituary.

James W. Watson, of Butler, Ind. employed on the coal-dock of the L. S. & M. S. Rail Road at that place, while discharging his duty on the 12th of March, 1880, was thrown from the coal-derrick to the ground, a distance of 11 feet, the fall fracturing his skull and causing instant death. He leaves a wife and one child. His remains were taken to Spencerville for interment, followed by many relatives and friends. He was born in this county, July 19, 1846, and was cut down in the prime of life. When he left home on the day of his death, he bade his wife and daughter an affectionate good-bye, never again to meet them on this earth.

JOHN M. STEWARD.

They Prefer Hendricks.

[New York World.]

Eighty thousand anti-Tilden Democrats! How will they be dealt with by the coming democratic state convention in New York? That is a vital and a burning question which the democratic leaders may wink out of sight, but which the democratic masses must straightway answer. The Louisville Courier-Journal, speaking obviously under bonds and in the interest of Mr. Tilden, declares that these 80,000 anti-Tilden democrats can never again be represented in a democratic convention. Mr. Conkling's treatment of Mr. Blaine and of Mr. Blaine's delegates at Utica gives a portentious significance to this suggestion. Is the democratic party of New York to be reduced to the dimensions of a Tilden party, just as Mr. Conkling means to reduce the republican party of New York to the dimensions of a Grant third-term party? It is well known that the friends of Chief Justice Church in New York prefer either the chief justice or Mr. Hendricks as their candidate in 1880, but they must be counted as democrats nevertheless, just as the followers of Mr. Blaine and Mr. Sherman must be counted as republicans—at least till Mr. Conkling formally expels them from the organization.

Was it Our J. V.

We think it must have been. At all events the indications are that way, as will be seen by the following interesting tale which we clip from the Chicago Times of last Thursday:

HE WAS DISAPPOINTED.

A well-dressed stranger dropped into Lydson's place, on Madison street, near McVicker's theater, yesterday afternoon, and, laying a silver dollar down on the bar, demanded a bed. The barkeeper informed him that it was not a hotel, whereupon the visitor took a vial from his pocket and swallowed the contents. The dispenser of liquid refreshments asked the man what he had taken, and was turned into a panic by the reply: "Laudanum." The fellow made preparations to die then and there, and a half-dozen messengers were dispatched for doctors. An Esculapian was soon on the scene, and enough emetics were pumped into the would-be suicide to displace a car-load of morphine. Two lusty policemen ran the stranger up and down the alley behind McVicker's to keep him alive, prodding him up occasionally with their clubs to accelerate the circulation. The man was taken to the armory, and thence to the county hospital, where he is recovering from the effects of his rashness. He gave the name of J. V. Hazzard, and claims to have come from North Platte, Neb. He reached Chicago about a week ago. He says he has a sister living on Aldine square, but refuses to give her number. Since his arrival in the city he has been stopping at the Atlantic hotel.

The theory of nearly everybody whom we have heard express an opinion in regard to this last exploit of J. V's, is that he had been on a spree in Chicago, got "broke," and made an attempt to get a pass over the laudanum route to the eternal regions.

What our Exchanges Say Concerning the Proposed Constitutional Amendments.

$250,000 A YEAR.

[Columbia City Post.]

A registration law will cost the tax-payers of the state $250,000 at least—and it may be a good deal more—every two years. Do the tax payers feel like footing the bill? If so, vote for the constitutional amendments.

VOTE AN EMPHATIC "NO."

[Columbia City Post.

Amendment number one proposes a registration law, with its consequent large expense, and loss of time to voters. Its provisions requiring a residence of 60 days in the township and 10 days in a ward will disfranchise thousands of poor men who have no fixed habitation in the spring or fall. The amendment ought to be denominated a "measure to disfranchise the farming and laboring classes, and to eat up taxes levied upon the people." Registration means fraud in elections. Vote an emphatic "NO" and strike out "yes."

THE DOOR FOR WHOLESALE FRAUDS.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

Experience is usually a safe teacher. Experience in Indiana showed that a registration law, so far from protecting the purity of the ballot-box, only opens the door for wholesale frauds. It showed that the law placed a dangerous power in the hands of partisan registration officers. It showed that such a law practically disfranchised many thousands of poor men. The law produced universal disgust, and was finally repealed by a republican legislature before the supreme court had passed upon its constitutionality, and yet voters are asked to incoporate in the constitution provisions which shall compel the permanent adoption of such an unwise and iquitous law.

THEY SHOULD BE DEFEATED.

[Ft. Wayne Sentinel.]

The Sentinel is opposed to registration laws because they have proved failures wherever they have been tried. Ostensibly intended to "preserve the purity of the ballot-box," they in reality only afford the greatest latitude for fraud. In Indiana the registration law produced general disgust. In Philadelphia it is the cover for the grossest frauds upon the ballot-box. The proposed constitutional amendments would forever fasten this infamous law upon our people, would largely increase the cost of our elections, and would virtually disfranchise many thousands of laboring men. The amendments should be defeated by a large majority.

ARBITRARY AND UNREASONABLE.

[Ligonier Banner.]

The object of requiring a voter to reside six months in the state before voting, is to enable him to become acquainted with the laws of the state, and the nature of the offices to which men are to be elected, but having once mastered these requirements, upon what principle or reason should he be compelled to reside sixty days in the township before voting? Why should it take a man moving from Perry township to Elkhart township sixty days to gain a residence in Elkhart? Would not one-sixth the time be ample to satisfy all the requirements of justice and right? If amendment number one is adopted the sixty-day rule will be in order. A rule so arbitrary and unreasonable should never be permitted.

A DONKEY'S BRAY.

[Huntington Democrat.]

Some newspaper scribbler, with more conceit than brains, in speaking of the constitutional amendments, says: —"We need just such amendments and every man of education, common sense, and intelligence, will view it in that light." The man, then, that will refuse to vote for an amendment that disfranchises him should he move across a township line fifty-nine days before any election, although he may have been a resident of the county all his life' is not a man of "common sense" in the estimation of this newspaper scribbler. The voter that refuses to support the amendments that require him to spend the time to attend a registration office and entrust his franchise to a partisan registration officer, is not a man of "intelligence" in the eyes of this very smart (?) quill driver.

The Story Which Ex-Governor Cox's Son Tells.

[Milwaukee News.]

Mr. Charles N. Cox, son of General Jacob D. Cox, Grant's first secretary of the interior, gave the following information to a reporter of the News:

"I know of a case which, I think, brings official corruption more nearly home to Grant personally than even the check in the famous Black-Friday investigation. It is not of my own positive personal knowledge, it is true, but it came to me in such a way that I could not be more firmly convinced of its truth had I seen it myself. My knowledge of the transaction dates long subsequent to the occurence, but that cannot affect the fact that it did occur, and occur precisely as I learned it. As you will probably remember, after my father left General Grant's cabinet, he became identified with the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad, at one time as president, at another as receiver. Some time in 1877, either in the spring or summer, Mr. John Ellis, who was either at that time, or had been at one time, a principal owner of the Toledo, Wabash and Western, dined with my father, and at the dinner-table told us the following incident connected with his railroad ventures: In 1871 he was largely interested in a western railroad enterprise, the financial success or failure of which was largely dependent upon the fate of a bill then before congress."

In reply to an inquiry, Mr. Cox stated that Mr. Ellis did not mention the particular railroad, nor did he specify the bill:

"Mr. Ellis then went on to tell us that while he was off in the west he received a dispatch from a friend in the White House stating that the bill in which he (Ellis) was interested had passed congress and been sent to the president for his approval, but that Grant had decided to withhold his approval and to return it to congress with a veto. Mr. Ellis immediately telegraphed his informant to persuade the president to defer final action in the matter until he (Ellis) could reach Washington. Taking the first train he traveled night and day till he reached New York. He immediately called upon a friend who he knew had managed a good many matters in Washington, and was familiar with the methods of doing business in that city and securing favorable legislation—in short, a trained and successful lobbyist—to procure advice. Having explained the object of his visit, and the exact status of the bill, he was at once directed to go and see General Butterfield, then assistant treasurer of the United States, and lay the case before him, and be governed wholly by his advise or instruction.

"General Butterfield was hunted up, and the business explained fully, to the effect that if the president persisted in his determination to veto the bill in question, the western railroad enterprise would in all probability prove a losing venture; whereas, should he on the contrary approve it, the parties in interest would almost inevitably reap a handsome profit; that the president had been induced to hold the matter under advisement until he (Ellis) could reach Washington, and the object of the visit to General Butterfield was to obtain his advice as to the best means of inducing the president to favor the measures and and sign the bill.

"General Butterfield instructed Mr. Ellis to call upon the gentleman by whose advice he had called upon him. Being informed that he came direct from his office to him, the general replied: 'Never mind that, call on him again in about an hour or such a matter.'

"At the time indicated Mr. Ellis called again on the lobbyist, and told him he had been directed to call by General Butterfield. This did not satisfy the lobbyist, who required that he should bring a note from the assistant treasurer. After repairing again to Butterfield, Mr. Ellis visited the lobbyist the third time. The note was read, and Mr. Ellis was informed that it would cost $35,000 to insure the success of his bill. Mr. Ellis went immediately to a bank, drew the money, and returned to his friend, the lobbyist, who left the room as he entered and showed him the bundle containing the currency. As he left the room at one door Mr. Ellis placed the package of money on the table, and retired by another, bearing his friend return as he did so, and in three hours Mr. Ellis had a telegram from his friend in the White House saying the bill was signed."

In reply to some further questions Mr. Cox said he would not like to have the story published, but his father was in Cincinnati and Mr. Ellis in New York, and neither of them could or would deny that Mr. Ellis had related this occurrence at General Cox's table in the spring or summer of 1877.

Jay Gould's Late Visit to Texas.

[Correspondence of St. Louis Republican.]

DALLAS, March 18.—Jay Gould's sudden and short visit to Texas has been given to the world by the click of the telegraph. His entrance was no more sudden than his exit; he came one day and departed the next; went to Fort Worth and immediately started for Hot Springs. But no matter how brief his visit, the people feel that his coming means business, and that, in material interests, they have in the modern railroad monarch a substantial friend. It had been announced through the public press that Mr. Gould and party would remain in this state the greater part of March, inspecting the railroad system of the state, and in conjunction with Gen. Eckert interest himself in the telegraphic facilities of this section and the southwest generally. Your correspondent, in a brief and friendly conversation with Mr. Gould, was surprised at an expression of opinion by him concerning the Indian territory. In substance, it was that the opening of the territory was not to him and his railroad associates a very desirable thing just at present. He gave as his reason the following words: "The M. K. and T. and Texas Pacific are not as anxious as some would make it appear for the opening of the territory. They are not yet ready for it. They want to get so far ahead of all other lines and get their different connections and roads extended in such a way that they cannot be overtaken, and will be masters of the railroad situation." This is almost the literal language used by Mr. Gould in the presence of your correspondent, and is rather at variance with the New York Sun's intimation, that Jay Gould has induced congressmen to load up with stocks of his Kansas and Texas railroad—which stock, it is urged, will appreciate in value through the opening of the Indian territory, and has then hammered down the price of this security in order to compel them to vote for the opening of that great reservation or lose money.

CORUNNA, IND., March 13, 1880.

EDITORS COURIER: It is with some degree of reluctance that I reply a second time to charges brought against me by the Corunna correspondent of the Waterloo Press. If he were as well known to the public as he is to his neighbors it would not be necessary. If you will pardon me for stooping so low as to notice him a second time, I will give him a passing thought. On receiving my reply to his correspondence he was suddenly seized with spasmodic cramps and symptoms of hydrophobia, but soon gave vent to his feelings by closely imitating the actions of a large domestic animal which is well known for his ability for tearing up the earth with his forefeet and making a loud noise with his mouth. After his fury subsided he again resumed his old position of standing on the street or some other conspicuous place with his mouth stretched from ear to ear, much resembling a bar-room spittoon, ready to receive any filth the public may see proper to deposit; and when his craw is filled to its full capacity he, like the buzzard, spews it out upon any one who may in any way disturb his dignity. Thus his weapons of warfare are more to be dreaded than feared. They are strong but not powerful. He says, "I suppose they think they have demolished somebody by calling me a fool, a liar and a coward." I did not expect to "demolish" anybody. I only expected to expose Mr. Nobody. He says, "the kettle is calling the pot black." This is not the case, for the "pot" he nearest represents is not black. The charges brought against me are false. This is no more than might be expected, from the fact that practice has made him a detestable liar and nature has stamped him a consummate fool. I will drop the controversy here, and not reply further to any of his slang, but will regard his insults as the best honors he is capable of bestowing upon me.

ARDENT GREENBACKER.

Third Term.

The Methodist says a few of the objections to a third term are these:

1. That we never had one—it is a political novelty.
2. That it is likely to lead to something else that is undesirable—a sort of life-presidency at the mildest.
3. That it is chiefly advocated by men who got their influence under terms one and two.
4. That some of these men are unsavory.
5. That the said third term is asked for solely on the grounds of personal claims of the candidate to extraordinary favor, and republics cannot grant such favors.
6. That for the foregoing reasons the republican party cannot afford to risk its success on the political novelty called a third term.
7. Somebody is likely to be deceived in third-term matters. It cannot be that the stalwart republicans and the southern brigadiers own the candidate.
8. The friends of a third term threaten revolution—by "50,000 armed men," one paper puts it—if their candidate is not "counted in."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and pleasant cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. PROF. SAWYER, the rival of Edison in the race for the achievement of a practical, economical electric light, claims to have solved the mighty problem. A public exhibition of his lamp was given in New York a few nights ago, and those who witnessed it are of the opinion that it will prove a big success. The lamp is based upon the incandescence of a pencil of carbon immersed in nitrogen gas and is not different in principle from the old Sawyer-Mann lamp. The pencil is contained within a globe two inches in diameter and ten inches high, sealed at the bottom by means of a cement, which, while adhering perfectly to the glass and metal, is sufficiently elastic to compensate for the unequal expansion of the two, and softens only at a temperature of 500 degrees Fahrenheit. This cement is a compound long sought for unsuccessfully. The cost of the lamp is less than $1.25. The light is readily lowered to a glimmer by simply turning a button. Prof. Sawyer estimates the cost, compared with gas at $2 per 1,000 feet, in the proportion of two to ten. The light is a trifle stronger than gas, but steady, soft, and pleasant, and very much like gas.

THE conspirators in the Lewis will case have been sentenced at Trenton, N. J., as follows: Mark Sacra and Frank Ward Allison, each two years in the State prison and $10,000 fine; Bradford and Brassford, one year in the State prison and $1,000 fine.... THE WEST.

INDIAN news: C. D. Richards telegraphs from Fort Buford, Dakota Territory: "Sitting Bull has lost all his former power in the hostile camp, and is en route for this agency. Trouble is expected here before spring."—Advices from New Mexico report a fight in the Sacramento mountains between twenty mounted men under Lieut. Conline, and a portion of Victoria's band, in which the latter were defeated and a large amount of stock captured.—A report comes from Fort Peck Indian Agency that the Yanktonnai Sioux and Assinaboine Sioux, comprising that agency, had declared war against each other, and that fifteen Yanktonnais had been killed and many wounded, and about the same number of Assinaboines.

A TREMENDOUS explosion, attended by frightful loss of life, occurred at Frankfort, Ind., on the morning of the 11th inst. A little before 7 o'clock in the morning, the men—ten in number—employed in the flax mill of Lehman, Rosenthal & Co., were seated in the boiler room, warming themselves preparatory to beginning the day's work. Suddenly there came a terrific explosion, tearing the mill into atoms, shaking the houses throughout the town, and arousing people for miles around. When the astonished villagers had arrived upon the scene, the remnants of the mill were burning, and the mangled corpses were lying scattered over the surrounding territory. The destruction was complete. Not a piece of the boiler exceeding 300 pounds in weight could be found anywhere. The brick foundation in which the boiler stood was shattered so that scarcely one brick lay upon another. Mangled and distorted human bodies lay about the fields twenty or thirty feet from the boiler-house, one body being thrown a distance of 150 yards.... The bodies were mutilated almost beyond recognition, and were thrown from fifty to 165 yards. Their clothes were torn into shreds, two of them being entirely stripped. The head of one was blown entirely away, and no vestige of it could be found. Another had his head all torn to pieces. Of the ten bodies only two were buried in the rubbish, the rest being blown entirely out of the building.... Kearney, the labor agitator, was arrested in San Francisco, the other day, for using threatening language in a public speech. He was held in bonds for trial.... After a fortnight of incessant labor, the snow and ice blockade on the Dakota division of the Northern Pacific railroad has been removed. Two hundred men and seventeen locomotives were employed in clearing the track, which in some places was so completely imbedded in ice that the strongest snow-plows made no impression upon it. The winter just passed has been unprecedented in severity in the far Northwest.... Gen. Miles is making it rather troublesome for the hostile Sioux. The mounted infantry under Capt. Baldwin struck the Indian trail on the 10th, chased the savages for thirty miles, and captured all their horses, except those which they were riding.

Henderson, Mr. Charles Webster, Mr. Eugene Eberle, Miss Estelle Mortimer, Mrs. M. B. Snyder, Miss Charlotte Neville, Little Georgie, Mr. Denny.

THE labor troubles in San Francisco are about over, Mayor Kalloch and Dennis Kearney, at a public meeting, informing their followers that the different movement had been misunderstood, and that, instead of being inimical to the interests of the workingmen, it was intended for their amelioration and the good of the entire city. Subsequently a conference between representatives of the contending factions was held at the office of the Mayor, at which measures favoring the settlement of the questions which have so long vexed the community were adopted.... Five or six men who recently left Silverton, Col., on a prospecting trip have been killed by Indians near the Blue mountains.

POLITICAL.

THE Missouri Republican State Committee, at a meeting held in St. Louis last week, named Sedalia as the place and April 14 as the time for the holding of the party State Convention to choose delegates to the Chicago Convention. During the session of the committee Chairman Shields, a hot Blaine man, became offended at the course of the Grant members, who were largely in the majority, and resigned, whereupon Chauncey I. Filley, an active Grant worker, was made a member of the committee, and at once chosen Chairman.

A MASS meeting of Republicans opposed to the nomination of Gen. Grant to a third term was held in Mercantile Library Hall, St. Louis, one night last week. Ex-Senator John B. Henderson was the chief spokesman. The following resolution was adopted: "That it is the sense of this meeting that the nomination of a Presidential candidate for a third term is unwise, inexpedient and subversive of the traditions of the Government, and likely to endanger the success of the Republican party."

THE Republican Committee of Ohio have issued a call for a State Convention of the party at Columbus, April 28, for the purpose of electing delegates to the Chicago Convention. Secretary Sherman has written a letter to a Chicago gentleman, explicitly declaring his candidacy for the Presidential nomination, and contradicting the report of his intention to withdraw from such candidacy.

THE Washington Post prints a letter from Utica reporting interviews with Horatio Seymour, which sets forth the excellent condition of his health and other similar elements of fitness which a candidate would like to have known. On the question as to whether he could be prevailed upon to run, the letter is as good as an announcement that he is willing to enter the race.

GENERAL.

THE Cincinnati Star publishes fruit and crop reports from nearly all points in the South and West, made up by the farmers of the various sections. All through Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana, the wheat crop is reported remarkably fine, with a larger acreage sown than at any previous time. In Kentucky, Kansas, and Tennessee some injury by fly is mentioned, but the prospects are good for an average crop.

HON. ISAAC P. CHRISTIANCY, United States Minister to Peru, and late Senator from Michigan, has asked for a leave of absence of six weeks. It is stated in recent dispatches from Washington that he comes home to participate in the pleasant details of a divorce suit, his young wife, formerly a clerk in the Treasury Department, having applied for a separation on the ground of ill-treatment. Another statement is to the effect that Mr. Christiancy has evidence that his youthful partner in matrimony has, since her return from Paris, been conducting herself in an improper manner, and that the husband will make application for divorce.

WASHINGTON.

THERE is a scarcity of fractional silver coin, caused by its presentation for redemption under the recent law. A Washington dispatch says there are $21,000,000 of such coin in the treasury, which will be exchanged at all sub-treasuries for United States notes when an appropriation is made for the purpose by Congress. It will be sent free of cost in sums of $200 and upward to any part of the country.

THE select committee of the United States Senate appointed for that purpose has agreed upon a report upon the Freedmen's Bank and has also perfected a method of liquidation of that concern. The report shows that the Freedmen's Bank was established under favorable auspices. Its business grew rapidly, and it soon became a prosperous institution. Its management fell into the hands of, and was controlled by, unworthy, dishonest persons, by whose acts and loose management, the investments in non-productive, valueless stocks and loans upon worthless securities, the bank business diminished rapidly, and failure was the natural result. The report will deal severely with certain individuals, but, owing to the death of some and the impecuniosity or absence of others, it will make no recommendation with reference to prosecution other than is found in the bill. The bill provides for the appointment of a Commissioner, who is to be none other than the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall receive $1,000 a year in addition to his present salary. The Commissioner is empowered to sell any or all of the property of the bank, and to report to Congress yearly.

SO MUCH has been said in Wall street and elsewhere concerning the treasury bond purchases that Mr. Sherman has felt himself called on to again explain his intentions. He says that in the present state of the Government finances the purchases will not be greater than $2,000,000 a week, and that he will not in any case pay more than the market rates or impair the resumption fund.

THE bill introduced in the Senate by Mr. Edmunds to regulate the counting of the Presidential Electoral votes provides that the meeting of Electors shall be on the second Monday of January, instead of the second Wednesday of December, and makes the simple provision for a State disposition of any controversy under such laws as it may have in existence prior to the date of the choosing of Electors. It provides for a later meeting of the Electors in order that each State may dispose of any controversy that may arise, and then provides, as the bill of the last session did, for a meeting of the two houses, and a proceeding in conformity with decisions reached in the respective States in any case of dispute.... The President has finally confirmed the sentence of the court-martial dismissing Maj. Reno from the service.

The Agricultural Department estimates the increase in the value of the crops raised in 1879 over those of the previous year at $415,000,000. The price of real estate has been enhanced during the same time about $1,000,000,000.

It is said that Bismarck is collecting the official documents to prove that the Russian Government has been in secret negotiation with France for an alliance against Germany, notwithstanding Russia's denial.

THE New York Tribune's special correspondent in Ireland telegraphs that men, women and children in some of the famine-stricken portions of Ireland are reduced to the last stages of nakedness and destitution. Families are huddled together without fire, food, clothing or bedding, within a miserable hut or the former abode of animals. Thousands and thousands are begging, not for bread, but for the humblest, cheapest food that can be supplied for human use—Indian meal. All this exists, and there is little prospect of much improvement until August. It appears that in some districts the distress is even greater than it was in the appalling famine of 1847.

THE famine in Armenia is reported to be of the most appalling and wide-spread character. It is said to exist over a territory embracing 100,000 square miles.... On his return he will be made Quartermaster General of the Horse Guards.... Gen. Melikoff has received another note from the Revolutionary Committee, stating that the Nihilists did not authorize Vladetzky's attack on him, because they are not ready to kill him just yet, but warning him that when the proper time arrives a man with a good weapon and means of escape will be at hand.... A DISPATCH from Cabul states that the Afghans have recaptured and sacked Charasiab, a village about forty miles northeast of Cabul, hitherto occupied and held by a mixed force of English troops and their Afghan allies. ....Gen. Melikoff's rule in St. Petersburg is giving such general satisfaction that it is proposed to extend the dictatorship over other portions of the empire.

THE Russian expedition against the Turcomans has dwindled down to a defensive affair. It will not go to Merv, as it is feared that England would, in the event of the capture of that city, occupy Herat as a counterstroke.... Bishop Logue, Chairman of the Donegal Central Relief Committee, asking further aid, states there are 70,000 individuals in Donegal needing relief; that the distress is increasing and will not decrease until August.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on Thursday, March 11, the bill for the reclamation of arid and waste lands passed. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to contract for the sinking of two artesian wells on the plains east of the Rocky mountains, the wells to be the center of a reservation of four square miles. Mr. Jones, of Florida, spoke upon the Porter bill, and, after the conclusion of his remarks, the bill was laid on the table subject to be taken up by a majority at any time. The Fortifications Appropriation bill was taken up and the Senate adjourned.... In the House, Mr. Kelley rose to a question of privilege, and denied in emphatic language a reported conversation in regard to the tariff on sugars, in which corrupt motives were attributed to Mr. Kelley. The regular order being demanded, consideration of the Political Assessment bill was resumed, and the bill was put upon its passage, when no quorum voted. The Republicans filibustered nearly the entire session, when the bill was laid on the table for the present and the House adjourned.

At the opening of business in the Senate on the 12th inst., Mr. Williams presented a joint resolution of the Kentucky Legislature, instructing the Senators from Kentucky to urge the passage of a bill reducing the salary of the President of the United States. The bill for the relief of the widow of Gen. Custer was indefinitely postponed. A little discussion ensued about the Panama canal project. The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Rollins, to provide for the ascertainment of the claims of American citizens for spoliation prior to July 1, 1801; by Mr. Teller, to enable Colorado to select land under the acts making the grant of land for the benefit of agricultural colleges and mechanic arts. A resolution calling for information in regard to Government technical schools was adopted. The Fortifications Appropriation bill was passed, with amendments. Mr. Kellogg rose to a personal explanation, and called for an investigation in regard to the newspaper report that the attack upon Senator Hill, of Georgia, had been planned by Kellogg to influence the contested-election case, and the woman Miss Raymond had been brought here by Kellogg for the purpose of slandering Senator Hill. Mr. Thurman announced that he should move to lay the resolution for an investigation on the table. The Senate then adjourned to Monday.... In the House, the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain Indian trust funds in the United States treasury in lieu of investment was passed. The Morning hour was devoted to bills, and Mr. Atkins reported back the Deficiency Appropriation bill from the Appropriation Committee. The House went into committee of the whole, and discussed the bill for most of the day and rose without action. The following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Covert, for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia in neat cattle; by Mr. Scales, to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Ute Indians for the sale of their lands in Colorado, approximating $350,000; by Mr. Camp, to accept the title to property in Erie, Pa., and establish a Home for Indigent Soldiers and Sailors. Very little business of importance was transacted by the upper house, the time being occupied by reports of committees and other miscellaneous business. The President nominated Jacob Kendrick Upton, of New Hampshire, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Arthur Edwards, of Michigan, to be Agent for the Indians at the Omaha and Winnebago Agency, Nebraska; and Edward H. Bowman, of Illinois, to be Agent for the Indians at the Pawnee Agency, Indian Territory.... In the House, bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Singleton, making telegraphic communications as inviolable as letters in the mail; by Mr. Daggett, to reduce the price of public lands within railroad limits; by Mr. Covert, to create a scientific commission to establish legal tests for the protection of dealers in butter, oleomargarine, etc.; by Mr. Scales, for an allotment of lands in severalty to the united band of Peoria Indians; by Mr. Whittaker, reducing the expenses of taking pre-emptions and homesteads; by Mr. Kelley, a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a statement of the bonds purchased between the 1st of January, 1866, and the 1st of January, 1880; by Mr. Ward, to reduce the expenses of collecting the revenue; by Mr. Young (Tenn.), for the appointment of a commission on the method of settling claims against the United States; by Mr. Tucker, appropriating $25,000 for the relief of the daughter and grand-daughter of Zachary Taylor; by Mr. Downey, appropriating $25,000 to protect and improve the Yellowstone National Park; by Mr. Fort, calling on the Secretary of War for information as to the distance and the cost of a canal for the commerce between the navigable waters of the Illinois river and the Illinois and Michigan canal, by way of the Kankakee river; by Mr. Acklen, a bill proposing a constitutional amendment. The amendment declares that the Union of these United States shall be perpetual, and all acts or attempts to separate or destroy the Union shall be treason against the Federal Government, and be punished as such; the States' limits and boundaries to be inviolate, and the rights of the State to make and enforce its local laws shall never be interfered with by the Federal Government; by Mr. Buckner, for an adjournment of Congress on the 24th of May. A bill was passed to abolish tolls on the Louisville and Portland canal.

On the morning of March 16 Mr. Davis (Ill.) presented in the Senate a memorial from citizens of Chicago, praying the enactment of a uniform bankruptcy law, and made a speech supporting the memorial. On motion of Mr. Thurman, the resolution offered by Mr. Kellogg for a committee to investigate the newspaper charges against him was laid on the table. Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill to fix the day for the meeting of the Electors of the President and Vice President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon. Referred to a select committee on the subject. The afternoon was devoted to consideration of the Star Route Deficiency bill, the Senate remaining in session till 6 o'clock without reaching any conclusion.... In the House, a debate on the Funding bill was ordered for next Saturday. The morning hour being dispensed with, the House went into committee of the whole upon the Deficiency Appropriation bill. This was discussed the whole day, but not concluded. Mr. Dibrell, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information as to withholding pensions allowed to soldiers of the War of 1812. Adopted.

The first business transacted in the Senate on the 17th inst. was the passage of a bill removing the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor. Mr. Hampton, from the Military Committee, reported a bill to survey and mark the Gettysburg battle-field. After discussion for nearly the whole day, the Star Service Deficiency bill was passed. The President nominated Matthias C. Osborn, of Alabama, to be United States Marshal for the Middle and Southern District of Alabama.... In the House, Mr. Taylor offered a resolution for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the present method of settling claims against the United States. All the day's session was consumed in discussion upon the Deficiency Appropriation bill, no conclusion being reached.

Rapid Increase of Immigration.

The continued increase of arrivals at this port, as well as accounts from abroad, afford indications that the immigration from Europe for the current year will be the largest of any year since 1872, aggregating at least 200,000, and possibly 250,000, say an increase of 40 per cent. compared with 1879. The comparison for the two months is as follows:

	January.	February.	Total.
1873	6,460	6,277	12,737
1874	2,518	3,033	5,551
1875	1,984	3,704	5,688
1876	2,150	2,176	4,326
1877	1,813	1,947	3,760
1878	1,609	2,331	3,940
1879	2,190	2,754	4,944
1880	3,677	7,404	11,081
	24,411	30,136	54,547

The nationalities represented are Germany, Ireland, and England, in the order named, according to importance, and others in about the usual proportions. Included recently are many Hungarians in extreme destitution, about 700 by a single arrival. It is also noticed that many Swiss are coming, mostly of the industrial classes. Destitution in Ireland is likely to stimulate emigration to the United States, in the course of the present year, and the movement may acquire a considerable volume. The German military conscription operates in like manner to create discontent at home and longings for the free, broad acres of the New World. The whole range of industries in Germany continue much depressed.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Paint.

Every one knows, or ought to know, that it is dangerous to sleep in newly-painted rooms, on account of the presence of the vapor of turpentine. Several theories, more or less plausible, have been propounded to explain the prejudicial effects of the inhalation of these vapors; but, whatever be the correct explanation, there is no doubt of the danger of occupying a room recently painted in which turpentine has been employed, before complete ventilation has taken place. It was pointed out by the Council of Hygiene that a sudden death which took place in Paris was attributed to this cause, it being shown that it could not be ascribed to the lead which entered into the composition of the paint of the room in which the deceased slept; the lead, being fixed and non-volatile, cannot in these cases be accused of being the offending element.

Cold Weather in Switzerland.

Early in February the temperature in various parts of Switzerland was lower than at any previous time since the winter of 1830-31. An attempt to cut a canal through a part of the Lake of Zurich failed because the water froze again as fast as the ice was removed.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

SYLVESTER GRAHAM, an American reformer, among other works relating to diet in connection with physiology and anatomy, published, in 1832, a treatise on bread and bread making, in which he strongly advocated the making of bread from unbolted flour. Hence the terms "Graham flour" and "Graham bread."

It has been calculated that a single grain of wheat produces fifty grains in one year's growth, and if these and succeeding crops be planted and yield proportionately, the product of the twelfth year would suffice to supply all the inhabitants of the earth for a lifetime; in twelve years the single grain will have multiplied itself 244,140,625,000,000 times—figures beyond the comprehension of the average mathematician.

AT the paper mills of Crane Brothers Coltsville, Mass., large quantities of bank-note paper are made for the Government. The strictest attention as to quality is observed, a spot or speck no larger than a pin head being sufficient to condemn a sheet, and the employes arriving and departing are carefully watched. Armed guards patrol the premises and grounds day and night, and no approach to them is permitted. Twenty-four women were sent from the Treasury Department as counters and examiners, and are each able to count 30,000 sheets daily. The precaution is necessary to prevent duplication of sheets for dishonest purposes.

"WHO laughs first" is a childish but most laughable game, and is thus played: The players, on whom absolute silence and gravity is strictly enjoined, range themselves in a close circle. The leader gives her right-hand neighbor a little tap on the knee; she does the same to the person seated beside her, who follows her example, and it thus makes the round of the circle. The leader then taps her neighbor on both knees, the other players doing the same. The third round adds to this a tap on one cheek; the fourth on both; at the fifth, the leader, after giving her neighbor taps on both knees and both cheeks, seizes her gently by the ear, which she continues to hold while the other players go through the same evolutions, which end by producing so odd-looking a human chain that it becomes almost impossible to refrain from breaking the imposed silence, either by laughing or exclamation, which, of course, incurs a forfeit. The leader is allowed to prolong the game by adding to it any gestures she pleases.

ONE of the most curious facts connected with madness is the utter absence of tears amid the insane. Whatever the form of madness, tears are conspicuous by their absence, as much in the depression of melancholy, or excitement of mania, as in the utter apathy of dementia. If a patient in a lunatic asylum be discovered in tears, it will be found that it is one beginning to recover, or an emotional outbreak in an epileptic who is scarcely truly insane, while actual insane persons appear to have not the power of weeping; it is only returning reason which can once more unloose the fountain of their tears. Even when a lunatic is telling one in fervid language how she has been deprived of her children, or the outrages that have been perpetrated to herself, her eye is never even moist. The ready gush of tears which accompany the plaint of the sane woman contrasts strangely with the dry-eyed appeal of the talkative lunatic. It would, indeed, seem that tears give relief to feelings which, when pent up, lead to madness. It is one of the privileges of reason to be able to weep. Amid all the misery of the insane they find no relief in tears.

MAGIC squares were known in the East in remote ages, but the earliest known writer on the subject was a Greek of the sixteenth century, named Moschopulus, whose work was translated into Latin by De la Hire, and read before the French Academy in 1691. Since that time the subject has been elaborated by a great many famous mathematicians, who have found in it an exhaustless field of study, and the combinations which have been made of compound squares, magic cubes, and what not, and the abstruse mathematical formulæ by which their construction are explained, would terrify an unlearned reader. One of the squares given by Moschopulus answers the terms of the new-fangled box-puzzle. We give it below, together with another arrangement of the same numbers:

12	6	7	9
8	10	11	5
13	3	2	16

1	16	11	6
13	4	7	10
8	9	14	3
12	5	2	15

The first arrangement is the more systematic, but the reader can work out others for himself.

Want of Decision.

A great deal of talent is lost to the world for the want of a little courage. Every day sends to their graves numbers of obscure men who have only remained in obscurity because their timidity has prevented them from making a first effort, and who, if they only had been induced to begin, would in all probability have gone great lengths in the career of fame. The fact is that, in doing anything in the world worth doing, we must not stand shivering on the bank, thinking of the cold and danger, but jump in and scramble through as well as we can. It will not do to be perpetually calculating risks and adjusting nice chances; it did very well before the flood, when a man could consult his friends upon an intended publication for 150 years, and live to see its success for six or seven centuries afterward; but at present a man waits and doubts, and consults his brothers, and his uncles, and particular friends, till one day he finds that he is 65 years of age; that he has lost so much time in consulting first cousins and particular friends that he has no time to follow their advice. There is so little time for over-squeamishness at present that the opportunity slips away. The very period of life at which men choose to venture, if ever, is so confined that it is no bad rule to preach up the necessity, in such instances, of a little violence done to the feelings, and efforts made in defiance of strife and sober calculation.—Sydney Smith.

How to Make a Hedge.

A correspondent of Farm and Fireside says: A good hedge, well made, is a valuable fence. My plan for making such an one is substantially as follows: If plants can be had from $2.50 to $3 per 1,000, it is better to use them than to run the risk of raising them, in connection with other farm work, from the seed. Break and harrow a strip well, fully ten feet in width. If there is no sod, plow a straight, deep furrow; after breaking and harrowing it, assort the plants in two sizes; take the large ones, dip them into thick mud and water, and set them six inches apart perpendicularly against the land side of the furrow. This will take 3,000 plants for every eighty rods. Fasten the plants upright by using the hoe and feet, then plow the dirt back against the plants, and plant a row of potatoes three feet from the hedge on both sides of it; cultivate well, and keep clean of weeds for two seasons, or at least until the plants are one inch in thickness. Then, early in March, when the wood is not frozen, top them to about six feet, trim off the straggling shoots and branches, and hack the plants close at or in the ground nearly half off, so that they can be laid down at such an angle that the tops of the plants will be just three feet from the ground. Shoots will then spring from the roots, which, in connection with those that will put out from the reclining twigs, will turn a rabbit, and which will, as it should, be hog proof. Such a hedge will permit the keeping of sheep to eat down any foul weeds that may spring up. The first pruning can be done in September, when the top should be cut three feet and nine inches from the ground. If this pruning is deferred until the following March it will be as well. Afterward trim in June and the following March. Always after the first trimming cut close above the last cutting and trim it down in nearly half-round form, barely taking off the points of the lower limbs. This will give a base of three to three and a half feet on the surface, and make a hedge which nothing can penetrate. I plant three surplus plants on each side of the hedge when setting it, thus having six extra plants at each end of the hedge to make a header. These plants, when the hedge is laid down, are to be drawn around a durable post at the end and slipped through and between the plants laid down, and tied with twine or small wire. If plants are to be set in recently-plowed sod land, set the spade with the back to the line, pull the handle toward you, insert the plant in the cavity at the back of the spade next to the line, then withdraw the spade and tramp the soil firmly against the plant. Trim the plants to eight inches of yellow root and two of the matured wood above the ground. They should be of uniform length, and plants ten inches in length are as good as those of twelve or fourteen. Buy No. 1 one-year-old plants in preference to stunted two-year-old ones.

Relation of the Liver to the General System.

Prof. Le Conte expresses his belief that the waste tissue is carried by the blood to the liver, and is there separated into liver-sugar and urea, or some substance which rapidly changes into urea. Experiments made by Schiff support this theory by proving that venous blood is soon fatal to animals if the liver is tied, but is not so if the liver is free to act, the poisoning being due to decomposed tissues in the blood. Combustion takes place in the capillaries of the tissue under the influence of venous force, as the blood remains for a longer time in the capillaries of the tissue than in any other organ. The blood acts as a reservoir not only of oxygen, but of food, and, if waste, the food taken in to-day is not used to build up tissues to-day, but is taken into circulation in the blood, and the blood forms tissues and regenerates itself from the supply of food—so tissue wasted to-day is carried by the blood to the liver, there decomposed into sugar and urea, and so eliminated perhaps the day after, or even longer.

AUBURN COURIER

THEO. REED,
ROB J. LOWRY | [illegible]

THE retinue the Empress of Austria takes with her to Ireland is enormous. Twenty-five sit down in the Steward's room, and sixty-five in the servants' hall every day to meals—ninety in the household.

ONE of the grounds on which Mr. Say demands a divorce, at Lafayette, Ind., is that his wife, "although well knowing that the plaintiff was a Democrat, refused him the privilege of bringing Democratic papers to his house."

JOHN COX, the Pennsylvania Abolitionist, whose house before the war sometimes concealed as many as twenty runaway slaves in one night, and whose golden wedding was celebrated in verse by Whittier and Bayard Taylor, has just died at the age of 94.

THE Czar's cook in the Winter Palace is the object of constant attention and supervision, two secret police agents being constantly by his side while the meal is being cooked. When a dish is at length ready, it is tasted by two police officials before being served to the Czar.

AN organization has been effected at Canton, Iowa, for the purpose of engaging in the business of raising cattle and other live stock upon the pastures of the Great West. It is known as the Iowa and Colorado Cattle Company: capital $1,000,000—shares $50 each. Col. W. R. Towne, Mayor of Canton, is President of the company.

THE Dennis family at Beancoup, Ill., found bits of glass in the sausage at breakfast, and that day the children's teeth crunched powdered glass in their luncheon at school. The mother confessed that, wishing her relatives to die in the most horrible manner possible, she had planned to kill them with the glass.

EDISON, the inventor, is devoting his spare time to experiments with a view of extracting gold from the "tailings" thrown away by miners. The best processes yet invented for treating ores leave a considerable amount of the precious metal behind, and Edison claims to have discovered a process for extracting this. If he has done so, he will fill a long-felt want and make a vast fortune.

THE oleomargarine brigade has laid hold on the committee of the lower house of Congress having the bill to prevent the adulteration of food in charge. They declare that their invention is the same as butter, both being animal fat, and insist that a delegation of Congressmen shall visit one of their manufactories and examine the process by which it is concocted. A New York establishment is making 40,000 pounds of oleomargarine a day, and eleven other concerns in various parts of the country are turning out a good deal of the stuff.

THERE is now in Paris a Russian girl who, at the time the Czar was shot at, was living in the Place Alexandra. At the first discharge of the revolver she rushed from her bed to the window, and thus witnessed the scene. Struck with terror, she crept into bed and curled herself in the bedclothes. She had scarcely done so when the door opened, a well-dressed man entered, advanced to her bed, said to her, "Remember that if you say a word to help the police you are a dead woman," and disappeared, closing the door behind him. The next day the girl left Russia, and has never ventured to return.

FOR the first time in sixteen years the American Missionary Association is free of debt. During the past year it paid off an indebtedness of $37,389. Among the colored people of the South an important work has been accomplished by the association. It has at present in the Southern States eight chartered institutions, twelve high schools and twenty-four common schools, with a total of 163 teachers and 7,207 pupils, in all of which Christian knowledge and character are a feature of the instruction. In addition there about 5,200 Sunday-school scholars under its charge.

A WASHINGTON correspondent, who has been investigating some new processes for the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and Indian corn, says: "Within the next ten years, and probably within the next five years, the production of sugar within the limits of the United States will supply all the demands of our 50,000,000 people, and in this production not only will there be a gain annually to the wealth of the country equal to $200,000,000, but even our Northern border States will become self-supporting. In other words, from recent discoveries made and new processes applied in the production of sugar from the raw material, our sugar-producing belt, from the superior yields of the colonies, will within a few years embrace all that territory in which sorghum or Indian corn will come to maturity."

THE Chicago Journal says: The thing to do is to enlarge the Illinois and Michigan canal into a ship canal, and improve the connecting Illinois river to the same end. This would solve the Chicago drainage and water problem, and at the same time give the commerce of a vast region of country the benefit of cheap freights from the Mississippi and Missouri rivers to the seaboard, via rivers, lakes and canals that would be navigable by steamers. The people of the great valley of the Mississippi could not do a wiser thing than to unite in "a strong pull, a long pull, and a pull altogether" to push this proposition into practical effect.

THE New York and Illinois State Boards of Charities have memorialized Congress relative to the sending of blind, crippled, lunatic, and other infirm paupers by cities or towns in different governments of Europe to the United States, to become dependent upon our charities. Scarcely a week passes when we do not read of the landing of infirm foreign paupers at Castle Garden. Some of them are among the most degraded specimens that ever floated out of the European gutters. There is no possibility that in the most favorable circumstances they can ever get a living except by begging or stealing.

OVERLAND travel hitherto has been very hard on the immigrant. Though fresh and rosy when they land from the steamships, the pilgrims are so utterly worn upon their arrival in the far West that they are good for nothing for months. The Union Pacific Company are preparing a remedy, and the "yellow sleeper" will be known before long on the line of that railroad. The coach is of ordinary size. It is furnished with seats made of light wood and set in iron frames and with berths which fold up like the berths in Pullman coaches. Both the seats and berths are constructed of slats, which insures cleanliness and coolness. They are oiled and varnished, preserving the natural color. The seats fold up when in use during the day, and at night are extended to form the beds. The upper berths are divided by a partition about four inches high, which prevents any selfishly-inclined passenger from occupying a whole one. There are six sections on each side, and, each section containing two double berths, the car has accommodations for forty-eight persons. The heating and toilet arrangements are simple but efficient. Twenty-five of these coaches will be built, all being painted yellow.

Wool Industries.

Up to December, 1865, the wool-growers and wool manufacturers of this country had antagonized each other's interests, the rivalry between them having the effect to prevent what would otherwise have been a most rapid growth. At that time, it will be remembered, there was a joint convention held at Syracuse, N.Y., and the two industries combined, having discovered that what would promote the prosperity of the one had a like beneficial effect upon the other. Their concert of action has since prevented legislation inimical to their progress, and advanced what was best, until the value of the wool trade in the United States has multiplied almost beyond belief.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives some facts and figures in this connection which are exceedingly interesting. The following table shows the marvelous increase in production in the last forty years:

	Pounds.
[illegible]	[illegible]
1860	60,000,000
1867	147,000,000
1877	[illegible]

From this it will be seen that the increase from 1860 to 1877 was at the rate of 246 per cent.

The capital now employed by manufacturers is about $300,000,000, and this gives employment, directly and indirectly, to 200,000 persons. Joining these estimates the capital and number of people engaged in wool-growing, and some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the wool industry. It is declared that 80 per cent of the raw material used in our factories is produced here, leaving very little to be imported, and it will be only a short time before wool growers will be able to supply a foreign demand.—Toledo Blade.

The Elopement.

About forty years ago a gentleman was tried and convicted, upon circumstantial evidence, of the murder of his niece. She was heard to exclaim: "Don't kill me!" and that instant a pistol or fowling piece was fired off. Upon these circumstances the gentleman was convicted and executed. Some twelve months after, the niece, who had eloped, arrived in England; and, hearing of the affair, elucidated the whole transaction. It appeared that she had formed an attachment for a person of whom her uncle disapproved. When walking in the fields, he was earnestly dissuading her from the connection, when she replied: "That she was resolved to have him, or it would be her death;" and, therefore, said: "Don't kill me, uncle! Don't kill me!" At the moment she uttered these words, a fowling-piece was discharged by a sportsman in a neighboring field. The same night, she eloped from her uncle's house; and the combination of suspicious circumstances occasioned his ignominious death.

FARM NOTES.

ASHES saturated with kerosene and applied to cucumber and squash plants in the hill will be a great help in keeping off striped bugs.

HAY is worth $100 per ton in some of the mining districts of Colorado. It costs more to feed a horse than it does a man in some of the towns among the mountains.

SALT and ashes mixed in the drink of hogs has a great tendency to ward off disease. A solution of copperas also is often useful to purge them from worms.

A WRITER in the Garden says that if potting soil is placed for a day or two in the hen-yard every particle of it is dug over, and all grubs and eggs of insects are picked out.

PROF. SHELTON, of the Kansas Agricultural College, favors September calves, because, dropped in that month, they escape the trying heats of summer, can be pushed during the winter with grain, and in spring are ready for grass as soon as it appears.

IF there is not sufficient rain to keep compost heaps moist water should be supplied, even if it has to be hauled and poured on them. Decomposition is arrested when the heap becomes dry. A few barrels of water from the well will soon start up heat and decomposition in a dry pile of compost.

ACCORDING to experiments of the Ontario (Canada) School of Agriculture, by adding $5.40 worth of bone dust to farm-yard manure the crop of wheat was increased $7.20 per acre. By adding nitrate of soda the value of the crop was increased $10. Lucerne is deemed profitable, having a season from April to October.

WHERE farmers and mechanics intermarry, says J. B. Olcott in the Christian Union, in the old way, as the wiser ones continually do, keeping up an intimacy with the soil and an interchange of employments and implements through the garden, farm and workshop, mutations of fortune find them versatile, and as ready to fall upon their feet with every change of affairs as a cat.

IF you want your chicks to grow fast, feed them on oatmeal scalded with sweet or sour milk. Don't make the feed wet or sloppy, nor give more at once than will be eaten up clean. Only prepare as much at once as will be all eaten before any fermentation takes place in it. Where oatmeal cannot be had, fine cornmeal or cracked wheat similarly treated and administered will answer a very good purpose.

SOME people make the mistake of giving the broods hatched by two or more hens at once to a single hen to nurse. If each hen has hatched but one or two chicks, then, of course, it is right and proper to give them all to one hen. But if each hen has hatched five or six chicks, she should be allowed to rear them. That number is nearly or quite enough for a small or medium-sized hen at this time of the year.

FOWLS will need the best food if an abundance of good rich eggs are desired. Wheat steeped in boiling water, and given hot, and hot baked potatoes crushed with a masher, are as good food as can be given; water slightly warmed with a small quantity of copperas in it will be useful. Allspice mixed with corn-meal mush is an excellent condiment, and by no means costly. Laudanum in ten-drop doses has been found a remedy for the cholera, or poultry intestinal fever, which has destroyed so many birds.

ALL animals fatten better in mild weather or in comfortable winter quarters than when exposed to the inclement season. A farmer, desirous of testing this, commenced with a lot of hogs, averaging 175 pounds each, on the 20th of September. He fed them two weeks and then weighed them, and found that at the price ruling in that market his corn so fed brought him 60 cents per bushel. He weighed and fed them again two of the coldest weeks in November, and found on again weighing that, with pork at the same price, his corn had only brought him 30 cents.

ONE fruitful source of colic in horses is cracked corn. If corn is to be fed, use whole corn; it is much more likely to be perfectly masticated than cracked corn, and its imperfect mastication causes the colic. It is also unwise to feed grain to a hungry horse, for then a large portion is very apt to be swallowed without being properly masticated. This can be seen in their voidings. Always let the edge of a horse's hunger be taken off with a feed of hay before feeding grain. Half an hour extra spent in feeding, when on the road, will bring you home half an hour earlier at night.

DURING the winter housing, poultry is liable to become lousy, and are often seriously affected with scurvy. When in this condition the egg product is greatly diminished. Coal tar is a good material for hen-houses. It is a good disinfectant and deodorizer, and a pretty certain exterminator of all vermin from every part which is likely to come in contact with the poultry. The tar should be applied in the boiling state. This will soon dr[illegible] On all portions which do not come in contact with the poultry, apply the tar raw; this will be more destructive and last longer. Twice a year is quite sufficient. Kerosene is good, but it soon evaporates, and to be effective must be applied twice a week.

Cold as a Promoter of Mortality.

The effect of low temperature on mortality was recently discussed by the Scottish Meteorological Society, the statement being made, among others, that during December, January, and February the mortality in the case of females rises to 11.2 above the average, but to not more than 7.2 per cent. among males. According to Dr. Buchanan, one of the participants in this discussion, there are not sufficient data as yet to decide how much of the excess is due to sex, how much to occupation, and how much—say—to their boots and other fashions. And further, he states that a comparison of the meteorological with the mortality returns shows, in a striking manner, the influence of particular types of weather in largely increasing or diminishing the number of deaths from particular diseases. Periods of unusual cold, for instance, combined with dampness, in the end of autumn, have a proportionally increased mortality from scarlet and typhoid fevers; of cold with dryness in spring, have an increased mortality from brain diseases and whooping-cough; of cold in winter, have an enormously increased fatality from all bronchial affections; and of heat in summer, present a startling, and, in many cases, an appalling death-rate from bowel complaints.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

HAMLETS.—Two eggs, one and a half cup of sugar, one cup of raisins chopped fine, two-thirds of a cup of butter, one teaspoon each of cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg, one teaspoon soda dissolved in two table-spoonfuls of sour milk. Mix stiff and cut out like cookies.

JACKEY CAKES.—Six table-spoonfuls of white Indian meal, pinch of salt, half teacupful of milk; thoroughly scald with boiling water, add milk, and drop from table-spoon into boiling-hot lard or drippings in frying-pan or spider; fry a dark brown on both sides. When done, open and insert a bit of butter, and then eat.

TAPIOCA PUDDING.—Four table-spoons of tapioca, soaked for several hours in a little water, one quart of milk, four eggs (leaving out the whites of two for frosting), three table-spoons of sugar. Boil the milk and turn over the tapioca; add, when it is blood warm, the sugar and eggs well beaten; bake about an hour, and after it has cooled a little add the whites of the eggs, well beaten with half a pound of sugar.

CHLORAL SPRAY IN WINTER COUGH.—Dr. Fletcher, of Washington, strongly recommends the employment of the spray of chloral in the treatment of the form of chronic bronchitis known as "winter cough," which often offers so obstinate a resistance to remedies. A solution of ten grains of chloral to the ounce of water may be inhaled through a steam atomizer morning and evening.

AUTUMN LEAVES.—I prepared autumn leaves in this way last year, and they were greatly admired by every one who saw them. I varnished them as soon as they were gathered, then spread them out in a cool room where they remained twenty-four hours, when they were packed in a box, and a thick piece of pasteboard placed on top to keep them from curling. They were much more brilliant than any I ever saw. They did not adhere enough to do any harm.

OATMEAL PUDDING.—Take one pound best oatmeal, one quart of new milk warmed. Stir the oatmeal into the milk, and let it stand over night. Then butter a basin, put in the oatmeal and milk, stir in a spoonful of baking-powder, and afterward tie over the basin a well-floured cloth, and boil for two hours. If eaten as pudding proper, serve it up with custard sauce, currant jelly, or treacle. If it is to be eaten in place of meat—for good meat it is—use tomato sauce.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.—Butter a deep baking-bowl; line it with thin slices of wheaten bread which have been soaked in sweet cream; fill the bowl to within one inch of the top with sliced apples in layers, with beef marrow, sugar, and grated lemon or orange peel; cover the apples with thin slices of bread soaked in cream; cover the bowl closely with an ordinary earthenware pie-dish, in which place water to prevent it cracking; bake in a rather-brisk oven from one hour to one and one-half hours, according to the size of the charlotte.

A Wonderful Mesmerizer.

Strange stories come from India of the feats performed by a native mesmerizer named Buni, whose magnetic power would appear to be found quite irresistible by the lower animals, upon which [illegible] exclusively exerts it. He gives seances, to which the public are invited to bring all manner of ferocious and untamable wild beasts, and holds them with his glittering eye. In a few seconds they subside into a condition of cataleptic stiffness, from which they can only be revived by certain passes which he solemnly executes with his right hand. A snake in a violent state of irritation was brought to Buni by a menagerie proprietor, inclosed in a wooden cage. When deposited on the platform it was writhing and hissing fiercely. Buni bent over the cage and fixed his eye upon its occupant, gently waving his hand over the serpent's restless head. In less than a minute the snake stretched itself out, stiffened, and lay apparently dead. Buni took it up and thrust several needles into its body, but it gave no sign of life. A few passes then restored it to its former angry activity. Subsequently a savage dog, held in a leash by its owner, was brought in, and, at Buni's command, let loose upon him. As it was rushing toward him, bristling with fury, he raised his hand, and in a second the fierce brute dropped upon its belly, as though stricken by lightning. It seemed absolutely paralyzed by some unknown agency, and was unable to move a muscle until released from the magnetizer's spell by a majestic wave of his hand.

Not Colonel, but Judge.

The farther a man goes West in the United States and gets acquainted, the less use he finds for his "Mr." Raw civilization in the newer settlements demands a more pronounced handle for his name, and very likely the handle will take the place of the name. An exchange illustrates the caprice of these Western titles, and tells a characteristic anecdote.

The traveler who journeys westward in our favored land should make up his mind to accept, without demur, such military or judicial rank and title as may be conferred upon him. He may be quite sure, too, that when his brevet has once been settled west of the Missouri by proper authority, it will cling to him as long as he remains in that region.

"I don't half like," once remarked a Scotch fellow-traveler of the writer to a friendly group at Denver, "the promotion back-war-r-d which I receive. East of Chicago I was Colonel; at Chicago I was Major; at Omaha a man called me Captain, and offered me dinner for 25 cents!"

One of the group, after a careful survey of the face and figure before him, the kindly yet keen expression, and the iron-gray whiskers, replied: "You ain't Colonel wuth a cent. I allow that you're Jedge!"

And "Jedge" he was from that time forth. Nobody called him anything else. Newly-made acquaintances, landlords, stage drivers, conductors, all used this title, until his companions began to feel as if they had known him all his life in that capacity.

Bodily Heat.

It is a remarkable fact that the temperature of the body in health is always the same in summer and winter, in the Arctic zone and in the torrid. This seems the more remarkable in view of the fact that the body is just as subject to the great law of radiation as every other heated object. It throws off more slowly in a warm temperature and more rapidly in a cold, but it always radiates heat.

The normal temperature of the body is slightly above 98 F. A few degrees above indicates consuming fever; a few below, a depressed condition that tends to collapse and death.

Expose the living, healthy body and a red-hot mass of equal size to the same freezing temperature in a long ride, and at the end of it the latter will be ice-cold, while the temperature of the body will stand precisely as at the start.

The explanation is that the body is self-heating. The heat is constantly radiated, but it is as constantly generated; and, what is still more striking, the healthy body so regulates its temperature that in cold climates it ever keeps the heat up to the standard, and in warm climates it keeps down the excess. In the first case, the consumption of the internal fuel—or food—is more rapid, and the appetite is keener to supply the demand [illegible] tion is more vigorous.

In the second case, in warm climates, the consumption of fuel—or food—is much slower, and the appetite craves food that has less of the heat-making properties. Further, if the heat tends to increase beyond the standard, the body at once covers itself with water (sweat), the evaporation of which carries off the dangerous excess.

Heat in a furnace is caused by the union of the oxygen of the air with the carbon of the coal. So heat is generated in the lungs by the union of the oxygen of the inbreathed air with the carbon of the impure blood. But this is not the only source. Similar heat-generating changes take place at every point in the whole body, as new particles displace the old.

A person who eats good food, has a good digestion and good health generally, if properly clothed, will rarely suffer from even the severe cold of our Northern winters.

The Greeley Heirs.

Horace Greeley is still a very vital and tangible memory, and his influence is potent with some of the most effective writers of the present day. Yesterday I met his sister, Mrs. Cleveland, in her parlors at the Coleman House, and was startled at her resemblance to the great journalist, which becomes much more marked as the years pass. She has the same superb intellectual forehead which distinguished his face, the same kindly eyes, the same sensitive and mobile mouth, the same strong and decided chin, and the white hair that is so well remembered. She lives a quiet and retired life and seldom goes into society. Her two daughters, Margaret and Cecelia, are writers of vivacity, whose sketches, poems and stories are acceptable to the better class of New York weekly papers.

Col. Nicholas Smith and his wife, Ida Greeley, reside at Tarrytown, and Gabrielle Greeley, the younger daughter, makes her home with them. The infant son of Col. Smith and Ida Greeley, now 2 years old, and named Horace Greeley, is the hope and joy of the house. The playthings of "Picky," the son of the great journalist, who died in 1848, I believe, and was so profoundly lamented, were kept sacred by his father and mother till their death, and Mrs. Greeley, especially, resented it to have anybody touch the fond relics; but now, as they have begun to decay, the strongest of them have very properly been turned over to young Horace, who gets a heap of fun out of them, all unconscious of the sad scenes with which they are connected. He is a very bright and pretty boy, and full of promise.—New York Cor. Indianapolis Journal.

The Decadence of Greece.

Nowadays a cart cannot pass along the road from Pylos to Sparta, where a carriage could travel in the days of Homer, and a mule now climbs with difficulty over rocks through which Pyrrhus led a train of elephants. Even vegetation has withered and decayed. Mountains once covered with forests are now bare rocks. Water is sought for in vain in the channels of streams immortalized in song. The oak tree has disappeared, and the forests of chestnut are yearly diminishing in extent. The quantity of volona is decreasing, and the fruit of the chestnut tree has already degenerated to such a degree as to be a mere ball of fiber. The apples of Lombotina, once an article of export, are now almost unfit for sale in the domestic market. The best land remains uncultivated, because it would require too great an expenditure of capital in order to drain it in winter, to irrigate it in summer and to clear it from weeds and grapes, the roots of which form Gordian knots three feet below the surface of the soil. The vegetable earth, that enabled ancient Greece to support millions where thousands now starve, has been washed into the sea or formed into malarious swamps since, the terrace by which it was supported on the mountains' side have been allowed to crumble and decay.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THE United States Government pays salaries to 28,000 persons.

THERE are in California 150,000 goats, and in the Pacific Territories 50,000, making a total of 200,000 on the Pacific slope.

GERMAN statisticians calculate that the amount of money expended in railroads since the invention of the locomotive reaches the vast sum of $15,000,000,000.

A GERMAN paper gives the following statistics concerning the telegraphic wires of the world. Those of Europe measured at the close of 1878, 768,786 English miles; those of America, 114,157; Asia, 24,524; Australia, 23,582, and Africa, 8,148. The telegraphic net that embraces the world comprises, therefore, 980,176 English miles, or 1,513,683 kilometers.

THE Westminster Review reckons the public debts of the world at the present time at $24,000,000,000. The railway indebtedness has been estimated at $6,000,000,000, and municipal debts at $5,000,000,000, thus bringing the public indebtedness of the world up to the vast sum of $35,000,000,000. It is not expected that this will ever be paid, but it constitutes an annual lien on the industry of the world of $1,700,000,000.

DURING the past five years $353,018,255 worth of property has been destroyed in this country by fire. In 1875 the loss was $78,102,285; in 1876, $64,630,600; in 1877, $68,265,800; in 1878, $64,315,900; and in 1879, $76,703,700. Of the States, New York leads in big figures. Her loss in 1876 was $14,090,000; in 1877, $11,456,400; in 1878, $8,397,000; and in 1879, $15,793,200. Pennsylvania comes next, with a total loss in the four years of $28,123,500.

THERE are in the city of New York 8,000 licensed drinking-places, 30,000 paupers, 10,000 neglected children, 20,000 women without character, 400,000 foreigners out of 1,000,000 population, 30,000 transient daily. There are 300 public schools, and [illegible] churches, with accommodations for 100,000 people, 400 Protestant churches, with a capacity of holding 275,000 hearers, and having 80,000 members, 220 Sunday-schools, and 120,000 children. The city supports 27 charitable institutions, which annually receive 140,000 people.

THERE are 4,000,000 dead letters received annually at the Dead-Letter Office—300,000 without stamps; 6,000 no address; $40,000 in money, nine-tenths of which is returned, the balance remaining in the treasury, subject to application, for four years. $1,500,000 of money-orders and draft money-value; 45,000 packages containing property; 15,000 photographs. European letters are returned unopened—250,000 of these. One-tenth of all letters received contain property. Ten thousand applications for letters reported lost, the great proportion found and delivered.

A Quebec Ghost.

The Rev. R. W. B. Webster, of Quebec, says that he has had a supernatural visitor. He lives alone in a big house, and the ghost walks through the walls of his bedroom in the night. The reverend gentleman is pastor of Trinity Church, an independent Presbyterian body, and last Sunday he told his congregation about his strange experience. "I awoke," he said, "conscious of the presence of a ghostly apparition. I saw, plainly discernible, a figure in human form, but with a most angelic countenance, whose head was surrounded by a halo of phosphoric light of exceeding splendor, and who stood at the foot of my bed. A number of other spirits were evidently in the room, but were not discernible, being obscured by the eclipsing brightness of the central figure, which remained standing in the same position about half an hour." Mr. Webster intimated that the face was that of somebody whom he had known in life, and who gave him a message of the most appalling character; but does not deem it wise to give the particulars to the public just yet.

A Man with a History.

Benjamin Fish, of Trenton, N. J., has rounded up 94 years of a remarkable existence. He lent Commodore Vanderbilt $1,000 when that gentleman first started out in his career; brought down the first anthracite coal that descended the Delaware in 1823; managed the old stage line and steamboat company between New York and Philadelphia, fifty-five years ago; was one of the first directors of the Camden and Amboy railroad, in 1830, and has been elected every year since. In 1833 he drove the first freight car that moved over the road between South Amboy and Bordentown. Horses were used that year. The first locomotive was imported from England; it is now standing in the shops at Bordentown, and is known as "Johnny Bull" and "Number One."

The Lincolns.

The valuable real estate in Kentucky on which still stands the house where the grandmother of Abraham Lincoln was born, has been recently sold, and the mother of Hon. H. Chrisman, the well-known lecturer on "isms," who resides in Abingdon, Knox county, Ill., has just received one-third the proceeds. Lincoln's grandmother was the daughter of the original grantee to whom the Government gave a grant of 6,000 acres of land for Revolutionary services.—Chicago Times

A NEGRO at Wallace, Tenn., told his wife that he must kill somebody before he went to bed. She begged him not to select her, and he obligingly said he would go down to a ball in the village for a victim. He loaded a pistol, went to the ball, and shot a young negro girl whom he did not even know; but he failed of his object after all, for she was only slightly wounded.

THE St. Gothard tunnel was completed in less than seven years—that is, half the time consumed in piercing the Mount Cenis, which it exceeds in length by 2,700 meters.

The following call has been issued by the democratic state central committee:

The voters of Indiana, regardless of past political affiliations, who are desirous of co-operating with the democracy in the support of its principles and nominees, are invited to participate in the meetings called throughout the state for the purpose of selecting representatives to attend a delegate convention, to be held at Indianapolis,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9th, 1880,

for the purpose of adopting a platform of principles and the nomination of candidates to be supported for the following offices:

Governor.
Lieutenant-Governor.
Two judges of the supreme court.
Secretary of state.
Auditor of state.
Clerk of the supreme court.
Reporter of the supreme court.
Attorney-general.
Superintendent of public instruction.

The ratio of representation will be one delegate for each 200 votes cast for Governor James D. Williams, in 1876, and one delegate for each fraction of 100 or over. (DeKalb county is entitled to 13 delegates.)

The delegates from each congressional district will meet on the evening previous to the convention, at places to be hereafter designated by this committee, for the purpose of selecting and reporting to the convention one committeeman on permanent organization, one committeeman on platform and resolutions, and vice-president for the convention, two delegates to national democratic convention, one assistant secretary of the convention, two alternate delegates to national democratic convention, one presidential elector, one contingent presidential elector, one member of the state central committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and one committeeman on credentials.

The committee on platform and resolutions will meet immediately after the adjournment of the district meetings, say 9 o'clock p. m., at the consultation rooms of the supreme court, Tuesday evening, June 8.

The committee on permanent organization will meet at the same hour in the governor's office. It will be their duty to name a president and principal secretary of the convention, four delegates at large and four alternate delegates to the national convention, two electors for the state at large and two contingent electors, and also to recommend rules for the government of the convention.

The committee on credentials will meet at 8 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, June 9, at the rooms of the state central committee, to determine such contests as may be submitted to them.

Delegate tickets of admission to convention will be issued to the chairman of each county delegation, and to authorized representatives of the press upon the presentation of credentials at the state central committee rooms, Masonic building.

By order of the democratic state central committee.
B. C. SHAW, Chairman.
JAMES H. RICE, Secretary.

National Democratic Convention.

The executive committee of the national democratic committee issues the following call:

The national democratic committee, having met in the city of Washington, February 22, has appointed Tuesday, the 22d of June next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Cincinnati as the place of holding the national democratic convention.

Each state is entitled to representation therein equal to a double number of its senators and representatives in the congress of the United States. All democratic, conservative and other citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political association or difference, who can unite with us in the effort for a pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join in sending delegates to the convention. At the last national democratic convention, held in the city of St. Louis in 1876, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the states be requested to instruct their delegates to the national democratic convention to be held in 1880, whether it be desirable to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in the national convention, and that the national committee insert such request in the call for the next convention.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM, of Connecticut, Chairman.
FRED'K. O. PRINCE, of Massachusetts, Secretary.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Delegates from the several counties constituting the Twelfth (12th) congressional district of Indiana, will meet in convention at Auburn, Ind.

Wants to Bet.

"I will bet $500 against $400 that S. J. Tilden will not receive the nomination for president by the democratic national convention that will meet at Cincinnati, June 22."

Address, T. S. TUTTLE,
Enquirer Office.

The above, taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer, is respectfully referred to the New Albany Ledger-Standard, Fort Wayne Sentinel, Decatur Democrat and Kendallville News—the "only four" democratic papers in Indiana that really prefer Tilden to Hendricks—with the suggestion that they each chip in $100 and make up the amount required to bolster up the fading brilliancy of their idol.

We respectfully decline to publish the notice of meeting, as requested by the corresponding secretary of the Union Soldiers' Association. We are perfectly willing to publish notices of political meetings other than democratic (as news items) but such notices must be of acknowledged political organizations, not such as are organized for partisan purposes, with a name intended to insnare and deceive the unwary. It must require considerable cheek to ask a democratic newspaper to advertise a meeting to take place two days before an election, the very object of the meeting being to secretly stab the democratic party.

A majority of the democratic candidates nominated in the several townships last Saturday were chosen by acclamation. This indicates harmony and a determination to win. If the same feeling is kept up until the county convention is held and a majority of the candidates for county offices are nominated by acclamation, we are sure to elect the entire ticket. Nominate as many candidates as possible by acclamation, especially for the leading offices.

About 150 negroes, an advance lot of a large number from about Helena, Ark., passed through Cincinnati a few days ago en route to Liberia, via New York. This is the most sensible negro exodus we have heard of. If the negroes were all sent to Liberia, the Chinese to China and the Indians to Canada, Americans might be able to appreciate a "white man's government."

If the republican party is in earnest about wanting honest elections and a fair vote, why is there not an effort made in its own ranks to correct the evil? That party is the only one guilty of stuffing ballot-boxes under the guard and protection of bayonets, and the only party that is guilty of stealing the presidency when it was 250,000 in minority.

Count the democracy of DeKalb county solid against the proposed constitutional amendments. Nearly every township convention held last Saturday resolved to vote "No" on every amendment. The democracy believe in economy and fair elections.

When a republican tells you that a registry law prevents fraudulent voting, just ask him to give you some proof that such is the case, and see how quickly he will want to change the subject.

The notorious Mrs. Clem was recently convicted in Indianapolis for forgery and grand larceny. She will go to the penitentiary for four years.

The Louisiana delegation to Cincinnati will be solid against Tilden, and will probably be instructed for Hancock.

THE TOWNSHIP CONVENTIONS.

ENTHUSIASTIC GATHERINGS OF DEKALB DEMOCRACY.

Harmony in Every Township and Strong Tickets the Result.

Pursuant to a resolution adopted at the last meeting of the county central committee, the democrats of the several townships met in convention last Saturday afternoon and placed in nomination the strongest township tickets ever submitted to the people of DeKalb county for their suffrages.

Below we give the proceedings in brief, and the tickets nominated, as far as heard from.

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.

The convention organized by electing James Quinee chairman and C. M. Merica secretary. Nominations being in order, the names of Levi Jackson and Bennett Hixson were presented for trustee. Hixson was nominated on first ballot.

For assessor, George West, James D. Rowley and Levi Jackson were named. Jackson nominated on first ballot.

For justice of the peace, John Harvey and Joshua Miller were candidates. Miller nominated on first ballot.

For constable in the east part of the township, George Barton was nominated by acclamation. For constable in the western part of the township, John Houser, George Larimor, Wm. Ketchum and J. F. Groves were announced as candidates. Houser was nominated on first ballot. C. M. Merica was chosen to serve as township committeeman and member of the county central committee for the ensuing two years. A motion to reject the proposed constitutional amendments was sustained to a man. When those in favor of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks for president were requested to rise to their feet, every man rose. Unusually good feeling was manifested by the large crowd present, the desire of all seeming to be to nominate the strongest ticket irrespective of self or friends. All were pleased with the nominations, and if the same harmony that prevailed at the caucus continues throughout the campaign, Butler township will be solid on democracy.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

The democrats of Jackson were out in full force, and being called to order by the committeeman, the convention was organized by the election of Henry Hines, chairman, and J. J. Walter, secretary. Upon motion it was decided that each democrat present should approach the desk and deposit his ballot. The following nominations are the result of the balloting:

Trustee, Silas J. Brandon, the present incumbent.

Assessor, John Stafford.

Justice of the peace for the north, Peter Weirick; for the south, John Henderson.

Constable for the north, Sam. Brown; for the south, Moletus A. High.

The following persons were chosen as a campaign committee. J. J. Walter, chairman of township committee; Wm. Carr, treasurer; John Henderson, secretary; J. K. Stafford, Wilson Dancer, S. J. Brandon, Christian Sheets, Peter Weirick and Samuel High. In a general talk concerning the proposed constitutional amendments, it was agreed that they should be rejected as a whole. The attendance was large and the best of feeling was manifested throughout. Jackson is getting ready for a hot fight this fall. Give her room.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP.

The democracy of Concord township met at the school-house in Spencerville and elected Mr. George Barney to preside over the convention, who stated the object of the meeting and made a very nice address, advising harmony of action and the selection of the very best men for the several positions to be filled. The convention proceeded to the nominations of candidates, which resulted in the selection of the following ticket, all without opposition, every candidate being nominated by acclamation:

Trustee, Johnathan Shull.
Assessor, John H. Gill.
Justice of the peace, George Barney.
Constables, Byron A. Woodcox, David Wasson and James Draggoo.

Mr. T. S. Murray was selected for township committeeman and member of the county central committee. All agree that the convention was the best ever held in the township. The large attendance and good feeling that were noticeable indicate victory on the fifth of April.

STAFFORD TOWNSHIP.

The Stafford democrats met at the place of voting and elected Joseph Wilson to preside, and L. C. Loveland secretary of the convention. On motion, the convention proceeded to the nomination of officers.

The name of L. C. Loveland was announced as a candidate for justice of the peace, and there being no other announcement he was declared nominated by acclamation.

For trustee, Wm. Wilson, Warren Webster and Jacob Christoffe were named. Mr. Wilson was nominated on first ballot.

For assessor, the names of David McDonald, Joseph Wilson and John Smith were offered, and Mr. Joseph Wilson was nominated on third ballot.

For constable, Chas. Cole, J. Smith and D. Bordner were named. Charles by unanimous consent. Jacob Christoffe Cole was nominated on first ballot. By was chosen township committeeman. Stafford will send up a good report on the fifth of April.

WILMINGTON TOWNSHIP.

The democrats of Wilmington township met in caucus at Hessler's hall, in the town of Butler, at 2 o'clock p. m. The meeting was called to order by Wm. H. Madden, chairman. Andrew J. Baxter was elected secretary, and George W. Maxwell was elected central committeeman for the next two years. The following named persons were then nominated for township offices:

For trustee, Daniel Tomlinson, present incumbent.

For assessor, David Maxwell.

For justices of the peace, Hambright Reese and Michael E. Krontz.

For constables, D. B. Maxwell, James Chambers, John Hablawetz and Wm. Whetzel.

The best of feeling prevailed. All of the candidates are well qualified for the positions, and were unanimously chosen by acclamation, except the committeeman, who was chosen by ballot.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

The democrats of Auburn and Waterloo precincts met in convention at Winslow's hall, in the town of Waterloo, and transacted the following business:

D. Y. Husselman called the meeting to order, who, upon motion of Mr. Barnes, was made permanent chairman. Theo. Reed was chosen to act as secretary. The announcement of names for township trustee being in order, the name of Sylvester Kutzner, the present trustee, was announced, and there being no opposition he was nominated by acclamation.

For assessor, Jeremiah Plum was nominated by acclamation for re-election.

For justice of the peace in Waterloo precinct Jacob B. Hoover was nominated by acclamation. For justice of the peace in Auburn precinct, A. J. Little, Thomas H. Sprott and Wm. A. Shreve were named. Mr. Sprott declined and Mr. Little was nominated on the first ballot.

For constables in Waterloo precinct, Henry Hornberger and Wm. H. Beard were nominated by acclamation. For constables in Auburn precinct, O. P. Myers and A. P. Fultz were nominated by acclamation. [Since the convention Mr. Fultz has withdrawn his name, and the precinct committeeman has substituted the name of Henry Basheliar. —EDITOR COURIER.]

D. Y. Husselman was the unanimous choice for committeeman in the Waterloo precinct, and Mitch Houston was the unanimous choice for committeeman in the Auburn precinct.

KEYSER TOWNSHIP.

The democrats of Keyser township met in Garrett. The convention, which was the largest and most enthusiastic one ever held in Keyser township, was called to order and presided over by B. D. Thomas, and on motion, W. J. Frederick was made secretary. The following candidates were then nominated by acclamation:

Trustee, Harvey Moody.
Assessor, John Cattell.
Constables, Calvin Grube and Peter K. David. J. J. Vanstuker

On motion of Wash. Teeters, W. J. Frederick was chosen township committeeman and member of the county central committee, and A. Conrad was made secretary for the township. The utmost good feeling and harmony prevailed throughout the proceedings.

RICHLAND TOWNSHIP.

The meeting of the democrats of Richland was called to order by the township committeeman. J. C. Loveland was chosen secretary and T. F. Jordan and James Dunfee were appointed tellers.

T. F. Jordan was named for trustee, and no other name being presented, Mr. Jordan was nominated by acclamation.

John Finch was announced as a candidate for justice of the peace at Corunna, and Nicholas McIntyre was announced for the same office at Sedan. There being no opposition, both were nominated by acclamation.

For assessor, N. Griffith, G. I. Patterson and G. L. Smith were named. Mr. Griffith nominated on first ballot.

Isaac Tryan was nominated for constable at Sedan, and A. Harding, Joe Conrad and J. W. Wallace were announced for the same position at Corunna. Harding was nominated on the first ballot.

For township committeeman, L. D. Britton and J. W. Treesh were candidates. Mr. Britton was chosen for the position by a vote of the convention. The meeting was one of the largest of the kind ever held in the township, and very great interest was manifested by all present.

FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP.

We have no report of the proceedings of the Fairfield convention, but understand that the old reliables of the banner democratic township were all on hand and had a rousing time. The following is the ticket nominated:

For trustee, Solomon Reinoehl.
Assessor, Henry H. Deetz.
Justice of the peace, Henry Potts.
Constables, Jonathan Gushwa and E. Pontius. Several of the ticket were nominated by acclamation. J. M. Brumback was appointed township committeeman.

SMITHFIELD TOWNSHIP.

Not reported.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

The democrats of Franklin assembled at the Center school-house and organized by the election of Joseph Sewell chairman and O. H. Thurston secretary. The convention then proceeded to the nomination of candidates for township offices, with the following result:

For trustee, Martin Hook.
Assessor, Allen Shultz.
Justices of the peace, John Henkle and J. D. Beard.
Constables, John Houlton and Alfred Kepler.

For township committeeman and member of the county central committee, Mr. Thomas H. Tomlinson was chosen. The democrats of Franklin are up and doing, intent upon electing their entire township ticket.

TROY TOWNSHIP.

The convention will not be held until next Saturday.

NEWVILLE TOWNSHIP.

The party opposed to republican rule met at the center school-house and organized with Geo. H. Munn in the chair and J. M. Lawrence secretary. Upon motion the convention adjourned until Tuesday, the 23d inst. at 3 o'clock p. m.

Tuesday—At the appointed time the convention was convened and the following ticket nominated:

For trustee, Wm. Seeley.
Assessor, Henry H. Points.
Justices of the peace, Benjamin F. Blair and Wm. Nelson.
Constables, George Reese and John Gillingham.

George H. Munn was appointed township committeeman.

The nominations are satisfactory to all democrats, and a number of republicans will vote the ticket.

Formation of a Hendricks Club By Indiana Democrats at Washington.

Washington, March 21.—At the suggestion of senator McDonald and Voorhees, a meeting of the Indiana democrats in Washington was held last night, at Senator McDonald's room, and organized a Hendricks club of Washington. Both senators and the democratic members of the house from Indiana, and other democrats in the city, were present. The position of Governor Hendricks was discussed, and it was agreed on all hands that the thing to be done now was to put Mr. Hendricks forward as a candidate. It was the opinion that Mr. Hendricks had been misrepresented on financial questions, and the righting of this misunderstanding should be one of the first duties of the club. Senator Voorhees said a gentleman who had recently seen Governor Seymour told him that Governor Seymour said the Cincinnati convention should nominate Mr. Hendricks, and that if nominated he would be elected. At the meeting to-night Representative Cobb was chosen president of the club, and the other democratic members of the house from Indiana were elected vice-presidents. Lycurgus Dalton was chosen secretary, and Mr. Beadle, of Seymour, assistant secretary. The secretary was directed to communicate with the Hendricks club of Indiana, with the object of an affiliation of clubs. Quite a number of democrats, headed by the two senators, were then enrolled as active members, as well as many more who are in the city. The club will hold weekly.

THE DEMOCRACY.

The Two-Thirds Rule.

Washington, D. C., March 21.—The anti-Tilden men will use every means within their power to prevent the repeal of the two-thirds rule which Tilden has planned to set aside. The supporters of Hancock, and southern men generally, are beginning to discuss this question, and strenuously oppose the Tilden plan. They say those who seek to overturn a rule which has been continuously tested for almost half a century and which has repeatedly proved its usefulness, too often know little about the reasons which caused its institution or the dangers which would result from its abrogation. The two-thirds rule has done the democratic party good service, and has never done it harm. The Sunday Herald, a pronounced Hancock organ, says:

The situation now happens to be such as to show the superlative value of the rule which requires that a candidate for the presidency must not be obnoxious to a large majority of the party. If we are to believe the almost unanimous declaration of the southern leaders and of the southern press, Mr. Tilden's nomination would defeat democratic electors in several of the southern states. The danger is that we shall see at the Cincinnati convention the representatives of the rotten boroughs of the northeast and northwest, where democrats have no chance of preferment against the hopeless radical majorities which snow them under at home, and who are only too glad to have their expenses at the convention paid, acting with the machine, which has driven 80,000 voters away from the party ticket in New York, repealing the two-third rule, and foisting upon the party a candidate who can not by any possibility be elected, not even against Grant.

Pennsylvania Against Tilden.

Washington, March 18.—The fact that the Pennsylvania democratic convention has been called to meet at Harrisburg on the 28th of April next, is accepted here as an anti-Tilden victory. To say the least, it is a great victory of Senator Wallace over Speaker Randall. The Tilden men want a late convention, and to have it held at Pittsburgh. The fact, too, that the chairman of the committee was instructed to place the Philadelphia delegates, already elected, on the roll as delegates to the convention, is clearly inimical to Tilden, inasmuch as those chosen, except in Randall's district, are all conceded to be anti-Tilden. There is a rumor that Tilden may, after all, withdraw, but it finds but few here who give it credence.

Virginia Against Tilden.

State Senator Smith, of the Virginia legislature, was at the capitol to-day. He is one of the leading democrats of that state, and said, talking of the presidential canvass: "There is not a democrat in either house of the legislature, either of the debt-payer or readjuster wings of the party, who is for Tilden. All of them are against him. Every member of the state central committee is against him. The member of the national committee is against him. There is not a democratic paper in the state for him, and he cannot carry Virginia if he is nominated."

Springfield, Tenn., May 6, 1879.

Dr. A. R. White—Dear Sir: I am selling a great deal of your Pulmonaria, have a large demand for it, and recommend it to all as the best cough medicine in the market, and I am not afraid to recomend it, as I had it thoroughly tested on one of my customers, who was given up to die. After taking three fifty-cent bottles of Pulmonaria, he commenced improving, and when he had taken the fifth bottle he was up and in my store and said: "IT SAVED MY LIFE," and that "he should always love me and the Pulmonaria, for it saved him from death, and I was the cause of his taking it." I told him not to love me but Dr. White the inventor of this great medicine. I am selling from eight to fifteen bottles a week of your Pulmonaria.

Yours truly, W. W. ECKLES.

—Those who think of purchasing drygoods or clothing will save money by purchasing soon; examine Schaab, Beugnot & Co's stock and you will find their goods nearly all selling at old prices, which are at least twenty per cent. below present value.

—A motion for a change of venue, in the case of the state against Lewis Garfield, was argued in the circuit court before Judge Lowry yesterday; the motion was overruled, however, and the case is set for trial one week from next Monday, or April 5.

—Will. G. Elliott, of West Unity, Ohio, was in the city a few days last week visiting Harry and Fred. Yesbera, who are old-time acquaintances. From here he went to Angola, where he expected to spend a few days with relatives, before returning to his home in the Buckeye state.

—As the train was coming up from Ft. Wayne last evening, the conductor, Mr. Covert, sang out "Huntertown," as usual, when passing that station and "Stoners" when passing the next. Of course there is nothing funny about that; but just at that point a rural gentleman in the middle of the coach blurted out: "She must have been out o'luck, if they had to Hunter-down and then Ston'er." He giggled and everybody laughed.

—Considerable building and various much-needed improvements will take place in Auburn, we understand, this spring and summer. Let every one take a pride in making their property as attractive as possible, and our little city can then compare with any of its size.

—A valuable pocket-book was found in Davenport's drug store yesterday, and the owner can obtain possession by simply calling and proving property.(P. S.—As far as the contents are concerned, we can only surmise; but the book looks as though an elephant had stepped on it.)

—Step into the mammoth store of Schaab, Beugnot & Co. and be convinced that they have the largest stock of drygoods, clothing and hats and caps ever brought to DeKalb county, and that they are selling them 15 per cent. below the prices of any other store in this part of the state.

—Some of the boys put up a wicked job on Uncle John McClellan yesterday. They induced a little kid to go there and buy a nickel's worth of candy, in pay for which he laid down a piece of useless advertising money and skipped; but Uncle John wouldn't have it that way, as he got "onto" the scheme, captured the youthful shover of "the queer" and made him disgorge part of the candy. No stomach-pump or other violent measures were resorted to.

—Married.—Mr. Milton Swisher, of Jackson township, and Miss Emma Morrison, of Topeka, Ill. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. Johnson of the Presbyterian church, at the residence of the bride's uncle, Mr. John Sugars, Thursday, March 18, 1880. The bride was born in this county, but has been a resident of Illinois since her childhood until a few months ago.

We acknowledge the receipt of a bountiful supply of wedding and infair cake, all of which was most excellent.

—Fred. Lovely Clark (or words to that effect) was one-score-and-four years old last Tuesday, and in commemoration of the eventful day in his career of which the above was an anniversary, he hung out the latch-string to his numerous friends, at his home on Seventh street, that evening; and we merely want to remark, in addition to what has been said elsewhere in this paper concerning it, that if there were any persons there who did not enjoy it better than anybody else, we would like to put their souls under a microscope and "size 'em up."

—The following record of tragedy in Auburn appeared as a "special telegram" in last Friday's Ft. Wayne Sentinel:

"Auburn, Ind., March 19.—Last evening at about half past seven o'clock a man by the name of John Getrost had a narrow escape from being crushed to death by a mad bull. He was knocked about ten feet high, but finally succeeded in getting away."

With the trifling exception that the frenzied "bull" was a young calf, and that it wasn't "mad" but was having a frolic, and that John lacked about nine feet and twelve inches of having been knocked "ten feet high," the above "special" is correct in every particular; but John thinks the Sentinel was "too fresh."

Mr. John Muhlig, Poyner, Iowa, sends us the following communication:

I have been a sufferer with Rheumatism for the last six years; I tried lots of medicines without any success. Visiting one day the store of Messrs. Wangler Bros. in Waterloo, Iowa, these gentlemen induced me to try the St. Jacobs Oil, telling me that it had a record as a very effective remedy. I bought a bottle, used it regularly according to directions, and was relieved of the ailment from which I had suffered for six long years.

St. Joe.

—Gil. Barbeau is happy. It's a young wood-chopper.

—Mahlon Baker has caged his bird. Her name was Miss Laura Wineland.

—Alex. Leighty has sold his property south of the new church to M. P. Bishop.

—Look out for Barney, as he is on the war-path with his scales and carpet-sweepers.

—The darkey who exhibited his musical talent at the hall, Saturday night, lugged away $28 with him.

—The roads are good and business is booming, as may be inferred from the fact that 6,500 bushels of grain were received at the elevators during the six days ending last week.

—During the entertainment Saturday evening, the grocery of E. Fales was broken into, and about five or six dollars in money and some tobacco were taken. The young thief was collared Monday by Mr. Fales and J. K. Culbertson, who made him give up nearly all the money. Now, will this boy be let off unpunished, simply because he is (unfortunately) the offspring of good and respectable parents?

—Some time since quite an excitement was gotten up in regard to abstaining from the use of tobacco. A number quit, or tried to, and a few have been successful so far. One individual in particular has gained a victory over himself, he having, from a pecuniary point of view, "sworn off" entirely; that is, he has quit buying, and all the tobacco he uses now he begs. If the shoe fits you, mister, put it on.

Music in the Air.

Last Friday night, at the bewitching hour when gate-posts yawn—no, at the solemn hour when grave-yards stalk forth—oh, pshaw! Friday night of last week, in the calm, still hours of midnight, just as the writer had lain down to pleasant dreams—imagining that while gazing into the crater of Mount Vesuvius he had lost his balance and fallen in—he was brought to consciousness by a medley of strange sounds just above his chamber door—no, just below his bed-room window. At first he was deluded with the idea that 'twas but the wind, or the car rattling o'er the stony streets; further investigation, however, revealed the fact that 'twas four of a kind;—four charming creatures, the noblest work of God (next to an honest man), who had sallied out into the night for the sole purpose of inspiring the souls of numerous admirers with melody. The heavenly strains produced by Miss Frankie Ryan from a fine-tooth comb, covered with tissue-paper, are beyond the power of man to conceive, while the ethereal melodies emanating from a mouth-organ manipulated by Mrs. Mattie Birdsall touched the heart of one of the lions over in the court-house square; the celestial music ground out of a hand-organ, under the cultivated touch of Miss Mollie Sprott, raised the handle of the town pump in the distance, at the same time causing the pendulum of an eight-day clock to vibrate at the rate of sixty-five miles an hour; and the lovely screeches manufactured on an Æolian harp, or what-is-it, (corn-stalk with a bunghole in one side) by Miss Sadie Hare, inspired us to the very heels, and we fain would have soared out through the roof on wings of rapturous melody. But the saddest part follows. Just as we were about to raise the window-sash and throw out a coal-scuttle full of lemonade, the charming quartette formed a procession and marched off into the darkness and oblivion.

An Epistle,

Not to the Corinthians, or the Romans, or the Thessalonians, but an epistle of exceeding great interest, written by one who was there, to the Editors of the Courier: And it came to pass, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty, and in the third month and the twenty-third day of the third month, that Clark—whose surname is Fred—was twenty and four years old, and there was a great multitude gathered together at his father's house, wherein are many mansions.

For inasmuch as the day before, Clark—whose surname is Fred—went forth into the city, saying unto the men and brethren: "Come ye; bring ye your wives unto my father's house." And unto the lads he opened his mouth and spake thus: "Bring ye fair maidens; more ver not your sisters, but the other fellows' sisters." And he saith, in the goodness of his heart, "I will go forth and invite the widow, likewise, to partake of the feast."

And when they were all gathered together at his father's house, they did eat, drink, dance and be merry with one accord; and there was nothing left undone that could be done for the comfort and welfare of the guests there gathered.

And it also came to pass, when the hours of the feasting were gone, that they arose early in the morning of the twenty-fourth day(i. e. about 2 o'clock) and the brethren and their wives didst go straightway unto the land of Nod; whilst the jolly lads and their maidens didst hie away to the garden gate, there to swing and hold sweet communion each with the other.

LA MORT.

BY [illegible]

How so fair, so sweetly fair—
Fair as the buds that break in May,
Her eyes as blue as the bluest sky
That smiles o'er the brightest day.
And yet she died; and why?
Ah! why? and still, in a dreamless state,
I ponder, and in a dream I lie
And study the inevitable and hesitate.

Clouds of purple piled to heaven,
A lulling wind is o'er the sea;
'Tis a breath of life that is given
To all, and to you and to me.
But the soft-soft wind grew shrill,
And a flower died in its agony.
Why did this messenger kill,
That kissed you first in sympathy?

I have dipped in science and law—
The law that governs human life—
And watch the processes without a flaw,
The fight of atoms in their strife,
I have studied the world as my eyes see,
And my being fills with awe and sublimity
And, after all, it's a mystery
That death is the sesame to eternity.

A great, strong man is full of power—
So full of strength and God-given pride—
Yet, in a day, perhaps an hour,
That lip is stilled, and a soul has hied
Unto its home in the vast beyond—
Gone forever in his journeyings long.
And why, I ask you? Can you respond,
And tell me, is this right, or is it wrong?

MILWAUKEE, Wis.

MY OWN SUICIDE.

I.

I had resolved to kill myself; there was no longer any doubt that Amelia was faithless to me.

Let me be sure about it—was it Amelia her name was? To think that she once held my life, as it were, in her little hand, and I can't recollect, to save my soul, what her name was.

Anyhow, whoever she was, she had proved false to me, and, as I was very young at the time, I had promptly come to the resolution to destroy myself. My first intention was to go and blow out my brains all over her stair-carpet, but then I reflected that every one would know that Henrietta—come to think of it, her name was Henrietta—had infatuated me and turned my head. "No," said I to myself, "no scandal, no publicity! Let me imitate the wounded stag which, seeking to hide its fatal hurt, betakes itself to the most secret thickets, there to perish far from all human eyes."

II.

In this elegiac disposition I took the 5:30 train for Melun, which set me down just at dusk within a few steps of the Golden Lion, a very well-kept inn with clean beds and a capital table.

"What will monsieur have for supper?" said a charming little mistress.

"Nothing—supper would be a mockery. Show me to my tomb—my room, I mean."

I retired to my couch, but not to sleep. In my fevered dreams I beheld Victoria—I am confident it was Victoria, after all—passing, leaning upon the arm of my hated rival. I clutched madly at his throat, and seized—the iron railing of the bedstead. I rose unrefreshed, but what matters that?—I was about to die—ha! ha! to die.

Having dressed myself, I went in search of a rope. You may think that when a person wants to hang himself nothing is easier than to find a rope; but I had to hunt the hotel high and low before I could find one.

"What on earth do you want of a rope, monsieur?" said the pretty mistress when finally she found me one.

With the precious bit of hemp in my pocket, I took my way toward a thicket not far from the hotel, in a little wood whose paths were familiar to me. There was one lonely and gloomy copse there where I well knew my lifeless body would swing for weeks ere it was discovered.

III.

Upon the road I thought of Bertha—I was wrong before; come to think of it, it was Bertha—and cursed her with all the bitterness of which my soul was capable. I then tested my cord. It was not such an agent of self-destruction as I would have chosen had I an assortment from which to make a selection. It seemed to me both short, and not up to my weight. I was annoyed. You cannot tell how a trifle like that will affect a person's temper at such a moment.

A further disappointment was in store for me. On arriving on the spot I had selected in advance, I was disagreeably surprised to find some one else there. An individual, whose back only I could see, was fastening a rope to the most eligible branch of my tree.

"Hello! what are you doing there?" I cried.

He turned round. "What business is it of yours, any way?" he says.

"Bah! don't you think I know what you intended doing?"

"Well, and supposing I wanted to hang myself—it is my own funeral—suicide, I mean."

IV.

I regarded him narrowly. He was a handsome and manly young fellow, of about my own age, with a frank and winning countenance. He was deadly pale.

"This young man," said I, lifting my hands to heaven, "was going to take his life—his own precious life—all for the sake of a worthless jilt."

"Sir!" he cried.

"Poor, silly fool," I went on, communing with myself aloud, "he would undertake to defend her. All lovers are the same. Will you," I continued, "take my advice—the advice of a well-wisher? Just leave that cord there (it was a stouter rope than mine, I had observed) and go quietly home like a good fellow. When you are yourself, you will thank me for having given you such good advice."

He shook his head gloomily. "I desire to die," he muttered.

"Don't let yourself be goaded into taking a step that if you were alive you would regret to-morrow," I went on, with a benevolent persistence. (You see, the fellow had pre-empted the only really-eligible bough in the wood.) "When you are dead, it will be too late to change your mind."

"You speak to me without knowing what misfortune has happened to me."

"I can guess it."

"No, you cannot guess it. Sir, a woman that I loved—a woman for whom—"

And he went on to tell me his story, which, singularly enough, was precisely like mine. The coincidence made me pause a moment to collect my thoughts.

V.

"I see," said Charles (he had told me in the course of his painful story that his name was Charles), "that your silence justifies me."

"By no means," I cried. (You will observe that it wouldn't have been dignified for me to abandon at once my former position on the subject of suicide.) "There is nothing whatever in all that you have told me to justify you in taking your life. Come, my friend," said I, becoming really interested in his case, "come, let us reason the matter out. Why should you complain because you have been unfortunate in love? Don't you know what the poet says?

"The lot of girls was to deceive
Since winter first was snowy."

Women have been false to their lovers from all time; women will be false to their lovers to all time."

"But no woman has ever been so false to her lover as this woman was to me."

"Lots of 'em have."

"No; none could be."

"But I tell you thousands of 'em have. I know one whose conduct towards—towards an intimate friend of mine was— Why should you kill your self because one pretty woman has played you false? Seek another one—a prettier one."

"In vain, in vain," he groaned; "she was the only woman in the world that I cared for—the handsomest woman in all Paris, sir."

"Oh, bosh! I know of a hundred handsomer and more tender than she ever could be. You may think in the first moments of soreness that there are no other women in the world, but in a month from now you'll be prepared to admit how silly it was to entertain such a thought."

VI.

My eloquence seemed so convincing and my position so sound, that it was a pleasure to me to listen to myself. I went on:

"What good will it do you to hang yourself? Tell me, if you can, what useful purpose will be subserved. Either the woman has a heart, or she has not. If she has no heart—"

"She has none—none."

"Of course she has none. Therefore, your death will only be agreeable to her—will only flatter her. It is a big advertisement for a woman to have a man kill himself on her account. What will the public say—the boys? They'll say 'Charles was an ass—a silly ass.' Yes, Charles, everybody will say you were a silly ass, and every body will be right in saying so."

I waxed eloquent; in point of fact, for some moments it had occurred to me that I was arguing my own case, pleading for my own life. I heaped fact upon fact, added argument to argument with such earnestness and closeness of reasoning that my friend Charles at last fell into my arms, and cried, "You are right, you are right—bid me do whatever you would, and I will obey you."

"All right," said I; "let us go and get some breakfast."

VII.

I brought him back to the Golden Lion. I was terribly hungry.

The table at which we seated ourselves was neatly set, and aided one's appetite by its snowy linen, its glittering glass-ware, its golden-brown loaves, its yellow butter.

When a thick and juicy steak, with potatoes, had been served up to us, lapping our prisoned nostrils in the elysium of its appetizing odors, and staining our knives with its vermeil essence, and we had tasted the first glass of some remarkably particular Bordeaux, we were rapturously silent, but our speaking eyes said—nay, shouted: "Well, life isn't such a bad thing, after all."

"If I hadn't met you," said Charles, reaching across the table to squeeze my hand.

"If I hadn't met him," I thought, as I returned his cordial grasp.

"It was the most remarkable piece of luck I ever heard of," he continued; "I don't suppose that a human being goes through that copse twice in a month."

I remained discreetly silent.

"But I say, you know," he went on, as if a sudden light had flashed upon him, "what were you doing in that lonely part of the wood at that early hour of the morning?"

I could not help blushing guiltily.

"You were going to hang yourself, too!"

"I was—upon the very same tree! Here's the rope I had in my pocket."

"The best joke I ever heard of," said Charles, as we clinked our glasses.

Tyndall's Definition of the Brain.

The human brain, according to Prof. Tyndall's recent definition, is the organized register of infinitely numerous experiences received during the evolution of life, or, rather, during the evolution of that series of organisms through which the human organism has been reached; the effects of the most uniform and frequent of these experiments have been successfully bequeathed, principal and interest, and have slowly mounted to that high intelligence which lies latent in the brain of the infant. Thus it happens, says Tyndall, that the European inherits from twenty to thirty cubic inches more of brain than the Papuan—thus it happens that faculties, as of music, which scarcely exist in some inferior races, become congenital in those that are superior—thus, too, it happens that out of savages unable to count up to the number of their fingers, and speaking a language containing only nouns and verbs, arise at length Newtons and Shakspeares.

The Reason of It.

A husband and a wife were overheard conversing with a friend on a Detroit street-car as follows:

She—"Husbands do get so inattentive and careless after they've been married a while."

He—"Yes; you run, call and halloo and whistle when you want to catch a street-car. When it stops you take it easy and dismiss the anxiety from your mind."

FAMOUS SPARKLERS.

The Value of Some of the Largest Known Diamonds.

[From the Pall Mall Gazette.]

The finest diamonds are clear and transparent as a drop of pure water. But, besides these "brilliants of the first water," as they are called, both technically and in ordinary conversation, there are colored diamonds of every sort and hue. A yellow shade is considered objectionable in a diamond; so, also, is a cinnamon color. Next to rose-colored diamonds green take rank in the market; next to green blue, and next to blue black. The value of a diamond may, according to some writers on the subject, be ascertained by a regular formula, according to which the square of the weight in carats must be multiplied by a sum varying according to the condition and quality of the stone. If the diamond is of good water and of fine shape, this sum may be put down at $10. If, however, the diamond be perfect in quality, and also perfectly cut, the sum to be taken as the basis of the calculation will be $30 or $40. Big diamonds have a larger theoretical value than small ones; but, as a matter of fact, diamonds of large size have often had to be cut up before they could be disposed of in the market.

When, in 1837, the Deccan booty, obtained by the army of Lord Hastings, was sold, a magnificent diamond, weighing 375¼ grains, and of the purest water, brought at auction only $15,000. In the present day, the finest diamonds are held by Portuguese, Spanish, French and English families in the order named, and the best market for them is in the United States. Among historical diamonds an important place must be assigned to the celebrated Pitt diamond, of which the weight was 430 carats. But after being cut—a process which occupied two years—it was found to have been reduced to the weight of 136 carats, and it was then sold to the Regent of Orleans for $675,000. Its present value is said to be $1,000,000, though it might be difficult to find a purchaser for it at that price. The Pitt diamond—or Regent diamond, as it was called after having passed into the hands of the Duke of Orleans—became one of the crown diamonds of France. It was destined to meet with strange adventures; for, after being placed by Napoleon on the hilt of the sword of state, it was captured by the Prussians at Waterloo.

A diamond of literally inestimable value, belonging to the King of Portugal, and of Brazilian origin, is said to be worth upward of $2,500,000; but this value is clearly not its value in exchange. For the historical interest attached to it no diamond can be compared to her Majesty's Koh-i-noor. Originally dug from the mines of Golconda, it passed to successive sovereigns of Central India, and in the early part of the fourteenth century was added to the treasures of Delhi. It remained in the possession of the reigning family until the invasion, in the eighteenth century, of Nadir Shah, who, seeing it in the turban of the vanquished Mhammed, proposed to him an exchange of headdresses, and, the polite offer being perforce accepted, bore away with him the priceless jewel. After the assassination of Nadir Shah, the "Mountain of Light" passed through the hands of Ahmed Shah, of Cabul, to Shah Soojah, who gave it as the price of his liberty to Runjeet Singh, ruler of the Punjaub. On the annexation of the Punjaub in 1849, it was stipulated that the Koh-i-noor should be surrendered to the Queen of England, who received it from the East India Company in 1850. At the great exhibition of 1851 this famous diamond was found inferior to its glass model, and it was necessary to surround it with gas-lights in order to bring out its colors.

The Russians have a very good diamond known as the Orloff. It is about the size of a pigeon's egg, and at one time formed the eye of an idol in the temple of Brahma, at Pondicherry. Brahma was robbed of it by a French deserter, from whom it found its way to a Greek merchant established somewhere on the shores of the Mediterranean, who sold it to Count Orloff, at that time in command of the Russian Mediterranean squadron, for 500,000 rubles, an annuity of 20,000 rubles, and a patent of nobility.

Fatal Fifteen.

Time was when a man who arrived at his business late in the morning, with blood-shot eyes, careless dress, pale face and nervous manner, would have been strongly suspected of having indulged in drink. He would have been looked upon with distrust by his employers, disfavor by his friends, despair by his relatives and disapproval by the moral portion of the community. Reprobation would have outweighed any commiseration that he would have received. Now it is not so. "Fifteen" has changed it all. It is understood at once that the unfortunate man has been "trying to do the puzzle," and has been unable to find time to eat, sleep or dress. He is pitied rather than condemned, for he has fellow-victims on every side. The public at large is given over to the consideration of the puzzle. The ticket-sellers on the "L" roads forget to count their change in the abstraction that comes of "almost getting it." Errand boys stop around the corner and pull out their little square boxes and shove the blocks around desperately. The pressmen in the Herald office when they finish their night's work do not go home as of yore, but stop to "play fifteen" through the early morning hours. Business men puzzle over it on their way to and from their offices. Clergymen ponder it in their studies. And yesterday a man in Broadway, with a stand heaped high with "gem puzzles," became so deeply absorbed in trying to solve the puzzle that he forgot to offer his wares for sale, and paid no attention when a gamin stole one from his store, and, going half a block away, sat down to work it out himself. Dr. Hammond declared in the Academy of Sciences, on Monday night, that the puzzle was an excellent thing for physicians who treat the nervous disorders of the brain. It improved their practice. It has also been said that for a few weeks the number of commitments for lunacy by the Police Justices of the city have been far in excess of the usual average, and the officials of the Lunatic Asylum were unable to account for it until they discovered fifteen patients trying to arrange themselves in order on a large diagram they had marked out on the floor of one of the halls of the asylum on Blackwell's island.

Against the craze the reaction has already begun. A large number of signs have been printed with the inscription "Pinafore and Puzzle Prohibited," which may be hung up in drawing-rooms and offices by those who have either escaped the popular fevers or recovered from them.—New York Herald.

Birth of a Poem.

Doubtless, many of our readers have read Gen. W. S. Lytle's fine poem "Cleopatra," written the night before the battle in which he was killed. The Pittsburgh Leader relates the romantic circumstances under which it was written. They were told by the late Col. Realf to a gentleman:

He spoke of the night before the battle at which Gen. W. S. Lytle fell. The two (Realf and Lytle) lay together in the General's tent.

They were both given to writing poetry at such times, and each had an unfinished poem on hand, and they read and criticised each other's efforts humorously for some time, when said Lytle:

"Realf, I shall never live to finish that poem."

"Nonsense," said I; "you will live to write volumes of such stuff."

"A feeling has suddenly come over me," continued the gentleman, solemnly, "which is more startling than a prophecy, that I shall be killed in to-morrow's fight.

"As I spoke to you I saw the green hills of the Ohio as if I stood among them. They began to recede from me in a weird way, and as they disappeared the conviction flashed through me like the lightning's shock that I would never see them again."

I rallied him for his superstition, but the belief had become strangely impressed upon his mind, and he succeeded in so far thrilling me with his own unnatural fear that I begged him to finish his poem before he slept, that such fine work might not be lost to the world.

"In the small hours the General awakened me from a slumber into which I had fallen to read to me that beautiful poem, which must live as long as our literature survives, beginning:

I am dying, Egypt, dying;
Ebbs the crimson life-blood fast.

My eyes filled with tears as he read. He said not a word as he concluded, but placed the manuscript in his pocket and lay down to sleep.

Before dawn came the call to arms. When I next saw poor Lytle he was cold in death among heaps of slain. I thought of the poem, and, searching the pocket where I had seen him put it, drew it forth, and it was forwarded among other things to his friends.

Novel Mode of Preserving a Man's Reason.

A curious story is going the rounds of the English newspapers of an exhibition in the show windows of one of the leading jewelers of Vienna. The object of attraction is a brooch magnificently studded with gems, in the middle of whose chasing is inclosed the most singular of centers—four common, old, bent, and corroded pins. This brooch is the property of the Countess Lavetskofy. The pins have a history, of course. Seven years ago Count Robert Lavetskofy, as the story runs, was arrested at Warsaw for an alleged insult to the Russian Government. The real author of the insult, which consisted of some careless words spoken at a social gathering, was his wife. He accepted the accusation, however, and was sent to prison.

In one of the lightless dungeons in which the Czar is said to be fond of confining his Polish subjects the unfortunate martyr for his wife's loose tongue spent six years. He had only one amusement. After he had been searched and thrown into a cell, he had found in his coat four pins. These he pulled out and threw on the floor; then in the darkness he hunted for them. Having found them, perhaps after hours and even days, he scattered them again. And so the game went on for six weary years. "But for them," he writes in his memoirs, "I would have gone mad. They provided me with a purpose. So long as I had them to search for, I had something to do. When the decree for my liberation as an exile was brought to me the jailer found me on my knees hunting for one which had escaped me for two days. They saved my wife's husband from lunacy. My wife, therefore, could not desire a prouder ornament."

The Truth of History.

The story is going the rounds that when Abraham Lincoln, in 1860, was waited upon at Springfield, Ill., by a committee from Washington to ascertain whether he would accept a Presidential nomination, he was found engaged in playing a match game of base-ball. In many of its features the story is apochryphal, but there is this foundation in the gossip of the town. A committee, which sought Mr. Lincoln out to solicit his views regarding either the nomination or his purposes in that regard, did find him engaged in a game of hand-ball, of which he was very fond, and, it is said, contesting with Dave Hickey, also an expert (now a street-car conductor), for the local championship. When the news of his nomination reached him, Mr. Lincoln was sitting by the telegraph editor of the State Journal, reading the dispatches as they came in, and the chair in which he sat is still carefully preserved in that office.

QUACK DOCTORS.

Of all the humbugs of the age not one excels the quack doctor. There comes around a fellow holding forth that he is an Indian who understands the medicinal properties of every plant and root in the vegetable kingdom, has been a medical practitioner many years, and met with unparalleled success. He can show certificates from thousands he has cured. He takes rooms at the most popular hotel in the town where he stops, and, after advertising and sending out handbills by the thousands, waits anxiously for patients. He does not wait long, for the poor suffering invalid, ready to catch at a straw, although he has been, time after time, defrauded of his money, and perhaps been permanently injured by this very class of quacks, timidly goes to the doctor's room just to talk with him, he says, as there is no fee for consultation, but when he departs, be assured, he goes not empty-handed, though his purse may be much lighter than when he entered. Money, however, is a secondary consideration, now that health, that blessed boon so long denied him, seems very near, for the black-haired Indian has impressed him with a sense of his superior skill, and his heart is full of hope and faith. He has no more than left than another patient enters. It is a poor woman in tears and distress. She has paid out her last cent, she says, to doctors, in hopes of getting help for the catarrh which is killing her, and, as that disease is one of his specialties, and he offers, in his advertisements, to treat the poor free of charge, she has come to him in hopes of obtaining relief. He pretends to examine the case, and shortly pronounces her incurable. She goes away sobbing harder than when she entered. "Then I must die," she says, "and leave the poor children. Oh, me!" But immediately the door is shut upon her, the doctor only hems, and says: "Poor fool! wonder if she thought I'd doctor her for nothing; guess I've got my bread and butter to pay for."

At the end of a week he has prescribed for no less than fifty patients, turning none away as incurable who offered to pay. As he is a man of no medical skill his medicines benefit none, while they injure many. Still some are so full of faith and foolish as to assist in extending the local fame the advertisements and false certificates of cure have given him. And the rascal really puts in his appearance to the same place, at stated intervals, afterwards—though in the town where he has mostly lived it is generally thought he is a half-educated negro who has assumed the disguise of an Indian, by wearing a wig of long black hair, and dressing somewhat after the style of that race.

But, strange to tell, the very ones that are duped by him soon avail themselves of the opportunity to be treated as foully by another quack. A magnetic physician of wonderful power and long experience advertises that he is to be found at the same hotel, where he can prove that his cures are marvelous, if not miraculous. By a course of manipulation the crooked, rheumatic limb becomes straightened and supple, the blind are made to see, the deaf to hear, etc. This method of cure is more taking than the former, and hundreds flock to see him. None obtained relief except a few whose stiff joints are said to be limbered by the doctor's (?) course of manipulation, which could have been performed just as well by any one else as by the quack professing such healing powers. At all events, by the time he leaves town many are thoroughly indignant with him for extracting from them nearly their last farthing by promising them the relief they never receive.

Then a Spiritualist, professing to be gifted with supernatural powers, turns up. He does not make quite as bold a sweep, is a little less popular, but there are plenty to run after him. Among the number is a poor sewing-woman, who goes without a new set of false teeth or a switch of false hair, to lavish her money on him in hopes of getting relief for her ailments. But she might as well have had the teeth and hair, for her ailments are not a whit less than before.

Then comes one who professes to cure by faith and prayer. In this there seems to be no humbug, for the man asks no money for his services. Of course, those who are disposed can give him whatever they choose, but he will pray for the penniless as well as the millionaire, and many possessed of ample faith are apparently restored; so we will not class this man with quacks. Nor can the regular practicing physician who has honestly earned his diploma be looked upon in that light. But, alas! how often does he fall short of his calling. His own conscience often tells him he kills more than he cures; still, for his unsatisfactory treatment, the last dollar a poor man has must be wrung from him to pay the professional experimenter, whose vile drugs have wrought life-long mischief to his system, when perhaps the simplest remedy would have availed more in his case. Probably the earth yields roots and herbs capable of curing every bodily ailment, and few but may know something of the virtue of them. It should be a part of every child's education to learn the wonderful mechanism of the human system, and the simple methods of curing many of the maladies to which all are liable. Then quack doctors and regular practitioners would have less dupes, the poor man more money to expend for food and clothes for himself and family, and the rich man more to give to the needy.—Chicago Ledger.

How Irish Ruins Are Preserved.

The Irish remains known as Con O'Neill's Castle, Castlereagh, were ordered, by their proprietor, to be inclosed with a wall built around the ruins. If ever there was a real Hibernian bull, the agent of the estate perpetrated one on this occasion, for he actually pulled down the ruins themselves to obtain stone for a wall to inclose them.—Chambers' Journal.

BEAUTIFUL BELL.

BY HALLIE C. I.

There's a winsome wee lass
That none can surpass;
Her eyes are merry and blue
By the ponderous mill,
At the foot of the hill,
Lives she that's tender and true.

Where the stream dimples o'er
The white sandy floor,
We gather the pebble and shell;
And I twine in her hair
Twin lilies plucked there,
And call her my beautiful Bell.

Beyond the tall cliff,
In our own little skiff—
While I dream sadly for hours—
She is joyous and gay
As a sunny May day,
And her arms are laden with flowers.

And shall she be mine?
Where the green ivies twine
And clamber out gayly to view,
Lives one to obey
That proudly says nay.
'Tis mother, and—what shall I do?

SCANDALS OF GRANTISM.

Black Friday and its Memorable History.

(From the New York Sun.)

I.

Ulysses S. Grant entered upon his duties as President of the United States on the 4th of March, 1869. At the previous election the States of Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas were disfranchised, and Congress threatened to throw out the votes of Louisiana and Georgia, but decided to count them when it was found that it would not affect the general result. After his election and before his inauguration, Grant continued to hold the office of General in the army, that he might receive the emoluments and name his successor. In his inaugural address he announced that he should have no policy to enforce against the will of the people. If he intended this remark as a sneer at his predecessor it was undignified; if he meant it as a forecast of his work, it was false. Within forty-eight hours he requested Congress to repeal a law made to protect the public interests, and which had stood unquestioned since the administration of Washington, because it happened to block the way to one of his capricious appointments. Charles Sumner refused to heed this foolish request, and was marked for political persecution from that day forth.

The first summer of Grant's administration was devoted to seaside loiterings and purposeless journeys, undertaken in the pursuit of idle pleasure. It was on one of these jaunts that he made the acquaintance of Jay Gould and James Fisk, Jr., who subsequently used him as their tool or confederate in the financial conspiracy which culminated in Black Friday.

On the evening of the 15th of June, 1869, a gay party, composed of Ulysses S. Grant, Jay Gould, and Jim Fisk, each accompanied by his retainers, left New York for Boston on one of Gould's highly ornamented steamers. The ostensible object of the trip was to attend Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore's peace jubilee. The arrangement of the details had been intrusted to Fisk. At supper on the steamboat the conversation was deftly turned to the "state of the country." Gould, in his sworn testimony before the Garfield committee of the Forty-first Congress, describes this supper and says of the conversation: "The President was a listener. The other gentlemen were discussing. Some were in favor of Boutwell's selling gold, and some were opposed to it. After they had all interchanged their views, some one asked the President what his views were. He remarked that he thought there was a certain amount of fictitiousness about the prosperity of the country, and that the bubble might as well be tapped in one way as another. That was the substance of his remark. He asked me what I thought about it. I remarked that I thought if that policy was carried out it would produce great distress and almost lead to civil war; it would produce strikes among the workmen, and the workshops to a great extent would have to be closed; the manufactories would have to stop. I took the ground that the Government ought to let gold alone and let it find its commercial level; that, as a matter of fact, it ought to facilitate an upward movement of gold in the fall. The fall and winter is the only time that we have any interest in. That was all that occurred at that time."

The key to Gould's conversation is found in the fact that those who accompanied him were his stool-pigeons. The talk was arranged beforehand for the purpose of ascertaining Grant's opinions, and approaching him at points where he appeared most vulnerable. He was in the hands of trained gamblers, and they, in the parlance of their trade, were "playing him for a flat." A deadhead journey to Boston, a free supper, and an abundance of champagne, constituted the vulgar bait thrown out to catch the Chief Magistrate of the American people. And he was caught.

II.

In June, 1869, about the time of the Boston Peace Jubilee, Mr. H. H. Van Dyck resigned his office as Assistant Treasurer at New York. Jay Gould undertook to name his successor, with a view to controlling the treasury when the time should come to "corner" the gold market. He had already formed an alliance with Abel R. Corbin, the brother-in-law of Grant. Corbin was a ready writer and a man of some ability. He had been unsuccessful in business, and was willing to trade on his influence at the White House. Years before he had served an apprenticeship in the lobby at Washington. He could talk politics and finance with great fluency, and Grant frequently sought his counsel. The fact that he was not strictly honest never interfered with the cordiality of their relations.

Robert B. Catherwood, an eminently respectable man, who had married Corbin's step-daughter, was suggested for Assistant Treasurer. Gould and Corbin talked with him on the subject, and urged him to take the place that the three might operate together and make a great deal of money "in a perfectly legitimate manner." Mr. Catherwood, in his testimony, says that his ideas differed from theirs as to what constituted a "legitimate manner," and he declined the office. It was then decided to confer it upon Gen. Daniel Butterfield, who, when this design was made known to him, wrote a letter thanking Mr. Corbin very kindly, hoping that he would exercise his influence, as he had previously done, and saying that he was under many obligations to him, and that he trusted he would be successful. The work in which Corbin expected to be successful was in cornering gold through the aid of the Assistant Treasurer. In due time Gen. Butterfield was commissioned, and Corbin's standing was measurably increased in the eyes of Gould and Fisk. Mr. Corbin had first appeared to Gould as a suppliant for favors. On the strength of his relationship to Grant he wanted to be taken into some enterprise where he could make money. It was then that Gould suggested the feasibility of advancing the price of gold, which was then among the thirties, to the forties or fifties, provided the Government could be induced to assist them. His theory was that a rise would facilitate the exportation of grain, but he hastened to add: "We could make money both ways, by buying it then and selling it on the rise." Gould adds this compliment in speaking of Corbin: "He was a very shrewd old gentleman. He saw at a glance the whole case, and said he thought it was the true platform to stand on; that whatever the Government could do legitimately and fairly to facilitate the exportation of breadstuffs and produce good prices for the products of the West, they ought to do. He was anxious that I should see the President, and communicate to him my views on the subject." It was because of this preconcerted anxiety that the deadhead excursion of the 15th of June was arranged. Of course Corbin was among the invited guests, and the subsequent proceedings seem to show that he improved the opportunity to impress his brother-in-law favorably with his friends Gould and Fisk.

III.

When Grant returned from Boston he went directly to Corbin's house, where he held a protracted interview with Jay Gould, during which, according to testimony, Grant said to Corbin: "Boutwell gave an order to sell gold, and I heard of it, and countermanded the order." This was the first positive declaration the conspirators had received that they had won the President over to their side, or that they could count on his co-operation. Gould was so pleased that he immediately tendered to Grant the free use of a special train to take him to Corry, Pa., and thence to Philadelphia. This offer was greedily accepted.

On the 19th of August, Grant went to Newport, where Jim Fisk went to see him. Fisk, in his testimony, said: "I think it was some time in August that Gen. Grant started to go to Newport. I then went down to see him. I had seen him before, but, not feeling as thoroughly acquainted as I desired for this purpose, I took a letter of introduction from Mr. Gould, in which it was written that there were 800 sail of vessels then on the Mediterranean, from the Black sea, with grain to supply the Liverpool market. Gold was then about 34. If it continued at that price, we had very little chance of carrying forward the crop during the fall. I know that we felt nervous about it. I talked with Gen Grant on the subject, and endeavored, as far as I could, to convince him that his policy was one that would only bring destruction on us all. He then asked me when we should have an interview, and we agreed upon the time. He said: 'During that time I will see Mr. Boutwell, or have him there.'"

It is interesting to know that the lamented Fisk, with steamboats, railroads, terpsichorean divinities, and other affairs to manage, still found time to give the President of the United States lessons in finance; and that, backed by Gould's letter of instruction, he succeeded in his mission and induced the President to adopt a fallacy so absurd that its bare statement condemns it—the fallacy that an unnatural premium on gold is essential to the maintenance of our foreign commerce.

During the weeks preceding Black Friday Grant was very frequently in New York, and usually in the company of Corbin. His intimacy with Fisk and Gould began to attract attention, but he paid small heed to the criticisms passed on him on that account. On the 2d of September he went to Saratoga, leaving poor Rawlins, his Secretary of War, who had been his mentor and guide through all his military career, to die unattended in Washington. He was recalled on the 6th to attend Rawlins' funeral, but on the 10th he again appeared in New York. Gen. Rawlins left no property, and a fund was raised for the benefit of his family. Gen. Grant subscribed $1,000 to this fund. Gould and Fisk not only gave a larger amount, but they paid Grant's subscription for him. He accepted their gift with unblushing promptitude.

The plotters were resolved to make hay while the sun of official favor shone upon them. On the 2d of September, Jay Gould, having thoroughly convinced himself that he could rely on brothers-in-law Corbin and Grant, bought for Corbin $1,500,000 in gold at an average price of 132¾. Gould was afraid, however, that Boutwell might interfere. He says that some of those who were short of gold had arranged to give the Secretary a dinner, and he was solicitous as to what the effect might be. He sought out Corbin again, who assured him that the President was all right; that at his (Corbin's) house Gen. Grant had written a letter directing Boutwell to sell no gold without consulting him, and that he had intrusted this letter to Butterfield, who afterward told Gould that he had delivered it. Nothing now remained but to put the President safely out of the way in some remote corner where the rising storm of public indignation would not reach him nor compel him to recognize and perform his duty.

IV.

The little town of Washington, Pa., was accessible by rail in 1869 only by way of Wheeling, W. Va. It was cut off entirely from telegraphic communication, and it was, perhaps, the best place in the United States in which to seclude a man whose absence was essential to the success of a financial conspiracy. To that point on the 13th of September the President made his way. He explained that he wanted to visit a family of the name of Smith, a distant relative whom he had not seen for thirty years.

The country was on the verge of financial disaster. Merchants, importers, all who bought and sold, began to feel that they were at the mercy of a clique of sharpers and gamblers who were bent on driving the gold premium up among the eighties or nineties, that they might clear $30,000,000 at the expense of every legitimate interest of trade. They knew that this premium was fictitious and speculative; that under an honest and intelligent management of the treasury it could not exist. But what were the relations between the Government and the sharpers? That was the question which sorely disturbed the minds of honest men. Gould was deep and taciturn, but Fisk was shallow and talkative. In warning his friends, in threatening his enemies, he blurted out the secrets of the combination. He swore he would carry gold up to 200, and when he was told that the Government could block his game by selling gold, he answered: "The President is with us." This revelation threw a new light on the intimacy between Grant and these gamblers. Men of high standing hastened to the capital to tell the President what dangerous persons his new friends were, and to point out to him the necessity of immediate action. When they got there they were gravely told that Grant was gone. Gone where? To an unheard-of town, out of the line of communication, but he had left orders to sell no gold. They came away disheartened.

The conspirators were jubilant. Fisk testified that about the 15th of September he bought gold to the amount of seven or eight millions. Gould made much heavier purchases. The price was forced above 140, and the syndicate controlled from fifty to sixty millions of it.

On the 20th of September, Gould said to Fisk (this is sworn testimony): "This matter is all fixed up; Butterfield is all right. Corbin has got Butterfield all right, and Corbin has got Grant fixed all right; and, in my opinion, they are interested together." Fisk says that was a point he did not take into consideration. He supposed Corbin had convinced Grant by argument that forty-five was the proper gold premium at which to move the crops. He did not believe up to that time that Grant, or anybody nearer to him than his brother-in-law, had a stake in the scheme. When Gould suggested it, he was startled, and resolved immediately to see Corbin. He said to Gould: "You give me a letter to him, so that he will talk confidentially with me." He got the letter, and he gave under oath, before the Committee on Banking and Currency, this account of what followed: "When I met him he talked very shy about the matter at first, but finally came right out and told me that Mrs. Grant had an interest; that $500,000 in gold had been taken by Mr. Gould at 31 and 33, which had been sold at 37; that Mr. Corbin held for himself about $2,000,000 of gold, $500,000 of which was for Mrs. Grant and $500,000 for Porter. I did not ask whether he was General or not. I remember the name Porter. This was given out very slowly. He let out just as fast as I did when he found that Mr. Gould had told me about the same thing. I said: 'Now, I have had nothing to do with your transactions in one way or the other. You can make your pathway clear and straight by emptying it all out to me, because Mr. Gould and myself stand together; we have no secrets from each other; we have embarked in a scheme that looks like one of large magnitude. Mr. Gould has lost as the thing stands now. It looks as if it might be pretty serious business before getting out straight again. The whole success depends on whether the Government will unload on to us or not.' He said: 'You need not have the least fear.' I said: 'I want to know whether what Mr. Gould told me is true; I want to know whether you have sent this $25,000 to Washington as he states?' He then told me that he had sent it; that Mr. Gould had sold $500,000 in gold belonging to Mrs. Grant which cost 31 or 37 or something in that neighborhood, leaving a balance in her favor of about $27,000, and that a check for $25,000 had been sent. Said I: 'Mr. Corbin, what can you show me that goes still farther than your talk?' 'Oh, well,' the old man said, 'I can't show you anything; but,' said he, 'this is all right.' He talked freely, and repeated: 'I tell you it is all right.' When I went away from there I made up my mind that Corbin had told me the truth."

Subsequently, before the Banking and Currency Committee, there appeared a witness who was ready to swear that he had examined the money-delivery book of Adams Express Company, and that he had seen the entry of a package sent from New York, some time in September, 1869, to Mrs. U. S. Grant, White House, valued at $25,000. The majority of the committee, under Garfield's lead, refused to receive this testimony. The Manager of the express company, Samuel M. Shoemaker, privately told Mr. Garfield that no such entry appeared, and he was called to the witness-stand to substantiate this statement. He produced his money-package book, assuring the committee at the same time that it contained no delivery to Mrs. Grant. Mr. Samuel S. Cox, of the minority of the committee, asked to examine the book. It was handed to him, and, running his eye down the page, he read aloud this entry: "September, 1869, Mrs. U. S. Grant, White House, money package, value $25,000." Garfield jumped to his feet in unfeigned astonishment, while Shoemaker appeared to be overwhelmed with surprise. He studied the book for several minutes, and finally said: "After careful examination I am satisfied that it is $250." He explained that by inserting before the last two ciphers a period, which had been accidentally omitted, it would read $250 and no cents. Mr. Garfield adopted the imaginary period in his report and declared the President's family were vindicated.

V.

Jim Fisk was too impetuous. He wanted not only the "old man's" assurance that "it was all right" with the Grants, but he insisted that Corbin should write a letter to the President urging him to stand firm and not to sell gold on Government account under any circumstances. Poor Corbin was already in the job up to his ears, and he readily wrote the letter. Fisk caused it to be delivered by a special messenger, who left Pittsburgh at 1 o'clock in the morning and rode twenty-eight miles on horseback to Washington, Pa. He arrived at the house of Grant's distant relative at about 2 o'clock in the morning and delivered the letter. The President read it carefully, and, after holding a consultation with his wife in regard to its contents, he said to the messenger: "It is satisfactory; there is no answer." But from that moment he took the alarm. The rumble and roar of the great financial storm had actually penetrated his remote hiding place. Another messenger came to him direct from the capital telling him he must return; that imperative business demanded his attention; that another day's absence might destroy his fame. Then it was, according to Corbin's testimony, that Mrs. Grant wrote to Mrs. Corbin saying that the President was greatly distressed to learn that her husband was speculating in Wall street, and expressing the hope that he would immediately disconnect himself from anything of that sort. This letter appears to have frightened Corbin, but his fear did not get the better of his shrewdness. He sent for Jay Gould, and told him that he (Corbin) must go out of the matter; that it had created a great deal of feeling in his own family as well as on the part of the President, and that it must end immediately. But he wanted $100,000 as his share of the profits in a partnership where he had invested his brother-in-law against Gould's money. Gould says, under oath: "I told him I would give him $100,000 on account, and that, when I sold, if he liked, I would give him the average of my sales. I did not feel like buying any gold of him then."

Corbin's fright, the return of the President to Washington, the growing excitement in financial and business circles, warned the speculators that they were approaching the end of their rope. On Thursday, the 23d of September, they knew that Wall street could not bear the pressure more than one day longer. On Thursday night Gould, as usual, was saturnine and Fisk mercurial.

VI.

Black Friday came. The business of the metropolis stood still at the audacious command of a clique of sharpers. Every artery of trade, every nerve of enterprise, felt a shock as of paralysis. Merchants rose from sleepless beds to make their way to Wall street, hoping against hope that they might find some way to purchase the gold required to meet their contracts. Bankers who had faith in the honesty of the administration, and who had invested heavily, in the belief that the fictitious price could not last, grew wild with excitement when they found what preparations were making to corner the market. On the previous day gold had risen to 144. If it remained there, or went higher, thousands would be irretrievably ruined—not speculators alone, but honest business men, with whose honor and credit these jugglers of the street were playing their game.

Gould and Fisk were early on the ground. They operated through a number of brokers, directing that all gold which was offered should be purchased till the "corner" was complete. Gould himself kept out of sight. He was known to be in his office, but he was careful that his orders should be issued through some third party. He was playing with loaded dice. If he won, he intended to pocket the profits. If he lost, he could repudiate his contracts.

All through the forenoon the excitement increased in intensity. Hundreds of telegrams were sent to Washington, appealing to the President to sell gold on Government account, and thus break the conspiracy against the public welfare. These appeals were accompanied by plain hints that delay would be accepted as proof that Grant was in league with the gamblers.

At noon the order came to sell $4,000,000 in gold for the Government. The order was communicated to the Assistant Treasurer by telegraph, and was immediately made known to Jay Gould and Jim Fisk, who, being thus forewarned, set to work to save themselves from the wreck in which they had involved the street. Among the brokers operating on their account was Albert Speyer, who had formerly been a brewer and had accumulated a handsome fortune. Throughout the forenoon he bought largely, bidding as high as 60 and 65 for gold. When the news reached the Gold Room that the Government was selling, the premium immediately declined to 35. But Speyer kept on buying at 60, obeying implicitly the orders he had received from the chief conspirators. When he was loaded down with more millions than he could count he rushed wildly to Gould's office to report progress. He was received with the cool remark, "We don't want any of your —— gold." Poor Albert Speyer staggered out of the place, and before the close of the day was insane.

When night fell on Black Friday New York felt that all the conditions of her commercial prosperity had been rudely assailed. The nominal transactions in gold for that one day aggregated $500,000,000. Fifty houses failed outright, and more than three times that number were rendered insolvent by their losses. The Gold Exchange did not open its doors again for business till the 28th of September. The demoralizing effect of the conspiracy spread far and wide.

A Very Sagacious Horse.

A very old and remarkable horse, the property of Col. John H. James, of Urbana, Ohio, has recently died. Old Bonny, like most intelligent people, had decided ideas of his own. When the Colonel was in his office Old Bonny, though never hitched, stood at his hitching post in front, unless the sun or flies became troublesome, when he would go round the corner and through a narrow lane into the back lot, but could be found in one place or the other, except on a few occasions, becoming impatient at an unusually long delay, he went home alone. At noon he would go up to the steps, and, when the buggy was unloaded and all the packages taken out, he would go to his box under a tree and wait for his dinner, while at night he would go with equal regularity and alone to the stable. Bonny undoubtedly came to distinguish Sundays from other days. Whether this was from the ringing of the church bells, or from the later hour he was wanted, or from a direct influx of that wisdom that teaches the sparrow to fly, on Sunday, without the raising of a line, he would turn to the right and go to church, while on workdays he would to the left and go down town. One of his last exploits was one of the most remarkable. He had lost two shoes, and his feet had become a little sore. Pat, the stable-boy, who had believed that Bonny knew more than many men, took two shoes, tied them together with a string, shook them before his face, and hung them across his neck, and then started him off alone, and he went four blocks, turning two corners, to Edward Hill's blacksmith shop, where he had been shod for twenty years, and, after the shoes were put on, went home alone. Since his last exploit Mr. Hill would freely and conscientiously make oath that Old Bonny knew more than half his human customers.

It is estimated that the average space occupied by a soldier in the line is a front of twenty inches, and a depth of thirteen inches, and that five men can stand in a space of one square yard. To carry the calculation further, 24 200 can stand on one acre, and 15,488,000 on a square mile. The entire population of the United States, assuming it to be about 45,000,000, could be crowded into an area of three square miles; and the inhabitants of the entire world, estimated to be about 1,450,000,000, on a space ten miles long and ten miles wide, or 100 square miles.

NOTES OF A JOURNEY.

From Chicago to Leadville.

A journey to the Western "Mecca" at this time of the year is by no means a small undertaking. Having secured my ticket, I proceeded to the Wells street depot, in Chicago, and, seeing a gentlemanly gentleman of color with a luxuriant gold band round his cap bearing the inscription "Conductor Pullman Car," I asked that official for the emigrant Pullman. With a magnificent twirl round on his heel, and showing his ivories, he pointed officially to the rear end of the car, remarking, "Well, dat beats me, shuah!" So, boarding the cars, the bell rang, and soon we were steaming away on the splendid road-bed of the Chicago and Northwestern, which cannot be excelled in the world. Soon Turner Junction is reached and passed; likewise the numerous small stations with which you are familiar, to Clinton. Here many passengers left us, leaving a fair sprinkling of emigrants for the "Far West." The land stations along need not to be described to you; so pretty soon comes DeWitt. After a final good-by, we speed on our journey to the measured beat of the engine; soon "Calamus"—the name of which reminds one of the deadly nightshade, fever, ague and the physic an' paradise. Away across the swampy marshes of the Wapsie. Leaving such a country with few regrets, we soon come in sight of more healthy towns; all along the good nice villages with church spires peeping above the houses looking calm and quiet; bright faces greet us at every station; loafers run from the adjacent stores, as though a $1,000 check was coming, or, at least, "Uncle Malachi, the Hog-Cholera Doctor." "Cedar Rapids," rang out the cheery conductor, "thirty minutes for supper!" Now, having had some experience in railroad cuisine, I kept a sharp eye on the conductor, and, taking a seat by that official, I proceeded—and, must it be said?—without talking to it, to stow away as much food in the shortest space of time as possible. Here, let me note, is the best wayside meal on the entire route for passengers, and at very reasonable rates. "All aboard for the West!" and away we steamed amid hail, rain and mud, and, coming to the conclusion it was a nasty night, I pulled down the blind and found a copy of the Times, lighted a very mean smoke, and took in the news. Darkness now coming on, heads began to droop, and nasal duets came from all parts of the car. Away, away, the livelong night—nothing but the beat of the locomotive, the rattling of the rain against the windows, the sighing of the wind, that seemed to pour its wailing moan at us and then die away, leaving us thankful that our "prairie schooner" was impervious to "Old Probs" in his worst mood. "Boone, Boone!" And here, dear reader, let me have your sympathy while I relate one of the worst Boons ever imposed on man—three women, thirteen kids, ranging from 10 years to 2, bedding, baskets, food and all the requirements for a voyage around the world—entered the car. After the necessary amount of kicking, cuffing and fighting the "maters" stowed them in seats, and first supplied them with milk and cake; then, coolly dissecting with their "claws" two or three chickens, passed it around in chunks; then started for the inevitable water can. Dear reader, if you have ever noticed—and I think you have—the capacity of a German child for water you will agree with me that the passage of scripture where Isaiah was wishing his eyes were "rivers of waters" indicates that he had not been used to preaching to German audiences, or he would in all probability have come out worse than he did in the noted bear scrape (I mean his pard, Elijah). Having gorged to the utmost limit the receptacle provided them (you cannot call it stomach), they went through "Hew" Wagner's "dying paroxysm" to a dot; the "maters" kicked, cuffed, spanked, tugged, shrieked, and, I am afraid, swore at them, until they finally, being exhausted, huddled in a heap and went to sleep until, away out on the prairie and into the "wee sma' hours," we reached Carroll. Lamps flitted around, the wind had gone down, and snow was falling rapidly. Thinking I would have a change of music, I proceeded through the baggage car, and found the worthy man busily stacking mail-sacks, piling trunks, sorting packages, in fact, full of work. Handing him a cigar, he instantly produced a comfortable arm-chair, and of course I soon found out his genealogy for some few generations back. Finding him a genial companion, I was sorry to leave him at Dunlap, but, to my joyous surprise, on emerging from the car I found the German squad, bag and baggage, disembarking from the car. So, amid the kicking, cuffing, squealing, and a tornado of Low Dutch, coupled with a pious blessing on their towy little heads, we left them in the "just daybreak," the sun peeping out; fitful, cold blasts of wind sweeping down the great barren slopes so peculiar to that part of the country. On, on, to the bluffs the good train sped. Soon we came in view of the great Missouri bottoms; low, flat, dismal, swampy ground stretched out as far as the eye can reach, covered with a frowning sky; thousands of crows, with their dreary croak, one or two dilapidated mules, here and there a farm house, reminding us that when the Creator called the world good he forgot Calamus and the Missouri valley, we come to the very-much misnamed place called Loveland, the paradise of the night owl, bats, ghosts, hobgoblins, with a population of one long, lantern-jawed Missourian, one very poor cow, and a mule that dropped from Noah's ark. Towering high bluffs loom up on our side as we fly past those small mountains, the same scene for a few miles, and the sun bursts out showing us in the distance Council Bluffs and Omaha. Very soon we glide into the depot, having had a good run and great civility from all the boys, a thing "Us Britons loudly chants, so do our——"

A large, spacious frame building, "Emigrant Depot," posted on it—"Beware of pickpockets," posted on all sides—streams of folks—perfect multitude of old men and young boys, kids of every conceivable nationality and tongue—a struggling mass of humanity mostly bound for the great "Mecca," or Carbonate Camp—all stream into the great human corral until it is fairly packed. An official in "Uncle Sam's navy" mounts a rostrum, and in a deep voice calls attention to the fact that all bound for California, 'Frisco and the seaboard will start at 5:25 p. m. Some emigrant cars, a few degrees higher than cattle cars, with no cushions, liable to be switched off on any side-track, and occupying eleven to twelve days, all especially for their comfort; and all for Colorado or Cheyenne by express at 11:25 a. m., not through any charity on the part of the company, but to vie with the competition of other roads.

Having recovered from the shock, and a loving heart toward the company, which, of course, they will acknowledge for sending me by express, let us take a look inside the human corral. A long counter piled with food, clothing, "Colorado" preacher's pistols, beer, wine, corn juice from the noted Forty-Rod to bogus champagne, and sold at ruinous prices to emigrants. The land department forms a queer feature. Long rows of bottles filled with all kinds of cereals, ticketed with fabulous yields, ears of corn that never saw Nebraska, glowing advantages set forth to show how the company study the interests of the public and the great injustice done to that State by not purchasing. Having secured our provisions—for woe be to the poverty-stricken purse that trusts to Western liberality; it is one system of filching and blackmailing all the way to the end of the road—punctually to the minute the train comes in, and now we commence our Western journey proper, crossing the river, the wind blowing half a gale, as the great iron girders crack, bringing to mind unpleasant recollections of the Tay bridge disaster, over the deep blue sea; but, as fortune favors the just, we land safely in Omaha, and take a look at the city. Many fine residences studded it; the plain, spacious Court House, plenty of mud, no fine streets, and not much life, compose Omaha. All aboard, and once again we start for Mecca; many little houses called hotels, and farm houses, good barns, and a general look of prosperity; splendid land—gentle rolling land—seems to be in order for a few miles; plowing in some fields, and actually some picking corn—I naturally supposed them seventy-day farmers. Toward evening, however, the scene changes; small huts or hovels change the outlook; barren plains like waves of the ocean, flat, sandy marshes, not a sign of cultivation; lonely desert, boundless seas of the same wretched land; once in a while we come in sight of a small hovel by the track side, the home of some Fenian track boss, for hundreds of miles nothing but the same thing, until the sun, as if disgusted, sinks down below the horizon, only the messenger of welcome night, that comes to our relief, as lamps are lighted, supper taken, and then cards, smoking, reading and joking, until bed is again tow, and nasal duets resound to the beat of the salamander. Having slept good, we are astir—in fact, waiting—for the day to break, which comes at last. Herds of cattle, like black spots on the ocean, and bands of antelope, scamper away from the track; still the same barren ocean of sand, until soon, we feel the climate decidedly cooler; the land getting more rugged; dog town, or prairie dog, in great numbers all the morning, a few soldiery, [illegible] taken in as we draw nearer to Cheyenne. Soon we see the great snow sheds, one and a half miles through, and away to the west we get the first glimpse of the Rocky mountains. A whistle, a plunge, all is dark, as the train crashes into the great snow shed, making noise enough to put one in fear of tearing down the great girders. On emerging from the snow shed we find about one and a half feet of snow on hand and a great change in temperature; trains coming in with icicles one and a half feet long hanging from their sides. Twenty minutes for dinner; so we look to the town; a pretty site; some noble buildings; fine [illegible] lay in piles around the stores; lots of Chinese; warehouses, hotels, restaurants; in fact, a very promising town. Change for Colorado Central for Denver, narrow gauge, and one of the little mountain engines backs proudly down and puffs away with us; scudding along the edge of precipices, and darting around curves, we come to the outskirts of the mountains; they seem to be in lofty grandeur, towering up to the sky. Clouds of snow, like clouds of smoke, come whirling down their sides, and sweep across the plain; they seem so near you could throw to them, but are actually ten miles off. Night is coming again, and soon we come round to Denver, the "Queen City of the West" beyond doubt. No city I ever saw can compare with it; 10,000 feet above the sea level, laid out in squares, street cars, splendid hotels and stores, that would do credit to London or Paris; it is far ahead of any town in Iowa, and trade is on the boom. Theaters, faro, gambling halls, and dives of every description, with mountains looming up on all sides; the snow one and one-half feet, and blowing hard, makes one button close his coat and seek the store.

At 7:30 a. m., for Leadville, 150 miles through the mountains—two engines, narrow gauge—we board the cars and away once more. Soon we get into the great canyons, nothing but eternal snow, and the engines puff as though they would burst; ugly curves, snow-sheds; now look down the side; a dizzy sensation seems to crawl over you and you half promise not to do it again; two roaring fires fail to keep one warm. Whispering consultations say we will be snow-bound, and true, too, for soon we plunge into a deep drift and come to a standstill, being next the engine I crawl out and get on the engine, give the boys a cigar and get a good warm. Help is telegraphed for, and after five hours we are at liberty to go on again, and about 5 p. m. we reach Western Junction, the end of the road. Teams and large tents, wooden shanties, thousands of bales of hay, sacks of oats, piles of lead, hundreds of teamsters; dead horses, mules, and oxen lay around by the score; and stopping for the night at one of the "hotels" is the finish of the day. Up with the morning, we prepared for a trip across the mountains on the stage-coach; lovely day, the sun sparkles on the mountains; they shine like burnished silver; away we go; eight horses; we begin the ascent, and finally reach the summit at 12 m. Here we cross in sleds; it blows and freezes fearfully, with blinding snow; we descend the great heights to the valleys. Certainly 1,000 dead animals line the track; soon it gets warmer, and mounting to the box we soon come in sight of the great "Mecca" reposing in the sun; we soon come to the mines and smelting works, and into Chestnut street, where crowds of people line the street, a perfect Babylon, surging to and fro, away up to the Grand Hotel, where we stay for the present.

THE State House Commissioners appointed Adolph Scherer Supervising Architect, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Edwin May. Mr. Scherer was May's draughtsman, and is very familiar with the plans and work.

THIEVES broke open a loaded freight car of country produce, at Columbus, a few nights since, and, after carrying off a large amount of the eggs and butter, got into other tubs of butter and eggs with their feet and destroyed them.

THE dry-house belonging to the stave factory of George H. Marsh was consumed by fire at Shoals, last week, together with twelve cars of heading. The fire arose from the carelessness of the fireman, and was under such headway before found out that it could not be extinguished. Loss about $15,000; small insurance.

AT a writing school in Butlerville, Jennings county, a few evenings since, two boys, aged each about 18, the sons of Elijah Davis and Stephen Voyles, got into a quarrel, which resulted in Voyles cutting Davis across the abdomen with a knife, causing the bowels to protrude. It is thought Davis cannot recover.

A CARPENTER at Madison has a piece of timber in the fibres of which is firmly imbedded a ten-penny nail taken from the heart of an immense oak. The growth of the wood around the nail is fully eighteen inches, showing that it must have been driven into the tree many years "before the flood" in Crooked creek.

JESSIE BEASLEY, residing near Bryantsville, Lawrence county, was called out of the house of his father-in-law, William Fulton, and mortally shot through the loins. His brother John is suspected of the crime. The cause is said to be a family feud and a lawsuit between the brothers over the settlement of their father's estate.

AS THE steamer Gen. Lytle was leaving the Carrollton wharf-boat, one of the crew, who had been talking to a friend on shore, attempted to get aboard of his boat, and, missing his footing, dropped into the river. He drowned before assistance could reach him. He lived in Cincinnati, and leaves a small family. The Carrollton wharf seems singularly fatal to those who miss their footing. A large number of persons have drowned there.

ON the 29th day of July, 1879, the starch and glucose manufactory of J. H. & J. A. Cunningham, located at Vincennes, was destroyed by fire. The Cunninghams have brought suit in the Circuit Court against the E. and T. H. Railroad Company, charging said company with setting fire to their establishment with sparks from a passing locomotive on their road. Damage claimed, $200,000. This is the largest suit ever brought in Knox county.

Physicians' Fees Regulated by Law.

The fees which physicians may charge in Prussia for their services are regulated by law, and, according to the most recent ordinance, the charge for the first visit to a sick person is fixed at 2 marks (25 cents standing for a mark), and 1 mark for each subsequent visit; where, however, several persons belonging to the same family and dwelling in the same house have to be treated at the same time, then, for the second and each succeeding person, only the half of those fees, respectively, is to be charged—the same rule is to apply to boarding schools and similar institutions; also to prisons. When there is a consultation of several physicians about the treatment of a sick person, including their personal visits, each physician is to receive for the first consultation 5 marks, and 3 marks for each subsequent similar consultation. On the occasion of the first visit to the physician's residence for his medical advice, 1½ marks. For the administration of chloroform, etc., when necessary for the treatment of the patient, 3 marks.

Last Words of Great People.

[London Globe.]

Queen Elizabeth at the end of a most prosperous reign, begun amid danger and many difficulties that were overcome by bold measures and prudent councils, died exclaiming: "All my possessions for a moment of time." George IV. met his death with almost a jest upon his lips. Turning to Sir Waltren Waller, on whose arm he leaned, he said, "Watty, what is this? It is death, my boy, and they have deceived us." The Danish sovereign, Frederick V., greatly beloved by his subjects, cried, "There is not a drop of blood on my hands," as he passed away. Henry VIII, who had altered the whole course of monastic life in England, exclaims, "Monks! monks! monks!" Edward VI., the wan boy king, with his fast fading eyes commended his soul to God, "Lord take my spirit;" and Cromwell, as he listened to the discourse of those about him, said, "Then I am safe," and was silent forever.

The last words of Charles I. on the scaffold to Archbishop Juxon was "Remember," referring to his desire that his son Charles should forgive his father's murderers. Ann Boleyne, in the same terrible situation, clasped her fair neck, saying, "It is small, very small;" and Sir Thomas More, as he yielded himself to the executioner, said, with sorry wit, "For my coming down let me shift for myself." Joan of Arc at the stake ended her eventful, stormy life with our Savior's name upon her lips, as brave as General Wolf, who, dying in the midst of victory on the battlefield, and hearing of the enemy's retreat, cried, "What, do they run already? Then I die happy;" or Sir Philip Sidney, after he had relinquished the draught of water to a humbler comrade, though parched with thirst, turned him round to die, saying, "Let me behold the end of this world with all its vanities."

Mirabeau desired to die while delicious strains of music floated on the air, but his last utterance was a demand for laudanum to drown pain and consciousness. Mozart's last words were: "Let me here once more those notes so long my solace and delight;" but Haydn, forgetful of his art, cried, "God preserve my emperor." Alfierie's sympathetic nature displayed itself in the words, "Clasp my hand dear friend I die," Goethe cries, "Light, more light;" Tassa, "In tuos manus, Domine." Byron, "Come, come, no weakness let's be a man to the last; I must sleep now." And those who saw his embalmed body in 1824, when brought to England from Missolonghi, in the Florida, and removed to Sir Edward Knatchbull's house on Great George street, where the coffin, was opened, discribe the face as of marble whiteness, the expression that of stern quietude, lying wrapped in his blue cloth cloak, the throat and head uncovered; crisp, curling locks, slightfully streaked with gray, clustering beauty. Boileau congratulated himself, as he closed his eyes upon this world, on the purity of his words, saying, "It is a great consolation to a poet, about to die, that he has never written anything injurious to virtue." And Sir Walter Scott, little thinking his end so near, said: "I feel as if I were myself again."

Dr. Johnson, the rough, kind heart, who loved a good hater, died as he said to Miss Morris, "God bless you, my dear." Washington, dying at Mount Vernon, cried, "It is well." Franklin's last words were: "A dying man can do nothing easily." Madame de Stael, whose sorest trial was her enforced absence from her native land, died saying, "I have loved my God, my father, and my liberty."

Hannah Moore's last words were, "Patty—joy;" Grotius, "Be serious;" Haller, "The artery ceases to beat;" Adams, "Independence forever;" Jefferson, "I resign my soul to God, my daughter to my country;" Locke, to Lady Masham, who reading the Psalms, "Cease now;" and poor Lamb, after the most self-sacrifising existence, wrote his last words to a friend, "My bedfellows are cramp and cough; we three sleep in one bed."

Bishop Broughton's last words were, "Let the earth be filled with His glory;" Archbishop Sharpe, "I shall be happy;" Bishop Ken, "God's will be done:" Farrar, Cranmer, Hooper and George Herbert; "Lord receive my spirit," and these are but few of many such utterances. The prince consort confirmed the impression that prevales that the dying have sometimes a foretaste of coming happiness. "I have such sweet thoughts," were the last words of a most noble life.

WHY NOT GET WELL?

More Testimony for Hall's Great Catarrh Cure.

The following explains itself:

Toledo, O., Jan. 28, 1880.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Sirs: Through the advice of friends I was induced to try Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. I have been a sufferer from that disease for twenty years past. My case was pronounced incurable and I was obliged to give up my profession. I have used twelve bottles of Hall's Catarrh Cure and am entirely cured. Physicians called it consumption. I was reduced in weight to 125 pounds; am now as sound as ever and back to my old weight, 160 pounds. Hoping this will reach the eye of my professional friends and the public in general, I am respectfully yours.

"Eighty miles in Indiana caverns," is the title of an illustrated paper, in the April Scribner, on Sibert's and Wyandotte caves, in Crawford county. The writer, Mr. H. C. Hovey, has thoroughly explored these interesting ways.

The Detroit Free Press says: "The method of teaching reading by employing newspapers and magazines to some extent in place of books, have been adopted with good success in several places, more particularly in the east. A teacher in one of the Detroit schools interested her scholars in a high degree by reading to them the history of Peter the Great, as given in the February and March numbers of Scribner's Magazine." The superintendent of public schools in Portland, Me., has recently subscribed for a number of copies of St. Nicholas for use as a reader in the schools of Portland.

Among the departments in which America takes high rank is the printing of wood-cuts—a subject which Mr. Theodore L. De Vinne, the printer of Scribner's Monthly, is to treat in the forthcoming (April) number of that magazine. This paper deals with early methods of wood-cut printing on the hand-press, and is to be followed by another on machine-printing, the success of which dates only from 1850. Mr. De Vinne is the author of a "history of printing," and, as his work on Scribner abuntly shows, is a practical printer. In the second paper, special attention will be given to the little-understood process of "overlaying," and the relations of printer to draughtsman and engraver will be suggestively discussed. These papers will be of especial interest to printers and editors.

"Kite-Cutting," as it is called, is managed in China by gluing powdered glass upon the strings and sawing these across each other until one of them is cut through. But this is clumsy compared with the Mexican and Cuban methods. In these, either a fine splinter from a glass bottle, or a piece of watch-spring, ground to a razor-edge, is deftly attached to the tail of the kite, which then must be flown in such a way as to draw the cutters across the adversary's string. Kite-battles, with appliances of this kind, call out much skill, and are exciting without being dangerous. They may yet become a feature of boy-life in this country, for it is announced that an illustrated discriptive article upon kite-cutting is to be given in the forthcoming April number of St. Nicholas.

"WAITING FOR MOTHER."

BY MARY D. BRINE.

The old man sits in his easy chair
Slumbering the moments away,
Dreaming a dream that is all his own,
On this gladsome, peaceful day.
His children have gathered from far and near,
His children's children besides—
And merry voices are echoing through
The "Homestead's halls" so wide.

But far away, in the years long flown,
Grandfather lives again;
And his heart forgets that it ever knew
A shadow of grief and pain;
For he sees his wife as he saw her then—
A matron comely and fair,
With her children gathered around his board
And never a vacant chair.

Oh! happy this dream of the "Auld Land Syne,"
Of the years long slipped away!
And the old man's lips have gathered a smile
And his heart grows young and gay.
But a kiss falls gently upon his brow,
From his daughter's lips so true;
'Dinner is ready; and, father, dear,
We are only waiting for you!"

The old man wakes at his daughter's call,
And he looks at the table near—
"There's one of us missing, my child," he says,
"We will wait till mother is here."
There are tears in the eyes of his children, then,
As they gaze on an empty chair;
For many a lonely year has passed
Since "mother" sat with them there.

But the old man pleads still wistfully;
"We must wait for mother, you know!"
And they let him rest in his old arm-chair
Till the sun at last sinks low.
Then, leaving a smile for the children here,
He turns from the earth away,
And has gone to "mother," beyond the skies,
With the close of the quiet day.

Death at the Bridal Altar.

[Nashville American.]

In the midst of the great events of the war such incidents as the following were comparatively unnoticed, and left to be long afterward related in print. Miss Annie Pickens, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, was to be married April 22, 1863, in Charleston, to Lieut. Andrew DeRochelle. The wedding party was assembled in the Pickens residence, and the clergyman was asking the bride if she was ready, when a shell from a Union gun in the harbor broke into the room and bursted. Nine persons were hurt, but only Miss Pickens' wound proved fatal. She bore the pain with wonderful fortitude, and was unmoved when informed that she had only an hour or two to live. DeRochelle said that he would like to have her die his wife, and the poor girl smiled sadly in assent. The guests remember the scene as far more pitiful than they can describe. The bride lay on a sofa, her white dress dabbled in blood and her hair disheveled, while her pallid face was so wrung with agony that her efforts to smile became futile. The ceremony was hurriedly performed, though the bride's "Yes" was in a faint, labored whisper, and her lips hardly moved in response to her husband's kiss. She died immediately afterward.

Sensible Talk.

It is a misfortune to be poor, but not a crime— unless one keeps up appearances at the expense of others, contracting debts he cannot pay, borrowing money he cannot return, etc. This trying to seem what we are not has become the bane of society, and, like what is called mimicry amongst insects, produces a nondescript race very difficult to define or assign to its proper place in the order to which it evidently belongs. Of course, we are not advocating the exposure of a man's business affairs to everybody with whom he comes into business or friendly relations, but we do hold that he has no right to pretend to be better off in worldly goods than he is in fact; for to do so is a deception which is but another name for dishonesty. By strict economy, and the adoption of a manner of living suitable to our means, the pressure of poverty may be removed in time. To be sure it is hard to deny one's self the luxuries of life, and resolutely turn from all expensive pleasures. But it must be done if wealth is to be gained. There is a pleasure in self-denial that a majority of our people never experienced, and it comes in most gloriously, and is extremely satisfactory to the one practicing it, when he can say, "I owe no man anything," and at the same time has $100 in his pocket but wanting some articles costing $200, he refuses to purchase until through self-denial, the other $100 is obtained. It requires some courage to adopt such a system of living and dealing, but it has this as a recommendation—it is perfectly safe and honorable, and deceives no one.

A Knowing Bird.

On the edge of a slate quarry a thrush had made her nest. It was so close to danger that when the rock was blasted a piece of the falling slate came almost into the nest. At the ringing of the bell the bird saw the men run. She left her nest, too, and after the explosion she returned. This the thrush continued to do whenever a blast was fired. The men rang the bell to hoax the bird, but she only peeped over the nest, and, as the men did not run, settled down again.

An Extravagant Wife.

[Galveston (Tex.) News.]

He smacked his lips, sat down the glass, ran his hand into his pants pocket for his pocket-book, when a frozen look of consolidated horror crawled over his face. "Great Cæsar! my money is gone," he exclaimed; "left it at home in my other pants—two whole dollars. If my wife lays hands on it she will squander it for clothes for the children, or some other frivolity," and with beads or prespiration on his brow as big as hickory nuts, he broke for home like a quarter-horse.

How to Milk.

[American Agriculturist.]

A cow that is milked three times a day will give more milk and yield more cream than one that is milked at intervals of 12 hours. When the udder is filled a process of absorption goes on and part of the milk secreted is thus lost. It will pay to take the milk from copious milkers at intervals of eight hours as near as possible. A cow that is milked at 5 o'clock in the morning, 1 in the afternoon and 9 at night will yield from 10 to 20 per cent. more milk and more cream than if milked twice a day.

A Calamity Indeed.

[Poughkeepsie Press.]

At the Eastman skating park a belle, who is renownd for her charming figure, her elegance of dress and her skill upon skates, was performing the most graceful feats at her command, when she suddenly stumbled and fell. Before assistance arrived, however, she regained her feet, but unfortunately the point of her skate had torn her stocking, though of the fact she was unaware. As she sped along again, however her course was marked by a steady stream of sawdust from the shapely limb to which the wounded stocking belonged. She hastily took off her skates, and has not been on the ice since.

The Bravest Man.

[Sacramento Bee.]

Last Sunday morning ten or thirteen men were in a Roseville saloon talking about brave men. The question arose as to who was the bravest man in town, when J. Berry, a painter, stepped forward and took that honor to himself. J. Blain, to test his bravery, asked him to step out in the street about forty feet and let him shoot at his hat, it being on his head at the same time. No quicker said than done. Berry stepped out forty feet, and Blain, with an old Colt's revolver, fired, making a hole through his hat about one inch from his head. The crowd had no more to say about bravery. They changed the subject.

Another Back-Cap for Tilden.

Mr. E. A. J. McHenry, of Mississippi, was at the capitol to-day. He is just from that state, and he says the democrats there are bitterly opposed to Tilden; that many of the most prominent and active members of the party openly declare they will not vote for Tilden if he is nominated. "The Mississippi legislature was polled on the presidential question," says Mr. McHenry, "the other day out of between one hundred and fifty and two hundred democratic members, five voted for Tilden. Seymour led, with Bayard second and Handcock third." Mr. McHenry says that Seymour is the choice of the Mississippi democrats, but they will not accept Tilden.

Close of School.

March 20th was the last day of school at No. 4 Concord township, and below will be found the reports.

Number of pupils enrolled, 25; number not tardy during the term, 15; per cent. of attendance, 97. Names of pupils who were not tardy during the closing month of school are as follows:

Dems Draggoo, Dell Draggoo,
Willie Draggoo, Frank Hay,
Stella Hay, Josie Smith,
Ida Koch, Della Koch,
Charley Koch, Chas. Ober,
Dow Ober, Ernest Jenkins,
Aletha Jenkins, Eva Hay,
Clyde Hay, Orris Griner,
Eva Evans.

There were over 100 persons present at the closing exercises who apparently enjoyed themselves. The grandest affair was the picnic, which could not be discribed without exhausting all adjections of description in the superlative degree; so I forbear. W. B. B.

The Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

To Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce street, New York, the press and the public are indebted for most of the statistics of American newspapers. When this firm commenced business in 1865, there was not accessible to the public, anything which approximated a complete newspaper list. It was the custom of the advertising agencies to keep their secrets, believing that they thereby made it necessary for advertisers to consult them. In 1869, Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. issued the first American newspaper directory. In the preface of that work occurred this paragraph:

"We have always believed, and labored in the belief, that, as advertising agents, it was and should be in our power to be of material service to both advertiser and publisher, and we know no better way to convince them of the value of our services than by issuing this book, thus enabling them to communicate without our aid; this we do in the belief that we shall thereby the sooner persuade them of the utility of employing and encouraging our agency."

The result showed the position to be well taken. Within twelve months their firm was in receipt of a patronage larger than had ever before been accorded to an advertising agency.

It is a fact [illegible] upon, that there is no other business interest of the country, the statistics of which are so thoroughly set forth and made public, as that of the newspapers; and for this the American Newspaper Directory has the entire credit.

In 1876, at the World's Fair at Philadelphia, Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. erected a building in which were received, filed and exhibited, late copies of every American periodical publication; numbering at that time 8,129. Of this enterprise the London Times correspondent, in the opening paragraph of his letter of July 10 of that year, writes as follows:

"I have frequently had occasion to notice the big way in which the Americans do things, and I do not know that it would be easy to find an apter illustration of it than that furnished by the newspaper building in the exhibition grounds."

Messrs. George P. Rowell & Co. point with satisfaction to the two years in which they incurred the greatest expense for extending to the public broad sources of information concerning the business in which they are engaged (1869, 1876,) as the two in which, notwithstanding the extraordinary outlay, did actually produce for them a net income in excess of any other years of their business career.

One of the strongest holds which this advertising bureau has upon the newspapers, is obtained by their system of making prompt payments for work done. Newspaper men who have commended this feature, when visiting the office in New York, have been invited to the cashier's desk and shown a conspicuous printed notice posted there, which reads:

"ALL BILLS RECEIVED BEFORE 12 O'CLOCK MUST BE EXAMINED AND PAID TO-DAY."

The advertising agent avers to his patron, the advertiser, that he will procure for him the lowest possible rates. His profit comes from a commission from the publisher. To take the advertisement at a reduction from usual rates, and pay the agent for securing it, is not always pleasant for the newspaper men, but the reflection "we shall surely get the money the day we send the bill," has often decided him to accept an offer far below the price he ought to have received. From those newspapers which have one price for everybody, and require everybody to pay that price, it is unnecessary to say that Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. obtain no advantages beyond the established commission, nor do they desire any. What they want, and must have for their patrons, is the lowest price, and when they have that they are satisfied. They are quite well aware that the best papers are, as a general rule, the cheapest.

Nashville Banner: A Banner reporter strolled into city Treasuer Anson Nelson's office to-day, and found that official busily engaged in framing an old check issued by Gen. Andrew Jackson, said to be the last ever signed by him. "It is well known," said Mr. Nelson, "by all who knew Gen. Jackson that he never signed any of his letters or documents 'A. Jackson;' he always signed his name in full. His private secretary once said to him: General, why do you not sign your name simply A. Jackson? Everybody knows you, and besides, it would be a great saving of time,—'No, sir,' said Gen. Jackson; 'a man who has a name ought to spell it out; a man who is too lazy to write his name ought not to have one.'"

SUICIDE OF A BRIDE.

A Young Lady Eighteen Years of Age, and Married Only Five Months, Shoots Herself.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 28.—A very remarkable tragedy took place this afternoon on Second avenue, between Ross and Grant streets. In the boarding house of Mrs. Spellman, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Sneathen have been living for some time. Mr. Sneathen is a son of Captain J. B. Sneathen, of the firm of Sneathen & Wilson, and his wife was Miss Mary Agnes Irvin, of East End. To day at noon one of the ladies who lives in the house was coming out of the dining room when the front door of the house opened and Mr. Sneathen came in. Just then a shot was heard in Sneathen's room, which is on the [illegible] hand of the hall. Sneathen asked what the noise was, and the lady said she thought it was the firecracking. Sneathen then went into his room and the ladies went into the sitting room which adjoins it. In a second or two Sneathen called out, "My God, come here. Look at this." On entering the bedroom Mrs. Sneathen was found lying on her bed as though asleep, and the lady said so.

"No, no," cried Sneathen. "She has shot herself. She is dead."

A bullet hole was found in her left temple, from which the blood and [illegible]ing. Dr. Arthurs was sent for, and on examining the wound said she could not live three hours. The cause of the sad occurrence is not known. The people at the boarding house say the couple lived happily together, but it is rumored otherwise outside. It is reported that Mrs. Sneathen quarreled with her mother, also with her husband, but this, too, is said to be untrue. The police seem to think that there is too much mystery about the affair to be passed off with casual examination, and Mr. Sneathen was placed under the surveillance of Detective Coyle. Mrs. Sneathen was 18 years old. She was a noted beauty before her marriage, which took place only about five months ago. Her husband is about 20. He attempted to shoot himself after he found his wife was fatally injured.

The National Militia Bill.

The new bill to organize a "national militia provides for the enrollment, under state and territorial laws, of all able bodied citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, to be divided into active and inactive militia, the term of the enlistment of the former to be three years, the number not to exceed 750 in each congressional district, and the regulations to be those of the regular army. An annual appropriation of $1,000,000 is to be expended by the chief of ordinance of the army, under the secretary of war, according to the congressional districts, and all arms, ammunition, etc., issued are to remain the property of the United States. All militia organizations are to go into camp five days each year, and each man is to receive $1 a day for his services from the United States. Officers of the regular army are to make the inspections; rifle rangers are to be established; prizes given for competition in rifle practice, etc. The bill provides too much federal control, and for that reason we do not believe it will go through.

Mother.

Children, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, notice the feelings of even a single touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand! Make much of it while you have that most precious of all good gifts, a loving mother. Read the unfathomable love of those eyes; the deep anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life you may have friends—fond, dear, kind friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you which none but a mother can bestow. Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world, for the sweet, deep security I felt when of an evening, nestling in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender and untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep; never her kiss of peace at night. Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the old church-yard; yet still her voice whispers from the grave, and her eyes watch over me, as I visit spots long since hallowed to the memory of my mother.—Lord Macaulay.

THE NICEST LAND.—"Ma, has sister Flov ever traveled any?" "No, child." "Then when I was a lyin' under the sofy Sunday night, and sister and Mr. John came in from church, and was a-sittin' in the big rockin'-cheer, how came her to say that the nicest land she was ever in was Lapland?"

A Constant Companion.

In my father's poultry-yard was a game-cock, the most beautiful bird of the kind I ever saw. He had several wives, and it was a curious thing to see the different airs and graces of the ladies in his train. He was an inveterate fighter, if he could escape from the yard, which was surrounded by a high wall. By some means, an accident had happened to his foot, and he became lame. My brother, who was a medical student, advised us to poultice it. Mamma undertaking this, Ralph came every morning to have his foot dressed, and though evidently suffering very much, allowed her to attend it. But no improvement came, and the poor bird began to droop.

One day we heard a loud noise; a famous game-cock had come into the yard when the gate was left open, attacked Ralph, and had beaten him severely. He was sorely injured, though he defended himself well. Mamma picked him up and carried him away, but next morning he was out in the yard warming himself in the sun. I was very glad I was there to see what I then saw, or I could not have believed it. Ralph had been beat! He was no longer to be honored by his faithless wives. They came first, one by one, and then all together, looking with all the contempt they could display. One and another pecked at him, and at last the prettiest, and his favorite went straight up to him and gave him a severe dab near his eye.

But there was one faithful friend among them, an awkward, bustling brown hen, with no pretensions to beauty, who flew to his rescue, stood resolutely before the prostrate bird—for he had sunk to the ground as if heartbroken—and sheltered him with her wings. It was useless to leave him in the poultry-yard, so he and his faithful brown hen were placed in the garden, the tool-house being left open for them through the night. Some weeks passed, and Ralph grew weaker, till one morning we found him dead. A grave was dug, and his faithful wife saw him placed in it. She was taken back to the yard; but she never rallied; and a few days afterward we saw her lying cold and lifely on the spot where the friend of her generous heart lay buried.

Important Notice.

The great success attending the introduction of Seidlitine Seidlitz Powders, has necessitated the building of a new factory with more extensive machinery, which is expected to be in full operation by April 1st, 1880. On and after that date, the retail price of Seidlitine Powders will be 5 cents each, or 50 cents per dozen. They are as pleasant to drink as a glass of lemonade. Try one.

THE WEST.

A LARGELY-ATTENDED meeting in the interest of the Illinois and Michigan ship-canal project was held at Ottawa, Ill., March 18. Speeches were made by Gov. Cullom, Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, and others, all of whom dwelt on the practicability of the scheme, and demonstrated the advantages to be derived from uniting the great lakes and the Mississippi river. The sentiment of the convention was almost unanimous that the General Government should undertake the great work, and a committee was appointed to urge upon the Illinois delegation in Congress the propriety of pushing the matter in that body.

Being a stanch vessel, however, she rode safely out of the hurricane, and all went well on board.

IT is stated in a dispatch from Washington that the anti-Tilden men will use every means within their power to prevent the repeal of the two-thirds rule which Tilden has planned to set aside. THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Debate was the order of the day in both houses on Thursday, March 18. In the upper house, after a few committee reports, the Senate proceeded to consider the House bill for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, the question being on the substitute reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. The bill was explained by members of the committee, and, after debate, the Senate went into executive session and soon adjourned....In the House, the morning hour was dispensed with, and that body went immediately into committee of the whole upon the Special Deficiency bill. Debate continued till adjournment, without action.

The Hot Springs bill was taken up in the Senate on the morning of the 19th inst., amended and passed. Mr. McDonald introduced a bill refunding certain duties paid on imported articles by the University of Notre Dame, St. Joseph county, Ind. Mr. Anthony presented the memorial of Susan B. Anthony asking for a removal of her political disabilities. Miss Anthony complains that, while the prayers of men for the removal of disabilities have been granted, such prayers have been denied to women. She asks that her petition receive the same consideration as if her name were Samuel B. Anthony. Mr. Plumb introduced a bill to provide for an allotment of lands in severalty to the United Peoria and Miami tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory. In executive session the nomination of Rev. Thomas Simmons to be Census Supervisor for the Fifth district of Georgia was rejected. The President nominated Charles Adams, of Colorado, Minister to Bolivia and the following to be United States Consuls: Bret Harte, of California, at Glasgow; George L. Catlin, of New Jersey, at Stuttgardt; P. Lange, of Iowa, at La Rochelle; W. P. Mangum, of North Carolina, at Tien Tsin; Alex. C. Jones, of West Virginia, at Nagasaki; Harry A. Conant, of Michigan, at Naples; William L. Scruggs, of Georgia, at Canton; Victor Thompson, of Mississippi, at St. Thomas; Henry C. Marston, of Illinois, at Malaga; John A. Halderman, of Kansas, at Bangkok; also, Henry C. Snowden, to be Supervisor of the Census for the Second district of Pennsylvania. Adjourned to Monday....In the House, the morning hour was dispensed with, private business laid aside, and the House went into committee of the whole (Carlisle in the chair) on the Special Deficiency bill. Political discussion was resumed upon the measure, many amendments being offered, but the bill was finally passed. The proposition which was finally adopted was this: That the appropriation for the payment of Marshals and Deputies should be made, and the validity of the Election laws recognized, with this addition: "Provided, that hereafter special Deputy Marshals of election for performing duty in respect to any election shall receive $5 a day in full compensation, and that all appointments of such special Deputies shall be made by the Judges of the United States Courts in the circuit or districts in which such Marshals are to perform their duties, the Deputies to be taken in equal numbers from the different political parties." A bill appropriating $100,000 as a deficiency to the public printing was passed. A resolution in regard to the abrogation of the Chinese treaty was offered.

The Senate was not in session on the 20th inst., and the House held a meeting for debate on the Funding bill. Judge Kelley opposed the bill, because he thought the debt could be wiped out soon, one-fourth of it having been paid off in the last fifteen years. He attributed the revival of prosperity to the facts that silver had been remonetized, and the cancellation of greenbacks had been stopped. Mr. Frye eulogized the Republican party for reducing the interest. Mr. Felton spoke in favor of a substitute of his, which provided for the monthly coinage of 4,000,000 silver dollars, and for the application of the coin reserve in the treasury, in excess of 25 per cent. of the outstanding greenbacks, to the purchase of bonds for cancellation. Mr. Orth favored the bill because a reduction in the interest charges would enable the Government to indulge in internal improvements, such as the improvement of the Wabash river and its connection with Lake Erie by canal. Mr. Dunnell took occasion to compliment Secretary Sherman.

On the opening of the Senate on Monday, March 22, Mr. Davis presented a petition of 850 butter-makers of Illinois praying legislation to protect the public against the sale of oleomargarine as butter. Mr. Allison presented a petition of the merchants and manufacturers of Davenport, Iowa, for the passage of a Bankrupt law. Several petitions were presented and referred asking the removal of the duty on materials used in making paper. A number of committee reports were made, and the following bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Kirkwood, to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to test the practicability of manufacturing sugar on a large scale from sorghum and sugar-cane; also, establishing the Territory of Pembina and providing a temporary government therefor. The House bill appropriating $100,000 to continue the public printing, provided that the entire sum appropriated for printing for the year shall not exceed $400,000, was passed. Mr. Hill presented a majority report from the Elections Committee, recommending the unseating of Kellogg and putting in Spofford; and Mr. Hoar read the minority report on the same subject, sustaining Kellogg. The President nominated George W. Lee to be Agent for the Indians of the Mackinac Agency, Michigan....A large number of bills and resolutions were presented in the House under the call of States, among them the following: By Mr. Claflin, the Boston bill for a new Bankrupt law; by Messrs. Ellis, Young and Bayne, sets of resolutions upon the Panama canal; by Mr. Phelps, providing for the free passage of Irish immigrants on the return voyage of the ship Constellation; also, for the appointment of a commission to revise the laws relating to the customs laws and internal revenue in the United States; by Mr. Price, amending the National-Bank act in regard to the distribution of currency; by Mr. Gibson, to reduce the tax on distilled spirits 50 cents on every proof gallon; also, to abolish the tax on tobacco; also, to abolish the tax on bank checks, bank deposits, and matches; by Mr. King, relative to the prevention of floods in the Lower Mississippi valley; a number of bills affecting the tariff on different articles; by Mr. Atherton, reducing the salary of the President to $25,000; by Mr. Scales, providing that mineral lands of the United States shall be sold at their full value, and that all the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the payment of the public debt. The Senate bill authorizing the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend the international sheep and wool show in Philadelphia in September, 1880, was passed. Mr. Singleton (Miss.), from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, and it was considered in committee of the whole, Mr. Converse in the chair.

In the Senate, on the morning of the 23d of March, the bill incorporating the National Educational Association was discussed. Messrs. Cockrell, Hereford, and Ingalls opposed the measure as outside the jurisdiction of Congress. Messrs. Bailey and Hoar favored it as constitutional, and in the interest of national education. Mr. Allison, by request, introduced a bill appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in Dakota Territory. The morning hour expired, and the Geneva Award bill was taken up. Mr. Garland addressed the Senate, and made a legal argument in support of the bill of the committee, which provides for the payment of underwriters' losses. Mr. Dawes spoke briefly against the bill....In the House, the entire day was passed in a discussion in regard to the reference of a bill to repeal a section of the Tariff law to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, instead of to the Ways and Means Committee. The bill was introduced by Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, on the day before, and it was attempted to correct the journal and send the bill to the latter committee. The discussion descended almost to a personal controversy between Messrs. Garfield and Townshend, the former charging the latter with deception in the title of the bill. The controversy closed by the following sharp language: Mr. Townshend—One word further, Mr. Speaker. I want to know again from the gentleman from Ohio whether he, by his language here this afternoon, accused me of a willful desire to deceive this House. Mr. Garfield—The English language is tolerably plain and my voice is tolerably good, and I think everybody understands my action on this subject. Mr. Townshend—I want the gentleman to understand that he cannot, under cover of moonshine, get rid of his responsibility. I want him to understand that I am his peer here, and I here, before this House, say to him that, if he insinuates that I deceive the House, he is guilty of willful, deliberate falsehood. Mr. Garfield—After that indecent exposure of his person and of his mind, I have nothing whatever to say to the gentleman. The question of the correction of the journal was not decided at 8 o'clock, when the House adjourned.

A resolution for an Assistant Librarian for the Senate, at a salary of $1,440, passed that body March 24 after a short discussion. The bill incorporating the National Educational Association was taken up and opposed by Mr. Carpenter as unconstitutional. The morning hour expiring, the Geneva Award bill was considered, and Mr. Kernan made a set speech in favor of the bill. Mr. Carpenter introduced a resolution calling for information upon our treaty relations with Spain. The President nominated A. Newton Pettis, of Pennsylvania, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of New Mexico; President Angell of Michigan University, as Minister to China, and Messrs. Swift, of California, and William H. Trescott, of South Carolina, as Commissioners....The House spent the day, and until after midnight, in fruitless wrangling over the reference of Townshend's bill affecting the tariff. No conclusion was reached, and the time was mostly occupied in the evening trying to adjourn and presenting absentees at the bar of the House.

A LINCOLN ANECDOTE.

How Old Abe Got Rid of a Consummate Bore.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

One day, not long after Mr. Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation, Mr. Wade came in, laughing all over his face, and said:

"Well, Old Abe has just done the queerest thing you ever heard of. He has given out he has the small-pox to keep the politicians and office-seekers away from the White House."

The story ran thus: Mr. Wade went to the White House to see Lincoln, who had been ill. He found the President a little pale, but jolly as he could be.

"Sit down, Wade; I am glad to see you. Oh, I have the funniest thing to tell you; it will make you laugh. I never did such a thing before in my life, and never will again." Then the President laughed until the tears ran down his cheeks.

"Now, Wade," he said, "you are not to repeat this outside, for it would give offense, and it by no manner of means comports with the dignity which is supposed to hedge a President about. The doctor put me up to it to rid myself of a bore; I ought not to have done it, but I couldn't help it, it was so funny. You know I have been ill, and a great many people have wondered what ailed me, but none of them could find out. The truth is, I was worried to death and talked sick pretty much by one man the most everlasting bore you ever saw who wanted an office. I knew he would come again as soon as I able to sit up, and the doctor put me up to get rid of him by saying I had the small-pox. I only got out yesterday, and sure enough this morning he called on me. I had determined to be polite to him, but he stayed so long the humor seized me and I sent for the doctor. Giving him the wink, I held out my hand, and inquired:

"'Doctor, what marks are those on my hand?'

"'That's varioloid, or mild small-pox,' said the doctor.

"'Well,' said I, 'it's all over me. It's contagious, is it not, doctor?'

"'Very contagious indeed,' he replied, 'and you should see no one.'

"My visitor, who had been getting more and more nervous every moment, now could stand it no longer, and, rising, said:

"'Well, Mr. Lincoln, I can't stop any longer. I just called to see how you were,' and then he started to hurry out.

"'Stop a minute; I want to talk to you,' said I, 'about that office.'

"'Excuse me, Mr. President, you are not well this morning and I won't bother you,' said he, shoving toward the door.

"'Never mind,' said I; 'don't be in a hurry. It's all right, and if you are going to get the varioloid you will get it now anyhow; so you might as well sit down.'

"'Thank you, sir, but I'll call again,' he replied, fairly turning livid, and executing a masterly retreat from the fearful contagion with which he supposed me to be afflicted.

"'Now,' said Uncle Abe, 'it will be all over the city in an hour that I have the small-pox, and you can contradict the story, but I want you to promise you won't repeat what I have just told you.'"

Wade laughed until he was weak, and when he could get his breath sufficiently to speak he looked at the clock as was his custom and said:

"Now for a little business and then I will go."

"Don't go," cried Uncle Abe, and laying his head in his hands on the desk in front of him he laughed until he shook all over. Presently raising up his face from between his hands he wiped his eyes and blew his nose until the report sounded like the winding of a horn. After another fit of laughing he said:

"Wade, you should have seen him, and how scared he was. I'll bet that fellow never comes back here while I'm President."

As might have been expected, hardly had Mr. Wade quitted the White House when he heard the President had the small-pox, and was very sick. Wade promptly contradicted the story, but that night it was telegraphed all over the country, and many people will yet remember the story of Mr. Lincoln's having the varioloid during the war.

Commenting on the report, Uncle Abe said to Wade: "Some people said they could not take my proclamation very well, but when I get the small-pox, Wade, I shall then be happy to say I have something everybody can take."

A Rich Man on Riches.

The following story is told of Jacob Ridgway, a wealthy citizen of Philadelphia, who died many years ago, leaving a fortune of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000:

"Mr. Ridgway," said a young man with whom the millionaire was conversing, "you are more to be envied than any gentleman I know."

"Why so?" responded Mr. Ridgway. "I am not aware of any cause for which I should be particularly envied."

"What, sir!" exclaimed the young man in astonishment. "Why, aren't you a millionaire? Think of the thousands your income brings you in every month!"

"Well, what of that?" replied Mr. Ridgway. "All I get out of it is my victuals and clothes; and I can't eat more than one man's allowance, or wear more than one suit at a time. Pray, can't you do that much?"

"Ah, but think of the fine houses you own, and the rentals they bring you!"

"What better am I off for that? I can only live in one house at a time; as for the money I receive for rents, I cannot eat it or wear it; I can only use it to buy other houses for other people to live in; they are the beneficiaries, not I."

"But you can buy splendid furniture and costly pictures, and fine carriages and horses—in fact, anything you desire you can have."

"And after I have bought them," responded Mr. Ridgway, "what then? I can only look at the furniture and pictures, and the poorest man who is not blind can do that. I can ride no easier in a fine carriage than you can in an omnibus for 5 cents, without the trouble of attending to drivers, footmen and hostlers; and, as to anything I desire, I can tell you, young man, that the less we desire in this world the happier we shall be. All my wealth cannot buy me back my youth, cannot purchase exemption from sickness and pain, cannot procure me power to keep afar off the hour of death; and then, what will it avail when, in a few short years at most, I lie down in the grave and leave it all forever? Young man, you have no cause to envy me."

"Peacock Finery."

When "Pitman George" had become "Old George" to his friends, and "Mr. George Stephenson," the great railroad engineer, to the public, he was noted for his plainness in dress.

Though often in contact with Lords and Dukes, he fastened his white necktie with a large brass pin, and wore no ornament—watch-chain, breast-pin or ring.

Mr. Stephenson hated foppery in young men—"peacock finery," he called it—as one youth learned to his sorrow.

He was "Old George's" private secretary, and loved to dress in a showy style, though, when in the old man's presence, he restrained his propensity. But one unlucky day, intending to take a stroll with two "swell" friends, through the fashionable quarter of London, he dressed himself as a dandy.

His costume was patent-leather boots, light-colored trousers, and a tightly-buttoned coat of blue cloth, within which was seen a line of a white vest, with a pink shade under it; white wristbands turned back six inches over the coat-sleeves, a black satin scarf, from which glistened two diamond breast-pins, connected by a delicate gold chain, light gloves, and a shiny silk hat and a small cane.

As he was sauntering through the street, filled with promenaders, who should he meet but "Old George!" The two friends left, but Mr. Stephenson, taking his secretary by the button, turned him round and round, as if showing him off to the passers-by.

A crowd collected. At last, releasing the youth, "Old George" blurted out, in his strongest Northumbrian accent:

"Young man, you have lived five years at my house, but I never knew I was harboring an American jackadaw."

What an "American jackadaw" was the youth knew not, save that it was something indicative of contempt. Of course he was mad, but as his employer never referred to the "sight" he was wise enough to remain silent. It worked, however, a change in his "peacock finery."

Forests and Hygiene.

Forests contribute to the general health by breaking the force of steadily-blowing winds. They mitigate the heat of summer by the vast amount of evaporation that takes place through their leaves by day. By night the corresponding condensation of moisture upon the leaves still further absorbs the heat, on the evaporation of the moisture the next morning.

They also, as is now well known, promote rainfalls. Thus they check the tendency of the earth to too great dryness, which is almost as injurious to health as it is to vegetation; for epidemic diseases are sure to do their fatal work where the soil-water is below the ordinary standard.

Hence, cholera often passes a wooded district, and revels, in fatal power, in a treeless one. There are numerous facts like the following.

A certain road in India leads for sixty miles through a dense forest. Further on, it runs for ninety miles through a barren plain. Hundreds of persons travel the entire road daily. Now, in the first or wooded portion, cases of cholera seldom occur; while in the latter the sick, the dying, and the dead are found lying by the wayside.

In 1859 cholera raged in Allahabad. British soldiers whose barracks were on a hill suffered the most from the epidemic; those in barracks surrounded by four rows of trees much less; but not a single case occurred among the soldiers whose barracks were in a thicket. It was the same next year.

Our Government is wise in promoting the planting of forest trees. Our State Governments should do more. They should take measures to prevent their undue destruction.

Cotton	193,854,641	231,000,000
Tobacco	22,137,427	21,454,548
Hay	285,543,752	335,851,290
Potatoes	73,059,125	78,971,000
	$1,488,270,866	$1,904,480,650

This increase of some $415,000,000 in a single year is a most encouraging result. But there has also been an increase of other values besides those of the crops noted above. The statistician of the department, who is reported to be gathering material upon which to base a careful estimate of the total increase in certain other values during the year just closed, to include the increased value of real estate and mining property, expresses the opinion, based upon material already gathered, that it will not fall below $1,000,000,000.

UNUSUALLY large quantities of baled hay are being exported at New York to Southern ports, Cuba and Great Britain, and an advance in price is predicted.

DENIS KEARNEY.

Text of the Speech for Which He Was Sentenced to the San Francisco House of Correction.

MR. PRESIDENT AND WORKINGMEN: I want to call your attention to a piece which appeared in the morning papers signed "The Council." This is an incendiary document, and I want to know who "The Council" are and what they propose to do. They ask for peace, and who are they? Who is at war? Who is making this turmoil? I never saw the city more peaceful. I'll tell you who the 200 hell-born, hell-bound villains are who are meeting in secret in this city. They are your deadly enemies—these 200 lawless assassins and incendiaries, who are meeting now to decide who shall be hung and who shall escape. There's Claus Spreckels, the biggest — thief who ever went unhung, and, — — him, I am man enough to tell him so to his face. He induced his men to take an oath to club Kearney, but they don't dare do it. I tell you right here that if I hear of any man plotting to kill me, by —, I will kill him, so help me —. A man met me to-day, and, said he, "You must stop this." Said I, "Go to —." I now warn Gen. John F. Miller, who is at the head, and the rest of these 200 Chinese-lovers, that, if I am killed, he and the rest of the 200 shall be singled out for special vengeance. There were 228 who voted in favor of Chinese immigration, and these are the men who belong to this Council. I propose to single them out and publish the list. These thieves had a book circulating to-day, asking signatures of those who were in favor of law and order. They are conspiring to break the peace and kill me, but I expect to have the pleasure of dancing on the graves of those men who would now like to stab me in the back. I hope the reporters will report me as I speak to-night. These incendiaries who want to fight, why don't they come out? If they have 200 or 500, we can find an equal number to go out to the beach and fight them; but no, they want to do their fighting in secret. They want to come out and take the Sand-Lot. If the police and militia would only lay low and give us a chance at them, it would be all right; but none of these 200 Chinese-lovers dare even meet me in debate on the Sand-Lot. No, their work is incendiary, and can only be done in secret; but I want you workingmen to press closer together. Organize, and tell your neighbor to-morrow or next Sunday, when the bell taps or the alarm sounds, that one of your leaders is hung; you may rally round the flag; you may rally and give the thieves —. If they kill me, then the insurrection will commence in earnest. They tell me I must shut up or leave the city. I propose to stay here and follow the same course which I began two years and a half ago. I claim this as a right. The only way they can silence me is to kill me. They may lock me up; but if they keep me from talking they must cut my tongue out. Even then I want them to remember that "The Chinese must go;" the thieving stock-gamblers must go, and the murdering Council after them. They may do what they please with me, but, — — them, I want them to count the consequences which come afterward.

LITTRE and Robin, who were associated in the preparation of a famous Directory of Medicine, were two very absent-minded men. One day, when they were seated side by side at the same table at their work, one, feeling his leg itch, laid down his pen to scratch. Unhappily, in his absent-mindedness, he began scratching his companion's leg. His companion, perceiving that his leg was being scratched, inferred that he was scratching it himself, and laid down his pen so as to be able to devote himself exclusively to the operation.

WILLIAM SMOAK, a patriarchal German of 97, living in Orangeburg county, S. C., has 13 children, 139 grandchildren, 460 great-grandchildren, and 79 of the next generation. Total number of descendants 691, of whom 575 are living. Mr. Smoak's wife died a few years ago, but lived to see her youngest and thirteenth child a grandmother.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED,
LON. J. LOWRY } Editors.

As an indication of Mr. Gladstone's popularity in Scotland, it is reported that as high as $30 were paid for tickets of admission to the hall in Edinburgh where he delivered an address recently.

THE salary of the Rev. Dr. John Hall, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, has been raised from $10,000 to $15,000. The increase is an indication of the esteem in which the reverend gentleman is held by his wealthy congregation.

THERE will be little sympathy felt in this country over the death of Hoag, who killed himself at a walking match at Glen's Falls, N. Y. Walking matches are the concentrated essence of unmitigated nonsense, and, if more of those who indulge in those disgraceful gambling exhibitions were to die, the country in general would be better off.

THE Massachusetts Railroad Commissioners sustain the charges of discrimination against the Boston and Albany railroad, and refer the case to the Legislature for action. It appears that the company made rates to a certain rural milling firm, in which its officers were interested, considerably lower than those which other parties were able to secure.

THE New York Board of Immigration Commissioners expect that the number of arrivals from Ireland this season will be unusually large. Many thrifty Irish men and women have drawn their money from savings banks for the purpose of paying the fare of friends to this country, and the various immigration societies will promote the movement by every means in their power.

MR. WATKINS, husband of Alice Oates, the pretty little burlesque actress, took exceptions to an item in the Cincinnati Enquirer respecting himself and Tracy Titus, his matrimonial predecessor, and attempted to whip the city editor, but the latter, who seems to be a knocker, blacked Watkins' eyes, smashed in his teeth, broke his watchchain and sleeve buttons, and otherwise damaged him.

THERE is a movement down East to bring Chinamen from San Francisco to the Eastern States. The ladies are moving in the matter. It is proposed to erect immense wash-houses at Saratoga, Long Branch, and other watering places, and give employment therein to Chinese. The Celestials will also be furnished to do housework in the large Eastern cities. It is thought that 5,000 will be brought from San Francisco this year.

A MYSTERIOUS society of French Socialists is causing something of a sensation in Montreal. Copies of a circular urging the French to drive the English and Irish from Canada have been sent to several newspaper offices, accompanied by threats of murder and arson if they were not speedily published. The editors of these sheets have turned the communications over to the police authorities, who are endeavoring to discover their authors.

A SINGULAR instance illustrating the laws of heredity is noted by a Chicago paper. A young man of that city who had long been wedded to worldly things suddenly reformed, married a beautiful girl, and is now the happy father of a yearling boy. The other day, while holding the infant on his knee, it became restless, and the father gave it a tract, which the child at once destroyed. A deck of cards was then thrown on the floor, whereupon the little angel began fumbling them over, turned up a jack and smiled.

THIS has been a winter of famines. In nearly every part of the globe food has been so scarce that large portions of several populations have been destitute of the means of life. In Brazil there is a famine almost as terrible as that in Ireland. In Silesia, in Italy and on the steppes of Russia hunger ravages the people. In the latter country, bands of starving men and women fight for garbage and for roots, which is all they have to depend on for sustenance. This is accompanied by diseases, among them the diphtheria, the spread of which is increased by a belief of the peasants that a piece of bread inserted in the mouth of a corpse dead from the disease, and then given to the children, is a safeguard against it. In Persia parents are selling their children for food, or giving them poison rather than see them die before their eyes.

A THRILLING scene was witnessed at the crowded funeral of David Mullynne, in Cleveland, Ohio, the other day. The deceased, two years ago, shot and killed a young man named Masterson. He was acquitted of the crime on the ground of its being in self-defense, but in the scuffle Masterson's fingers grasped his opponent's throat and retained their hold even after death. Mullynne's death was from consumption, produced, his friends claim, from the injuries sustained at Masterson's hands. Just as the clergyman had finished his remarks at the funeral, Mullynne's mother started up, and, pointing toward the corpse in a tragic manner, screamed, "There, Masterson, you have at last got your revenge." The woman continued in the same strain until the body was placed in the hearse, and her cries against the dead Mullynne could be heard blocks off.

QUITE a funny scene occurred in the United States Senate recently, which is thus referred to by a correspondent: "A comic paper in New York, Puck, printed a cartoon with Presidential candidates' faces upon the blocks of the infernal game of fifteen. Grant's face was upon the fifteen block, before Blaine, the fourteen block. Senator Conkling was represented as nearly wild, trying to get Blaine, fourteen, out of the way of Grant, fifteen. Thurman first had the cartoon, and the Democratic Senators so crowded around him that it stopped the regular proceedings. Then Mr. Hereford carried the cartoon over to Blaine, who looked at it long and earnestly, as if he were really trying to solve the puzzle, while Republican Senators crowded about. Finally Blaine looked up with a laugh, and passed the sketch to Hereford, and he carried it to David Davis. He was puzzling over it when Conkling came in. He saw Senator Davis very intent over the picture, and went and looked over his shoulder. The whole Senate was now watching Conkling. He started when he saw the satire, and turned abruptly away, walking rapidly back to his seat without a word.

A Cincinnati Horse Auction.

"Here, gentlemen," said the auctioneer, "is a horse—"

Bystander—Glad you told us it was a horse, or we might have taken it for a sheep.

Auctioneer—That wouldn't be so very strange, if it had your head on. You see before you, gentlemen, a family horse.

Bystander—He got those bunches on his knees from kneeling down at family prayers, didn't he?

Auctioneer—You'll never have any bunches on your knees on that account. A horse, gentlemen, that any family might well be proud of. Look what an eye he has.

Bystander—What has become of the other eye?

Auctioneer—Gone to look after another such fool as you are. Like old dog Tray, so touchingly described by the sweet singer of Michigan (singing):

He's gentle and he's kind—

Bystander— —— the kind.

Auctioneer—

You'll never, never find—

Bystander—He would be fined by any court in Christendom for spring-halterations and interfering generally.

Auctioneer—

A better horse than this old gray.
Old gray horse is ever faithful,

etc. But we cannot waste our time on poetry, although the noble steed before you is the very poetry of motion. How much for him? What do I hear?

Bystander—Nothing, if you can't hear more than he does.

Auctioneer—Among horses, gentlemen, this is the very ne-plus-ultra—

Bystander—Knock-nee-plus-ultra, you mean.

Auctioneer—And the sine-qua-non—

Bystander—Compos mentis.

Auctioneer—The ridges you see running down his sides, gentlemen, are not an indication of a want of flesh; they are simply a wise provision of Providence for carrying off the rain-water.

Bystander—What's the matter with his tail?

Auctioneer—He was formerly owned by a violin manufacturer, and he pulled out all the hairs for fiddle-bows. What do I hear?

But we had heard enough to satisfy us that our friend was right, and that it was absurd to squander money on shows so long as these horse auctions are kept up to their present high standard.

George Wilson's Invention.

George W. Wilson, the manufacturer of fine musical instruments in Concord, N. H., after months of patient study has accomplished the feat of perfecting an achromatic objective. Many mechanicians in this country have given years of study to the subject without a successful result, and where one has succeeded hundreds have failed. In New England there is only one man who manufactures these objectives, and he is not a native of this country. Wilson is the only man who recently has experimented in this direction with any degree of success, and his final triumph is a masterwork of mechanical skill. For many years he has been engaged in the manufacture of telescopic objectives, but during the last six months his whole time has been employed in making a microscopic objective. This objective is very minute, a one-fourth-inch focus achromatic. It consists of two separate and distinct lenses, made of optical flint glass, so as to entirely correct the chromatic aberration. By this an object photographed on a space one-sixteenth of an inch square is magnified 350 times. A minute piece of gold leaf, placed under the microscope is so magnified as to have the appearance of immense lumps of gold, and a one-sixteenth-of-an-inch photograph of the signing of the Declaration of Independence is so enlarged in appearance that the drapery stands out in bold relief, and the features of the signers are so distinct as to be easily recognizable. His work is considered a great triumph.

FARM NOTES.

LAND that will grow corn or an average hay crop is suited for the growth of ash.

THE demand for heavy horses far exceeds the supply, and is likely to for the next ten years.

MASSACHUSETTS was the first State in the Union to order a special survey of its forest resources.

THE clip of wool for 1879 was the largest ever shown in this country, amounting to 283,560,000 pounds.

THOMAS JEFFERSON said: "Let the farmer forevermore be honored in his calling, for they who labor in the earth are the chosen people of God."

THE tenant farmers of England pay a larger sum per acre for the use of land than they would be obliged to give in purchase money for better lands in this country.

THE lovers of raspberries will find the Turner to be the most reliable red variety for this climate, and the quality to be excellent. The plants are hardy and reliable.

THE Toronto Globe represents the American demand for Canadian horses as very brisk. It chronicles the total number purchased and shipped to Massachusetts and New York in a single week at 131, costing $9,819, averaging about $75 each.

THE condition of the public roads is the measure of the civilization of the inhabitants. Good roads facilitate trade intercourse, promote comfort and convenience, increase the value of real estate, add attractiveness to the neighborhood and stimulate individual improvements.

KEEP the stables clean. Clear out the manure every morning, and scrape or card off all filth from the animals. The stable should be made so warm that the manure will not freeze at night. A lower temperature will either demand a larger amount of food or the animal will fall off in condition.

WE loosen a wet soil to facilitate evaporation, and roll or otherwise compress a dry soil to retain it. When hoeing to destroy weeds, be careful to lighten up your own footsteps or you will find the weeds quickly germinate there. The soil being compressed retains the moisture and facilitates germination.

AT the recent meeting of the Vermont Dairymen's Association, C. S. Bliss gave an interesting account of the dairy of Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, who on one occasion milked his cows, cooled his milk, raised the cream, made the butter, took it to Chicago, put it on exhibition and received the prize all in one day.

BARLEY is usually a profitable crop with me. The land must be dry, clean, mellow and rich. Last year I used superphosphate with decided advantage. It not only increased the yield but the quality. I sow from two to two and one-half bushels to the acre as early as the land can be put in good condition. —Joseph Harris, Rochester, N. Y.

AN Indiana farmer asks this pertinent question: "Is it not better to feed corn to my cows, every bushel of which will make three pounds of butter, worth from 18 to 20 cents per pound, giving 54 cents per bushel for my corn at the door, with the manure left on the farm, rather than to sell it at 30 to 35 cents and impoverish my farm?"

I HAVE been taking advantage of the mild weather to "go for" the borers in my peach trees. By removing a few shovelfuls of earth from around the body of the tree, exposing the roots a little, one can get at all of them; then fill the hole with leached ashes. I dig borers out with a stout, sharp knife. Where gum or worm-dust shines is the place to look for them.—W. E. Fosnot, Ellsworth, Kan.

AFTER several years' experience in the use of a light harrow with teeth sloping backward at an angle of forty-five degrees in the spring upon fall grain crops, I can say that it is very beneficial. These teeth not only make friable the soil, but they draw it over the plants and cover the roots exposed by alternate freezing and thawing. The roller should follow the harrow, as it sinks all tufts, stones and other impediments into the soil, leaving a smooth surface to work on.—Rufus Stone, Columbiana county, Ohio.

W. J. BEAL says of Alsike clover: Botanists do not consider it a hybrid. I have twice tried to make crosses with this and white clover, but without success. I have never seen any plants which were intermediate between Alsike and white clover, though I have seen bees working on the flowers of each species where the plants were well mixed. If the plants can be crossed, we shall expect to see new hybrids. The stalks sometimes grow four to six feet in length, but they fall down and the leaves decay toward the base of the stems. The stems recline but do not take root like white clover. It is valuable for pasture and makes good hay, though its habit is not well adapted for meadows.

The First Appearance of the Yankees in Santa Fe.

The first American who seems to have penetrated to New Mexico was James Pursley—an adventurous fur-trader, who found his way up the Arkansas, traveled extensively through the mountains of what is now Colorado, and finally worked his way down to Santa Fe, where he went to work as a carpenter, growing rich through high wages, but suffering always a feeling of restraint. An occasional Frenchman had appeared; but Pursley (who, by the way, is credited with being the first intelligent man who discovered gold in the Rockies) was the sole citizen of the United States who was there to welcome the immortal Pike when, on that bleak March day in 1806, he unwillingly tramped into Santa Fe at the head of his Falstaffian band, hatless, bootless and trouserless through a year's campaigning on the plains and in the mountains.

The Mexicans were greatly alarmed by this sudden realization of the proximity of the progressive and well-armed Yankees, and their consternation resulted very unhappily for the few leaders of that conquering tide that finally should overwhelm the effete rule of Spain in the New World; yet, for a long time after Pike's expedition, nothing occurred to frighten further the proud and indolent hidalgos.—Ernest Ingersoll, in Harper's Magazine.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THERE are 369,430 Roman Catholics in Scotland.

ENGLAND paid $12,500,000 for foreign eggs in 1878.

SINCE 1869 the Pacific railroad has landed 472,811 passengers in San Francisco, and brought away 280,868.

AMERICA imported from Europe last year 29,642,396 gallons of wine, an increase over the importation of 1878 of nearly 15,000,000 gallons.

THE peanut crop of Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina is estimated at about 1,835,000 bushels—an increase of about 500,000 bushels over last year.

THE average life of a paper wheel under trucks of locomotive engines ranges from 300,000 to 1,641,880 miles, and under dining and palace cars from 794,000 to 878,336 miles.

THE English market demands yearly 504,000,000 pounds of cheese. Their home make is 282,000,000, the Continent supplies 64,000,000, and America 158,000,000, of which Canada sends 40,000,000, and the United States 118,000,000. Germany is beginning to take a fair supply from this country.

IN the reign of Louis XIV. France had a population of 19,000,000, England 8,000,000, and Germany 19,000,000. In 1789 France had 26,000,000, England 12,000,000, and Germany 28,000,000. Under Napoleon I. France had 29,000,000 and England 19,000,000. A writer in the Republique Francaise sees great danger to France in these figures.

LAST year there were presented 20,059 applications for patents, and 12,725 patents issued. The total receipts of the office were $703,931.47; total expenditures $529,637.97, leaving a surplus of $174,202.50. On January 1, 1880, there was a balance to the credit of the patent office fund, amounting to $1,420,806.56. It pays to have inventors busy.

DURING 1879 the births in Rome numbered 7,987, of which 7,980 were among the resident population. The deaths among residents were 6,724. On Dec. 31, 1879, the population numbered 298,960, an increase of 9,639 over 1878. Since 1871 the population has increased by 54,476, mainly by immigration. The sanitary condition of the city shows improvement.

THE first piano was made some time in the twelfth century, and appears to have been only a transition from the dulcimer, and consisted of an oblong box, holding a series of strings in triangular form, struck by a quill attached to the keys. During the next six centuries the clavichord was in use. The change in this to something like its present form took place about 150 years ago.

ACCORDING to Sadlier's Catholic Almanac for 1880, the estimated total Roman Catholic population of the United States is 6,143,222, but the Boston Pilot says that many intelligent Catholics think the estimate much too low. There are 67 Archbishops and Bishops, 5,980 priests, 1,136 ecclesiastical students, 6,406 churches and chapels, 1,726 stations, 687 seminaries, colleges, and academies, 2,246 parochial schools, 405,234 pupils in parochial schools, and 373 charitable associations.

Choate's Irony.

Mr. E. P. Whipple tells, in Harper's Magazine, several anecdotes of Rufus Choate's wit and irony:

Nobody at the bar ever equaled him in paying ironical compliments to the Judges who blocked his way to the hearts and understandings of juries. Judge Shaw was specially noted for the gruff way in which he interposed such obstacles, and Shaw's depth of legal learning was not more conspicuous than his force of character.

"'Tisn't so, Mr. Choate," was a frequent interruption, when Shaw was on the bench and Choate was arguing a case before him.

Choate's side-remarks on the Judge have passed into the stereotyped jokes of the bar, and are now somewhat venerable. One is, I think, not commonly stated in the exact words.

"I always approach Judge Shaw," he said, "as a savage approaches his fetish, knowing that he is ugly, but feeling that he is great."

Of Judge Story he once remarked: "I never heard him pronounce a judgment in which he did not argue the case better than the counsel on either side; and for which," he added, with a twinkle in his eye, "he might very properly have been impeached."

He delighted in gravely joking with a Judge. Thus he once asked that a case might be postponed, owing to his engagement in another court. The Judge replied that the case was one in which he might write out his argument.

With a mock solemnity, which it always seemed to me no other human countenance could so readily assume, he replied:

"I write well, your Honor, but slowly."

As his handwriting resembled the tracks of wildcats, with their claws dipped in ink, madly dashing over the surface of a folio sheet of white paper, the assembled bar could not restrain their laughter.

Indeed, it is affirmed that he could not decipher his own handwriting after a case was concluded, and had to call in experts to explain it to himself. He congratulated himself on the fact that, if he failed to get a living at the bar, he could still go to China and support himself by his pen; that is, by decorating tea-chests.

Bob Burdette's Dream.

And I dreamed I died, and went to heaven. I thought I had just fifteen brains, and all the way up to the gate I was trying to straighten them out, and I thought I would go mad. When I got up there, the gate was wide open, and all sorts of people were streaming in, just as they pleased. I hadn't the cheek to think I had a right to go in without any credentials or examination, so I hung back looking for St. Peter. And while I was waiting I hope to die if Bob Ingersoll didn't come along and walk right in, and he looked as if he were mighty glad to get there. Presently I saw St. Peter, right by the gate, his head bent down and his eyes fixed on his knees. I told him my name and where I was from, and asked if I might go in. He didn't say anything, and I began to feel rather streaked. So I said it again, a little louder. Still he made no reply. Then I shook him by the shoulder, for I was getting pretty anxious, and I began to tell it all over again. It frightened me when he shook me off—"9, 11, 4, 14, 13, 7—oh get out of this, you and your name; if you hadn't bothered me I'd have got it the next move."

"Meadville! Change cars for Oil City and Franklin! This train stops twenty minutes for dinner!"

"Now," the fat passenger said solemnly, "I am never going to fool with that Gem puzzle again. Not once more."

"Predesperation."

An old-time Baptist preacher of Little Rock, Ark., who has retired from active gospel work, but who still keeps a firm eye on the faith, has just had a little experience with a colored man that causes him to think very seriously.

Meeting the colored man, the preacher said:

"Dave, if you don't bring that saddle home I'll have you put in jail."

"What saddle is yer ferren ter?"

"The one you stole from me."

"Parson, fore de Lord, I nebber stole yer saddle."

"Yes, you did. I saw you when you took it off the yard fence. I believe I'll have you arrested, any way."

"Look heah, parson, you'se a old Baptis', isn't yer?"

"Yes, and I'll have you sent to the penitentiary."

"Well, so is I, an' now ketch de pints ez I gin em ter yer. Dar is jes' so many saddles in dis worl' what is ter be stole, an' dar's jes' so many man what is ter steal dese saddles. Dis is de predesperation. Now, ef yer saddle happens to be one of de predisposed an' I happens ter be one ob de predisposed men, ken I hep it? Dar was Judas, fur instance. He couldn't hep trayin de Savior, kase de Savior said: 'Judas, sop in dis dish an' go an' 'tray me. "I don't want a religious discussion, Dave. It isn't the saddle now that I care so much about; it is that you told me a lie in saying that you didn't steal it."

"Well, den, parson, 'spose I takes back de lie an' keeps de saddle?"

"A lie once told always stands. You have lied to me, you scoundrel, and I believe it is my duty to have you arrested."

"Parson, dere's jes a certain amount ob lies ter be tole in dis worl' 'an' ef I is one ob de men what is predisposed to tell one ob dese lies, hit's not my fault, an' I can't help hit."

"You go on now and get that saddle, or I'll swear out a warrant for your arrest."

How Conkling Wins.

The great secret of his success is his fidelity to friendship. He never deserts a man who espouses his cause under any circumstances whatever. He never drops an old friend to make a new one, and the man who does his work is absolutely certain of reward when the power of conferring it is within Conkling's reach. The appointment of Justice Ward Hunt was in exact accordance with the policy of Conkling's life. He never forgives an enemy and never forgets the man who has betrayed him. No second endeavor on the part of such an one to secure his friendship counts for anything with him. Perhaps ex-Lieut. Gov. Stewart L. Woodford illustrates this truth as well as any man. Conkling is an uncompromising man, and it is said that in partisanship the man who fights and never compromises never lacks followers. He is an attractive speaker, but is not one to awaken any enthusiasm, while he may and does appeal to admiration—perhaps because he always seems to be speaking from the head and never from the heart. It is said that he never extemporizes, invariably committing to memory every word he utters. To this work he brings a rare skill, and apparently is able to forecast the probable speeches of his opponents and to prepare answers for them, so that he appears to the hearer as a most capable controversialist. The defects of an early education, that was by no means finished, still cling to him, and in 1872 he rounded a rhetorical period with "the harbor of Madrid!" His speech-making power is the accomplishment of a life of study in that direction. At 25 he is said to have been able to repeat from memory which is a prodigious faculty with him—two-thirds of Burke's speeches and a fair portion of Grattan's; and in 1869, while riding in a Pullman car to the Pacific, he entertained his company by reciting the whole of Scott's "Lady of the Lake" without the dropping of a word. His industry is marvelous, and it is said that from his youth he has worked more hours every day than the mass are accustomed to in two; and, finally, his neighbors say that he has few of the smaller vices of mankind, and only one of the larger!—*Utica Cor. A HEN always kicks backward after laying an egg. A Bridgeport Yankee is reported to have turned this fact to account in inventing a device to prevent the sale of stale eggs. TWO CHAMBERMAIDS and a cook in a Pittsburgh house argued, as the latter stirred a huge kettle of boiling mush. The argument culminated in a remark unpleasant to the cook, who retaliated by throwing a ladle of mush in the face of the offender. Then the row became general. BEFORE THE SHRINE.

I built a shrine, and set my idol there,
And morn and noon and night my knees I bent,
And cried aloud until my strength was spent,
Beseeching his cold pity with my prayer.
Sometimes at dawning, when the day was fair,
A ray of light to his stern visage sent
The semblance of a smile. "Does he relent,"
I cried, "this strong god, Love, whose high-priest is Despair?"
But noon came on, and in its full clear light
I saw his lips, as ruthless as of old
And his eyes mocked me like relentless fate,
Till I was fain to hide me from his sight;
But one swept off from him his mantle's fold,
And lo, my idol was not Love, but Hate.

A LIVERPOOL merchant last year took his son, who was recovering from scarlet fever (i. e., was in the most infectious stage of the disorder), to stay at a large hotel in Wales. The young man's condition became known, and there was a general exodus from the house. The landlord thus had his house empty at the busy time, and, besides, was obliged to go to considerable expense in disinfecting it. He brought an action to recover the loss he had sustained, and it has just been settled out of court by the payment of a large sum—nearly £2,000, inclusive of costs.

The Alpine Horn.

The Alpine horn is an instrument made of the bark of a cherry tree, and, like a speaking trumpet, is used to convey sounds to a great distance. When the last rays of the sun gild the summits of the Alps, the shepherd who inhabits the highest peak of these mountains takes his horn, and cries in a loud voice, "Praised be the Lord." As soon as the neighboring shepherds hear him, they leave their huts and repeat these words. The sounds are prolonged many minutes, while the echoes of the rocks repeat the name of God. Imagination cannot picture anything more solemn or sublime than such a scene. During the silence that succeeds, the shepherds bend their knees and pray in the open air, then repair to their huts to rest. The sunlight gilding the tops of these stupendous mountains, upon which the vault of heaven seems to rest, the magnificent scenery around, and the voices of the shepherds sounding from rock to rock the praise of the Almighty, fill the mind of every traveler with enthusiasm and awe.

State Democratic Convention.

The following call has been issued by the democratic state central committee:

The voters of Indiana, regardless of past political affiliations, who are desirous of co-operating with the democracy in the support of its principles and nominees, are invited to participate in the meetings called throughout the state for the purpose of selecting representatives to attend a delegate convention, to be held at Indianapolis,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9th, 1880,

for the purpose of adopting a platform of principles and the nomination of candidates to be supported for the following offices:

Governor.
Lieutenant-Governor.
Two judges of the supreme court.
Secretary of state.
Auditor of state.
Clerk of the supreme court.
Reporter of the supreme court.
Attorney general.
Superintendent of public instruction.

The ratio of representation will be one delegate for each 200 votes cast for Governor James D. Williams, in 1876, and one delegate for each fraction of 100 or over. [DeKalb county is entitled to 13 delegates.]

The delegates from each congressional district will meet on the evening previous to the convention, at places to be hereafter designated by this committee, for the purpose of selecting and reporting to the convention one committeeman on permanent organization, one committeeman on platform and resolutions, and vice-president for the convention, two delegates to national democratic convention, one assistant secretary of the convention, two alternate delegates to national democratic convention, one presidential elector, one contingent presidential elector, one member of the state central committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and one committeeman on credentials.

The committee on platform and resolutions will meet immediately after the adjournment of the district meetings, say 9 o'clock p. m., at the consultation rooms of the supreme court, Tuesday evening, June 8.

The committee on permanent organization will meet at the same hour in the governor's office. It will be their duty to name a president and principal secretary of the convention, four delegates at large and four alternate delegates to the national convention, two electors for the state at large and two contingent electors, and also to recommend rules for the government of the convention.

The committee on credentials will meet at 8 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, June 9, at the rooms of the state central committee, to determine such contests as may be submitted to them.

Delegate tickets of admission to convention will be issued to the chairman of each county delegation, and to authorized representatives of the press upon the presentation of credentials at the state central committee rooms, Masonic building.

By order of the democratic state central committee.
B. C. SHAW, Chairman.
JAMES H. RICE, Secretary.

Hugh J. Jewett is evidently an organizer. He can scarcely be considered a dark horse, judging from the present proportions of his boom.

National Democratic Convention.

The executive committee of the national democratic committee issues the following call:

The national democratic committee, having met in the city of Washington, February 23, has appointed Tuesday, the 22d of June next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Cincinnati as the place of holding the national democratic convention.

Each state is entitled to representation therein equal to a double number of its senators and representatives in the congress of the United States. All democratic conservative and other citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political association or difference, who can unite with us in the effort for a pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join in sending delegates to the convention. At the last national democratic convention held in the city of St. Louis in 1876, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the states be requested to instruct their delegates to the national democratic convention to be held in 1880, whether it be desirable to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in the national convention, and that the national committee insert such request in the call for the next convention.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM, of Connecticut,
Chairman.
FRED'K O. PRINCE, of Massachusetts,
Secretary.

Democratic Congressional Convention.

Delegates from the several counties constituting the Twelfth (12th) congressional district of Indiana, will meet in convention at Auburn, Ind.

THURSDAY, APRIL 29th, 1880, at 10 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of nominating a democratic candidate to be supported for representative in congress.

The ratio of representation will be the same as that provided for the democratic state convention, as follows:

Allen	38
DeKalb	13
Lagrange	8
Noble	13
Steuben	4
Whitley	10

By order of the democratic congressional committee.
C. A. O. McCLELLAN, Chairman.

AN OPINION

Of the Attorney General on the Constitutional Amendments.

Attorney General Woollen submits the following in answer to questions on the constitutional amendments:

Attorney General's office,
Indianapolis, March 27, 1880.

DEAR SIR—The following answers cover questions asked me by you and others, and are respectfully submitted for you guidance:

1. Under what provisions of the statute are the votes on the amendments to be canvassed and certified?

The board should proceed in accordance with the directions contained in sections four and five of the act submitting the amendments for adoption or rejection.

2. Ought there to be separate ballot-boxes, separate poll-books, etc.?

The amendments are submitted to the electors at the April election. The board who conducts the township election also conducts the election on the amendments. But one ballot-box is to be used, and but one set of poll-books is necessary. The ballots are of different colors, and are all to be placed in the same box. The tally sheets should be separate, and the counting of the white tickets can be first done, and then the blue ones can be counted; this would facilitate matters very much. Both ballots, separately folded, should be voted at the same time. A voter may vote for township officers, and not for the amendments; or for the amendments, and not for township officers. To refuse a vote for either, because the elector would not vote for both, would be illegal, as requiring a test not warranted by the constitution.

4. Can the ticket for township officers and the one on amendments be attached together and voted as one ticket?

They should not be thus attached, but voted separately, though at the same time. The safe way would be to use the tickets prepared by the secretary of state, as they are the only ones provided for by law. No white tickets should be cast for or against the amendments, and no blue ones counted for or against the officers. Very respectfully,

T. W. WOOLLEN,
Attorney-General.

Judge Lowry for Governor.

[Elkhart Democrat.]

While making a business tour through DeKalb, Allen, Huntington and other counties a few days ago, we heard the name of Judge Lowry, present judge of the superior court of Allen county, frequently and favorably spoken of in connection with the candidacy for governor. The judge was formerly a resident of Goshen, and is well and favorably known in this county as well as throughout the entire northern part of the state. He is an eminent lawyer, and an able judge and a life-long democrat, against whom nothing can be said, politically or otherwise. Should the judge consent to allow his name to go before the convention, he would undoubtedly receive the full and hearty support of the democracy of the northern part of the state. If the convention, which convenes at Indianapolis on the 9th of June, should see fit to place him in nomination, he would roll up a majority of about 20,000 without a doubt, and would fill the position with honor to himself and would be a credit to the state.

Facts.

The New York Tribune says: "If Tilden and Grant were to withdraw simultaneously, both parties would feel like holding a jubilee."

The Canton Repository says: "General Grant is about to withdraw from the presidential contest in the same way that Mr. Tilden is about to withdraw."

Every democrat should go to work next Monday for the success of the democratic ticket. Lay aside your farm work and devote one day to opening the campaign of 1880.

The Jewett car is coming.

An editorial article in the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer, of the 29 ult. headed "Vermin with types" will pinch certain toes in the vicinity of Indianapolis, Ind.

The republicans of the county are working hard to elect a majority of the township trustees at the coming election, and no doubt for the purpose of keeping "politics out of school matters."

In another column will be found a letter from Hon. T. W. Woollen, of Indianapolis, to Hon. J. B. Stoll of the Ligonier Banner, which letter touches upon some important points concerning the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendments. Read it before you go to the polls to deposit your ballot next Monday.

The Wabash Valley Blade, Vol. 1, No. 1, with the name of the wild Dutchman—Sam. F. Winter—at the head of the editorial column, is before us. Judging from the tone of the first issue we are inclined to the opinion that Sam intends the Blade to whack somebody's political prospects in two, down in Miami or thereabouts.

Now that the democrats have nominated strong and popular candidates for trustees in every township in the county, we desire to urge the importance of going to work for them. The republicans are organized and actively at work, more particularly in the close townships, and the democrats should see to it that every democratic voter is brought to the polls early. Don't allow your ticket to be defeated when you have it in your power to elect it. Let every democrat be at his post next Monday morning.

The Tammany state committee of New York, met last Tuesday evening and issued a call for a state convention, to be held at Syracuse on April 20, for the purpose of choosing delegates to the Cincinnati convention. The call invites all democrats and others who are opposed to pledge the delegation to the ensuing national convention for the support of any one man, but in favor of the nomination of an upright, acceptable candidate for president who can unite the democratic party of New York and of the nation, to meet and elect delegates to the state convention.

Here in the center township of the county the republicans appear to be putting forth every effort to defeat Mr. Kutzner for trustee; they acknowledge that he is an excellent gentleman and that he has performed the duties of township trustee to the satisfaction of all, and yet they want to replace him with an untried man—not because their nominee is a greenbacker, not because he is a republican, not because he is a democrat nor because he is a better man for the position than Mr. Kutzner, but because he will do the bidding of the republican leaders, and if elected will conduct the township business in the interest of the republican party.

Don't Forget It.

Please don't forget that there is a party named Tilden—S. J. Tilden—now resident in New York. He is an old man—a very good old man. He was robbed by a set of scoundrels in 1876 of $200,000, which was turned over in the shape of salary to one Rutherford B. Hayes. If Mr. Tilden will call at Cincinnati on the 22nd day of next June he will probably hear of something to his advantage.—Tipton Times.

Don't forget it, the democracy there assembled will suggest to Mr. Tilden that the probability of his losing another $200,000 in the same way, is one of the reasons why he should take a back seat.

The Correct Idea.

A few weeks ago the Decatur Democrat took occasion to refer to a threat made in the Fort Wayne Journal, and among other suggestions made by the Democrat concerning the subject in question was the following, which we heartily indorse:

"Thousands of good, honest, hard-working men became more or less involved in debt during the "panic years," and now that they are again striving to regain the lost foothold it is both cruel and unjust to force them again to the wall. There is in this country, always has been and always will be, a disposition on the part of the man who happens to be a little better fixed, financially, than his neighbor, to keep the latter down if possible. If the neighbor is so unfortunate as to get into his financial superior's debt, the later almost invariably watches his opportunity and when the force process will completely ruin the unfortunate debtor it is applied to the fullest extent. All men are not rich, nor can they be; but there is nothing more unjust in the eyes of mankind in general, if not in the eyes of law, than to see the rich fairly snatching the bread from the poor man's mouth. True, there is a class who never pay, but it is not this class to which we have reference. We refer to the man who makes it his business to pay his honest debts when he can. But as a rule this very man will be the one who will be first forced to the wall. We heard an elderly gentleman remark, once upon a time, that 'in this country it is dog eat dog, and the one eating the fastest will be rewarded with a dog, while the followers will have to be satisfied with a leg or tail.' The gentleman seems to have had the correct idea of it."

THE AMENDMENTS.

Important Letter from Attorney-General Woollen.

Office of Attorney-General.
INDIANAPOLIS, March 27, 1880.

HON. J. B. STOLL—Dear Sir:—

You say you are "in favor of all the amendments except 'one' and 'three.'" I think your objections to these are well founded.

If number one is adopted it will, I think, create great confusion. I submit to your consideration one point that strikes me very forcibly. After fixing the qualification of a voter as to residence, etc., the section concludes "if he shall have been duly registered according to law." Now there is no registry law, and a voter cannot comply with this mandatory clause, and what is to be done? Certainly the voter is not to be disfranchised; still he cannot vote under this section unless he comes within the language of the constitution, for constitutions are not to be whittled down by declaring a positive mandatory provision merely directory. What then? My opinion is, that the courts will be bound to hold that this provision, if adopted, will not become the law until the legislature shall put it in operation by passing a registry law, and that until that time the present provision on that subject will define the rights of voters. This uncertainty will bring confusion and litigation that cannot be compensated by any good the section will do if adopted.

Amendment 3 is very objectionable because of the fact that it embodies so many propositions. Most voters would favor some of its provisions, but few all. It provides for three different elections, and also a registry law. Here again is a mandatory clause providing for a registry law.

But there is still a more serious matter connected with these amendments than any I have mentioned, and which may precipitate complications and difficulties not now dreamed of; and that is, that it is doubtful if the law submitting these amendments to the people is not unconstitutional, because it undertakes to amend the constitution in an unconstitutional manner.

The language of the constitution is, that when the proposed changes have been agreed to by two separate legislatures, "then it shall be the duty of the general assembly to submit such amendment or amendments to the electors of the state; and if a majority of said electors shall ratify the same, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this constitution."

This provision evidently contemplated that proposed amendments to the constitution should be submitted to the electors at a separate election held solely for that purpose. The act of March 10, 1879, undertakes to submit the proposed amendments "to the electors of the state, at the election to be held on the first Monday of April, 1880." Section 3 says, "if a majority of the electors," that is, a majority of the persons who vote at the April election, shall ratify the amendments they shall become a part of the constitution. I think there is nothing clearer than that it will require a majority of all the votes cast at the April election to ratify an amendment, whether all the electors vote on that question or not. It is true the certificate required under the 5th section of the act of March 10, 1879, only includes "the votes cast for and against each amendment;" but it is a very grave question whether such a certificate is in compliance with the requirements of the constitution, and whether the law is not so defective as to render the submission unavailing. I think if these amendments are desirable additions to the constitution, it is to be regretted that the act submitting them to the electors of the state for adoption or rejection were not more certainly in accordance with the organic law.

Very Respectfully,
T. W. Woollen.

—Coop. Ralston is now doing the village of New York. —Miss Mary Pitcher, who has resided here for several months past, associated with Miss M. Cleveland in her millinery store, left for her home in Bellevue, Ohio, last Friday. —Next week Mr. Ed. Harris will commence the canvass of Auburn, and adjoining towns in the county, for the sale of Mark Twain's new work, "A Tramp Abroad." The book will be delivered soon after the canvass is made, and, having perused the work, we advise our readers to give Mr. Harris their names when he calls on them.

—The second number of "The National Literary Monthly," edited and published by Messrs. Fisher & Miller, Toledo, Ohio, has just reached us. It is devoted to "original literature, science, art, religion and politics," and is replete with the finest gems of literature, both prose and poetry. It is well worth the trivial price of subscription and should receive a hearty support from all quarters.

—The W. F. M. society of this place, will hold its second annual meeting in the audience room of the M. E. church on next Sabbath evening. The programme will consist of addresses, essays, recitations, etc. A cordial invitation is extended to all. The members of this society are all requested to meet in the same room next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock sharp, to arrange the programme, and also to elect officers for the ensuing year. This is the last meeting for the year, and it is necessary that all should come prepared to pay their back dues.

Mrs. E. L. Casebeer, Sec'y.

—Late developments make known that Mace Long, the temperance lecturer and reformed gambler, was married last January to Miss Kittie Henderson, of Ft. Wayne. The marriage took place at Sturgis, Mich., in the presence of two witnesses, and has since been kept a profound secret—and why? Probably in order that Mr. Long might enjoy himself further in paying his attentions to various young lady friends along his routes of travel, with whom he has been quite intimate and to whom, we understand, he has misrepresented himself. If this is true he has acted very dishonorably, to say the least, and an explanation from Mr. Long would be just about the right thing now.

"Saved his Life."

Springfield, Tenn., May 6, 1879.

Dr. A. R. White— Dear Sir: I am selling a great deal of your Pulmonaria, have a large demand for it, and recomend it to all as the best cough medicine in the market, and I am not afraid to recomend it, as I had it thoroughly tested on one of my customers, who was given up to die. After taking three fifty-cent bottles of Pulmonaria, he commenced improving, and when he had taken the fifth bottle he was up and in my store and said: "It saved my life," and that "he should always love me and the Pulmonaria, for it saved him from death, and I was the cause of his taking it." I told him not to love me but Dr. White the inventor of this great medicine. I am selling from eight to fifteen bottles a week of your Pulmonaria.

Yours truly, W. W. Eckles.

Saved From the Poorhouse.

For years David Allingworth suffered with Rheumatism, and notwithstanding the best medical attendance, could not find relief. He came to the Scioto county poorhouse, and had to be carried into and out of bed, on account of his helpless condition. After the failure of all the remedies which had been applied, the Directors of the poorhouse resolved to use the celebrated German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, and this was a fortunate resolution; for, with the trial of one bottle, the patient was already much better, and when four bottles had been used upon him, he could again walk without the use of a cane.

The facts as above stated, will be verified by the editor of the Portsmouth, Ohio, Correspondent.

THE THRASHER.

BY [illegible]

'Twas autumn-time—the old barn floor
With ripened grain was scattered o'er,
And music of the thrasher's flail
Charmed the heart of Abigail.

It was an Indian-summer day,
Smoky—with the warmth of May;
And the lofty doors on either side
Of the old barn were open wide.

So Abba often caught a view
Of the thrasher in his frock of blue;
And he saw her seething o'er the suds,
Rubbing out the family duds.

All day long she heard the blows,
As she stood and washed the clothes;
And when he heard her laugh and sing,
How lustily the flail would swing.

But when the great red sun went down
Behind the trees of gold and brown,
She started out with milking-pail,
And he joyfully left his flail.

Then they met beside the bars,
And softly talked until the stars
Came sailing up into the sky,
While the cows stood waiting by.

Next day, when he thrashed again,
'Twas gloomy, and the falling rain
Fell like a thud against the door,
And no singing cheered him more.

But his heart was never lighter,
Nor never had the sun seemed brighter;
For the promise she had given
Raised him to the seventh heaven.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

THE IOWA LOVERS.

BY JOHN W. HATTON.

I.

There's a divinity shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them as we may.

The following story was related to me soon after the war, and I made a memorandum of it at the time, but soon forgot all about it.

In looking over my papers, the other day, I came upon the incident in faded pencil marks so dimmed by age that I could hardly make sense of it, but, having written the notes with my own hand, I needed but a word or two, here and there, to make it plain to the understanding.

The story impressed me deeply at the time, and when the beautiful incident, with all its lights and shadows, hopes and fears, again flashed upon my mind, after nearly fifteen years of personal struggle in which my own life had been anything but romance, I could not rest content until I had served up the dainty repast for the readers of THE LEDGER, all of whom I recognize as household friends.

I will begin at the beginning.

Soc Holman was a handsome Iowa boy, the son of a wealthy farmer who lived in one of the interior counties of that State. He was a great favorite with the boys and girls of his neighborhood, being intelligent, brave, and honest. At school he led his classes, and on the play-ground and in the spelling-matches he usually led one side or the other, and was generally victorious, his own special merit being the most important factor in those little victories. The old folks spoke of Soc as the "bell-sheep," and so he really was in this, his own little world, bounded by that invisible line which constitutes a neighborhood or school district.

After stalling his teacher in algebra and quarreling with him about the moods and tenses of the verb, Soc left school in disgust, declaring that it was but loss of time and money to longer pursue his studies under a master who knew less, while assuming to know a great deal more, than his precocious pupil. Whether Soc was right or wrong in thus twitting the pedagogue with incompetency cuts no figure in our narrative.

Near the Holman homestead lived another farmer by the name of Howard.

The Howards were well to do. In Soc's childhood and boyhood they were looked upon as first-class people—a little too proud, some said, for farmers—but strictly honorable.

The elder Howard had a pretty daughter named Minnie, who was about Soc's age, and the two were playmates and school-fellows from their childhood to young manhood and womanhood.

They loved each other as children, and this love had grown almost to a passion before they were old enough to think of marriage.

Minnie's parents loved Soc, and had come to look upon him almost as one of their own family. With all their pride they had no greater ambition, no fonder hope of Minnie, than to see her the happy, young wife of Holman, whom they regarded as her equal and honored greatly for his many excellent qualities, both of head and heart.

The young people dreamed on in blissful expectation of the bright future in store for them, and not a hint or doubt was ever indulged that fortune would not smile upon them precisely as they wished. The Holmans were satisfied, the Howards delighted, and Soc and Minnie were as happy as the blackbirds that sang all day long in the apple-trees.

II.

In an evil day there came a bachelor uncle of Minnie's, a wealthy stock dealer, for a small favor, praying that Farmer Howard, his brother-in-law, would go on his bond for $30,000. He saw, or thought he did, just where he might double the amount in less than six months. His funds were all invested in young stock; he must borrow the money or lose the opportunity of making a handsome speculation.

Farmer Howard was too kind to say, he had never learned to say, that hard but honest little word, no. He signed the fatal paper with a trembling hand, and, in less than six months, was reduced to poverty.

The Holmans, except Soc, had never loved the Howards, because they naturally felt their inferiority when in the presence of such "high-toned people."

When this fortune at last came to the Howards, the Holmans twitted them with their past arrogance, and the families parted in bitter hatred.

Old man Holman now forbade his son keeping company with Minnie, and the pride of Farmer Howard had been so deeply wounded already that he, very foolishly, did the same thing, though in the most gentle manner, for he sadly deplored the young people's infatuation.

Old man Holman threatened to disinherit his son if he married Minnie, and there appeared little in the near future to console or cheer the true-hearted but disconsolate lovers, who remained steadfast and faithful through all this storm of adversity, notwithstanding the bitterness which existed between other members of the estranged and embittered households.

Soc sought an interview with Minnie, and honestly and lovingly confided to her the important secret that he had determined to leave home, not for his own sake, but for her whom he loved so dearly. He would go to Texas, he said, and open a stock ranch, build for them a cozy little cottage, return, marry and take her to the Lone Star State, despite the Holmans and the Howards, and, if need be, despite the whole world.

They renewed their vows, not the old enthusiastic vows of childhood, but pledges far more binding and sacred; for they had now learned the full import of true love and the sacred meaning of such vows. Neither doubted the sincerity of the other, and they were as happy as lovers could well be who were about separating, not to meet again perhaps for years.

III.

Soc arrived safely in Texas and set about his business with all the tact and energy of a young man of sound body and mind, and with a purpose, too, as sacred as ever actuated a pioneer in establishing a home in the wilderness—a home for the woman he loved.

He established himself on the frontier, where cattle could be herded the year round on lands that had never yet so much as been surveyed.

He prospered almost from the start. He was nearly ready to return to Iowa for his bride when the storm of civil war burst upon the country. Earnest in his desire to return, he attempted to make his escape through the rebel lines, but, on reaching Bonham, he was not allowed to continue his journey without certain documents, which he returned to have written and signed. The authorities, who knew him very well, refused the papers, knowing that he was a Northern man and threatened to return to his former home in Iowa. Foiled in all his efforts, he returned to his ranch, where he remained for nearly a year an idle spectator of the stormy scenes that were hourly becoming more and more portentous of evil to him and his.

An agent of the Confederate Government at last called and inspected his cattle, took down the number, and put an estimate on the herd. The day following, a Lieutenant, with twenty horsemen, rode up to the ranch, gave Soc a voucher for so much Confederate money, and drove off his stock, leaving him but one horse.

He now made one more desperate effort to escape through the Confederate lines. Mounting the horse his enemies had left him, he took a more westerly route, and almost succeeded in reaching the Union lines. After crossing the Red river, he struck through the Indian Nation, never dreaming that they, too, were up in arms for the rebellion. On reaching Boggy Depot he was surprised to find himself confronted by a battalion of Texas troops, whose Colonel refused to allow him to proceed on his journey. He was sent back under guard to Bonham, where he was released and allowed to return to his ranch.

The year following, he was drafted into the Confederate army, and sent west of the Mississippi.

Having made up his mind to desert, he pretended to be well pleased, declaring to his fellow-soldiers that nothing would give him greater satisfaction than "to get a crack at those blasted Yankees."

It was not long before his wish was gratified, and he had an opportunity of going over to the Union side. He was in the thickest of the fight at Corinth. In the rebel charge he fell as though he had received a mortal wound, and, when the Confederates retreated, he found himself where he had long desired to be, inside the Union lines.

Taken to headquarters, Soc explained how he became a Confederate soldier, and asked to be enlisted in the Union service.

In the changes and vicissitudes of military service, Soc was promoted to First Sergeant, and at last got himself attached to an Iowa regiment of cavalry—one that had been recruited near his old home. He knew many of the boys, and soon learned a great deal of home news, one item of which pierced his heart, almost, like a bullet. The Howards had been gone from Iowa nearly three years, and no one seemed to know whither. They had gathered together the wreck of their once happy home, and, in a covered wagon drawn by two horses, had taken their sad, slow journey to the southward. This was all that Soc could learn—all his comrades could tell him. The boys wondered why he had so suddenly changed from one of the gayest to one of the saddest troopers in the regiment.

IV.

Let us return to the Howards.

Minnie's father had a brother in the South who was reported to be very wealthy. He had gone to Arkansas in early manhood, where he had engaged in the culture of cotton on a large scale, and was reported to be worth nearly $500,000.

The broken-down farmer, not knowing what else to do, concluded to seek a home in the South and procure such help as he could from his brother until he was able to stand upon his feet again.

Stopping on the White river, in Northern Arkansas, he left his family on a rented plantation and struck out alone for the Southern portion of the State in search of his brother. Reaching Camden, he found, to his sorrow, that his brother had sold his property near that city, and had removed with his family to Oregon. Learning, however, that he still owned considerable land in the State, he sought his agent, a young lawyer in Camden, and desired to rent one of his farms that still remained unsold. There was but one plantation yet to rent, the lawyer informed him, but, after some preliminary correspondence, Mr. Howard was allowed to take it on a five years' lease.

Getting the county, township and numbers, he went in eager search of his future home. To his surprise and joy, he found it but a day's journey from where he had left his family, and on the banks of the very same river.

In a few weeks the Howards were domiciled in their new quarters, and found it very convenient for their purpose. The farm was provided with a gin, a cotton press, a good barn, and many other conveniences, which, but for his inability to stock the place and hire help, would have proved to them a valuable plantation.

Mr. Howard soon received another letter from his brother, full of sympathy and brotherly tenderness, telling him he should have the place as long as he wanted it, free of rent.

They went to work in the spring with renewed courage and energy, and made a good crop of cotton. All the money they could spare from the sale of their first crop was expended in mules and horses, and they were preparing to cultivate the whole plantation the spring following, when the war broke out.

Fearing he might lose his stock, Mr. Howard disposed of all but one horse. All his plans for the future were now broken up, and the only question with him and his two sons was, "How shall we keep out of the rebel army?"

V.

Fearing conscription, and finding it no longer safe to remain at home, Mr. Howard and his two sons, the elder of whom was not yet grown, went to St. Louis, where they joined an Illinois regiment.

It soon became a life-and-death struggle with the women and children who were left at home to take care of themselves as best they could.

Minnie took control of everything. Her mother was never very strong, and the troubles of the last three or four years had almost broke her spirit, but Minnie rose with a strength and courage equal to the terrible responsibility now resting upon her, the responsibility of supporting her mother, her little brother, and two sisters, younger than herself. It was a severe struggle, more severe than the reader can well imagine. The writer exaggerates nothing. He obtained the story from their own lips, and tells it almost precisely as it was related to him.

Minnie became a farmer. Assisted by her little brother, who was tenderly spared all labor beyond his strength, she plowed, planted, and reaped, and had the satisfaction of knowing that the dear ones for whom she labored had, by her own individual exertions, been spared the pangs of hunger. It was a fierce struggle, and the combat was fought on a field of effort strangely unfamiliar to our heroine and under difficulties such as would have crushed the heart of the bravest man unless that heart, like hers, was all aglow with a precious love that would not let it die.

The family was in no danger of bodily harm. The neighbors, though strongly Southern in sentiment, yet treated them very kindly. They were fighting the same grim monster, hunger, and had little time to think ill of their neighbors, because they happened to sympathize with the Yankees.

VI.

After Marmaduke's raid on Cape Girardeau and New Madrid the regiment to which Holman was attached, with several others, followed the rebel General in his retreat until they found themselves within the Confederate lines, which then embraced nearly the entire State of Arkansas.

There was some desultory fighting, but no serious engagement. The forces of both armies were scattered over several counties of Northern Arkansas, intent on taking each other at a disadvantage, and it required the greatest caution on the part of the Union forces to prevent surprises, as they were among enemies and in a strange country. The Confederates easily obtained news of all their movements, and were not slow to take advantage of such information.

Soc was one day ordered to take twenty men and make a reconnoissance down the White river, on both banks of which the Union cavalry were now stationed in considerable force. The object of this reconnoissance was to ascertain the precise locality of the enemy's main camp.

Starting before daylight, he had reached a position about ten miles below his own camp before the natives were astir or had an opportunity to give the alarm. It was Holman's purpose to cross the White river at a ford—the only favorable crossing for many miles either way—and return to his command from the opposite side. He must trust to blind luck to find this crossing, or else to such chance information as fortune might throw in his way.

His men were mainly dressed in citizen's clothing, but the disguise was imperfect, and failed to deceive. He soon discovered that he was pursued by several companies of the enemy, and must put the river between them and his own little band or suffer the worst fate in store for himself and followed.

Should his men become prisoners, there was not the least danger that any of them would suffer a worse fate than the loss of their freedom, but for him, a deserter from the Confederate army, captivity meant death. Knowing this, he stoutly declared to his men that he would never surrender to the rebels; he would die with his face to the foe. This encouraged and emboldened his men, who swore they would follow wherever he dared to lead.

The day was spent in great anxiety by the jaded troops, now completely cut off from all apparent hope of succor or escape. They abandoned the main road about noon, and, by dint of hard riding and several feints, succeeded in eluding the enemy until late in the day.

VII.

About night-fall they passed a cross-road grocery, situated on a high ridge overlooking the valley for several miles on either side of the river.

The men did not tarry, but Soc paused long enough to take a good view of the surrounding country; and it was well he did, for he had no sooner cast a look backward in the direction he had come than he beheld the enemy, scarcely a mile in his rear, advancing in rapid pursuit. He again left the public thoroughfare, and now made directly for the river. He did not know the country, and soon found himself in a great bend of the river, which seemed to coil around him and his little band like a great serpent. The banks were so precipitous that it would have been suicide to attempt to pass the fatal stream. They followed the river for more than a mile, but came back almost at the very starting point without discovering "the ford." The enemy was now so close upon them that it was impossible to escape by the route by which they had entered this trap. The Confederates, knowing the predicament which the Federals were in, rejoiced at what seemed to be a fortunate termination of a hard and doubtful chase. They had but to watch the roads and prevent the Union soldiers from retracing their steps and all would be well. They could afford to take a little rest, feed their horses, and indulge in free drinks of "pine-top whisky," which the Union boys had not the leisure to discuss. The time spent by the Confederates in resting, eating, and drinking was very precious to Soc and his little band.

VIII.

There was but one farm-house in the horse-shoe bend, which was now but too surely a prison to Soc and his little band.

It was growing dark and the weary horsemen had not a moment to lose. They rode up to the gate of the farm-house and called for the man of the house. All was silent for a moment, then a tall girl, dressed in a faded calico dress and sun-bonnet, came modestly but fearlessly to the gate, while from the windows peered the faces of an old woman, pale and thin, and several children, and in evident alarm, but quite helpless. The girl was, it seemed, the only one present who had the courage to answer the call.

She came boldly to the gate and said, in a calm, sweet voice:

"Do you wish to speak with me?"

"No," said Soc, politely, but firmly, "send your father; I wish to speak with him."

"Sir, my father is a soldier. I have not seen my father for more than twelve months."

"Then send your brother; I will speak with him."

"Sir," said the girl sadly, "my brothers are in the army, all but George, the youngest, who is too small to serve you; he is but 8 years old."

"All rebels," thought Soc, but he did not say so. "She evidently thinks that we are rebels—I will keep up the delusion. My dear young lady," added he, in his blandest manner; "we are pursued by the Federals; we are hemmed in the bend of this treacherous river, and cut off from all escape. We must cross it in the next two hours or be captured. Do you know of any ford? We have been driven off from the main road. We must cross here or not at all."

"There is a ford safe enough in the day time, but a little dangerous after night, and very hard to find. I will show you the way myself," and she called to her little brother to saddle and bridle the horse quickly.

The little fellow came out with bridle in his hand—he was used to obeying this big sister—but he was crying piteously.

"Oh, Sis!" and he seized hold of her dress, "are these 'reb' men going to take you off?"

"No, Georgie, dear," said the sister, stooping and kissing the boy tenderly "I am going to show them the ford. I will be back in half an hour. Run now and catch Prince and saddle him right quick; that's a darling. These are honest men—soldiers. Brave men like these never make war on mother and children."

"Very true, my good woman," said Soc, with a quaver in his voice; "we are not making war on Southern women, and may God forbid that we should ever harm you or yours!"

"Amen!" said a chorus of voices on either side of Sergeant Holman.

"There is little danger," was all the young lady said, as she sprang lightly into the saddle and led the way, telling the soldiers to follow. "There is no time to be lost," said she, laying whip to her horse. "Follow me!"

IX.

It was all the jaded cavalry-horses could do to keep up with "Prince" and his fair rider.

"Are you not afraid this woman will discover our identity and lead us into an ambuscade?" said one of the horsemen in a whisper, to Holman, as they disappeared into a dense forest.

"No," said he, "I had as lief suspect an angel. Did you not hear what she said; did you not see how tenderly she soothed and comforted that child? Don't talk to me of treachery! She is a rebel, no doubt, but she will see us safely over the river, never fear."

"Halt!"

It was the voice of the young lady.

The company came to a halt.

"Now," said she, "the path runs down the stream for nearly one hundred yards before it reaches the water. It is very narrow. If you miss it six inches, one way or another, you are lost. Single file; slowly, gently; follow me; keep in sight of each other; don't press too closely; forward, march!"

In a few seconds the whole company was in the midst of the stream, which was breast-deep to the horses.

"Halt!"

The company again halted.

"Now," said she, "the danger is not yet half over. The ascent is most difficult. Be careful not to crowd each other, and follow me."

It was a long, tortuous, slippery pathway, and very dangerous, but all reached the opposite bank in safety.

The men were profuse of thanks. One was ill-bred enough to offer her his purse, which he heartily regretted the next moment, for she calmly said:

"Sir, do you suppose that I would risk my life for money?"

The trooper humbly begged her pardon.

If the men were grateful, how much more must Soc Holman have felt beholden to the fair young rebel who had saved his life? He lingered at her side. At last he ventured to speak.

"It is strange," he said, "that you have not discovered our disguise, for we are not rebels, but Union soldiers."

"I knew it all the time," she said, calmly.

"And yet you risked your life for us?"

"Yes, and why not? I am a Unionist; my father and brothers are in the Union army."

"And you would have let us go without telling us this, had I not quizzed you?"

"Yes; it is not for me to boast of what I did or of the motives that induced me; I was only too happy to save you and your men. That I succeeded in doing so was glory enough for me."

"Tell me your name," said Soc, in a burst of earnest enthusiasm, "that I may remember you, love—no, that can never be," he added, in a lower tone—"for I love another—but please tell me your name, that I may bless you all the days of my life—that I may tell her to whom I owe my life, and she, too, will love you as long as life shall last!"

"My name is Minnie Howard," she said, in that sweet tone of voice, which had in other days been so dear to young Holman, when they were so happy and confident in each other's love.

X.

Had it not been so dark—could Minnie Howard have seen the strange expression on Holman's face at the sound of her voice, when she pronounced her own name, she would have been startled, surely.

"Move onward, boys," said Soc to the horsemen who stood awaiting orders. "I must see Miss Howard safely across over the river."

"Be careful, Sergeant," "Don't venture across," "The rebels are on the other side," were the parting words of warning as the men rode off, leaving Soc alone with Minnie. It had not occurred to any of them that this could be Minnie Howard, of Iowa. They had less cause to remember that name and voice; they had forgotten both, or else did not recognize either.

When they disappeared in the darkness Soc said:

"Miss Howard"—it was the second time in his life that he had ever addressed or spoken of her as "Miss"—"I said a moment ago that I loved another."

"I must go, now," said she, in a firm but gentle tone. "You need not endanger yourself to put me safely across the stream. I am quite familiar with the road; the rebels, should I meet them, will do me no harm. Good night!" and, lowering her voice almost to a whisper, "May God bless you and the noble cause for which you are fighting!" She reined her horse toward the river bank, but Soc detained her gently.

"Hear me," he said. "There is no harm in listening to what I am going to say. I am a soldier, and I claim to be a gentleman. You say your name is Minnie Howard. The woman I love, honor, and adore is of that name. I have not seen Minnie—my Minnie—for more than three years."

"Your name?" said Minnie, breaking into the conversation, with an impatient and bewildering tone of voice.

"Holman."

"Soc?"

"The very same."

"Then you have found your Minnie, and thank God, I have found a lover, too, whom I had almost despaired of ever seeing again!" And she fell to crying, while Soc held her gently to his bosom.

The lovers embraced fondly, kissed a loving good-by, with new vows of eternal devotion, separated to meet again "when this cruel war is over." After the stars and stripes again waved over every State in the Union, and peace returned to bless a re-united country, Soc Holman returned to Minnie, and they were married.

Supposing his son was dead, old man Holman was too happy when Soc returned on a visit to Iowa, accompanied by his bride, to feel the least indignant at his forbidden marriage. He gave Soc his patrimony and his blessing, and the young man returned to the South, where he now resides on a fine plantation, not far from the Howard mansion, which his father-in-law now owns, thanks to his kind brother. The father and his two sons returned safely from the war, and, notwithstanding he and his neighbors fought against each in the war, they all live in perfect peace. The old man is a Justice of the Peace, and one of his sons is now Sheriff of his county. Soc might have held places of trust and honor had he not preferred the peace and quiet of private life. Surrounded by all that a man can well desire, he finds in the society of wife and children a glorious surcease from the stormy days of his youth, and he often declares that God has blessed him above his deserts, but Minnie does not think so; what woman ever did when estimating the happiness of the man she loves? And this, kind reader, is the happy termination of an ex-Confederate yarn.—Chicago Ledger.

How "Tom Jones" Was Sold.

We are told of Fielding's "Tom Jones" that, when the work was completed, the author, being at the time hard pressed for money, took it to a second-rate publisher, with a view of selling it for what it would fetch at the moment. He left it with the bookseller, and called upon him next day for his decision. The publisher hesitated, and requested another day for consideration; and at parting Fielding offered him the manuscript for £25. On his way home Fielding met Thomson, the poet, whom he told of the negotiation for the sale of the manuscript; when Thomson, knowing the high merit of the work, conjured him to be off the bargain, and offered to find a better purchaser. Next morning Fielding hastened to his appointment with as much apprehension lest the bookseller should keep to his bargain as he had felt the day before, lest he should altogether decline it. To the author's great joy, the ignorant trafficker in literature declined, and returned the manuscript.

He next set off with a light heart to his friend Thomson; and the novelist and the poet then went to Andrew Millar, the great publisher of the day. Millar, as was his practice with works of light reading, handed the manuscript to his wife, who, having read it, advised him by no means to let it slip through his fingers. Millar now invited the two friends to meet him at a coffee-house in the Strand, where, after dinner, the bookseller, with great caution, offered Fielding £200 for the manuscript. The novelist was amazed at the largeness of the offer. "Then, my good sir," said he, recovering himself from this unexpected stroke of good fortune, "give me your hand—the book is yours; and waiter," continued he, "bring a couple of bottles of your best port." Before Millar died, he had cleared £13,000 by "Tom Jones," out of which he generously made Fielding various presents, to the amount of £2,000; and, when he died, he bequeathed a handsome legacy to each of Fielding's sons.—Galignani.

Getting to the Rear.

The following, related by an officer of the Stonewall brigade, may interest some of our soldier friends:

While Jackson's corps was cautiously moving to the flank and rear of the Union army at Chancellorsville, the Confederate cavalry in advance became engaged with the enemy. Soon a wounded and bleeding trooper was seen emerging from the woods in front. After looking around, he moved in the direction from which the infantry were marching, as if seeking the rear, or, as the average gray-jacket would say, the r'ar. Soon afterward rapid firing explained that the blue-jackets had closed in behind Jackson, and it was not long before the poor cavalryman was seen coming back again. When opposite the "Stonewall," another cavalryman from the front also arrived. No. 1 at once recognized him, and said, "Hallo, Bill—wounded?"

"Yes," said No. 2, "but not bad. Let's git to the r'ar."

At which No. 1 exclaimed: "This is the darnedest fight I've bin in yit. It hain't got no r'ar."—Harper's Magazine.

An Artist's Luck.

A lady called at a photograph gallery in Columbus, Ohio, with a baby whose photograph she desired taken. The necessary arrangements were made, the little cherub was propped up in a chair in the best possible position, and the artist was proceeding to adjust his camera, when the mother excused herself for a moment. The moment grew to minute, and the minutes to hours. In short, the mother did not come back, and the artist finds himself with a ready-made baby on his hands, whose name and origin are unknown to him.

A Fight for the Standard.

Shortly after the civil war had ended, a young rustic in army blue, with a musket, stopped on his homeward way at our house. That faded dingy blue was the most interesting color in the world then, and, as this soldier, scarcely more than a boy, ate his dinner we felt grateful to him. He had a simple, narrow mind, which all his experiences of camp and field had not deeply impressed. Presently he said he'd got somethin' he didn't know but we'd like to see, and pulled out of a breast-pocket a leather case, which he opened, disclosing a large bronze medal. We read the inscription; it was to the effect that the Congress of the United States presented this medal to Corporal —— for bravery in the field. Then, of course, he had to tell us the story, something after this fashion:

"Wal, ye see, it was down the peninselar one of them days when we didn't seem to be doin' nothin' 'twuz any use. We was most up the side 'f a hill an' ez quiet ez a graveyard, but sometimes if a feller on'y showed his head over the top he see and heard enough, I tell ye. I kep' creepin' up an' lookin' down, an' I see a lot of rebs 'twan't doin' any more'n we, an' a big feller in the middle; he stood kind o' careless and sassy, holdin' a hansum flag. I told the feller next me, sez I, 'I snum! I'm goin' to get that flag!' He sez, 'Don't you be a darned fool!' But I jest dropped my gun and run down hill, 'n I was right inter 'em 'fore they seemed to notice it; 'n I run right up to the big feller an' says, 'Here, you, give me that flag!' 'n he jest let go, 'n I put it. I tell ye, I didn't wait to say, 'Thank'ee,' nor anythin'; 'n if the bullets didn't sing 'round my way fer a while! But they didn't take no sort of aim, 'n I got up to the boys all right. I tell ye, that big feller must have felt kinder silly when he thought ou't!"—Springfield Republican.

Advice to a Young Man.

No, my son, the world does not owe you a living. The world does not need you, just yet; you need the world. If you can convince the world that you are necessary to its well-being, its happiness, its pleasure, its moral existence, then the world will begin to claim you and make room for you in the body pews, with the softest cushions and the easiest foot-stools. But don't fall into the common error of supposing that the world owes you a living. It doesn't owe you anything of the kind. The world isn't responsible for your being. It didn't send for you; it never asked you to come here, and in no sense is it obliged to support you now that you are here. Your living is here—a good, comfortable living. Plenty to eat, plenty to wear; an abundance of good, healthful, hard work; ripples of laughter and sprinkles of tears; hours of happiness and moments of heartache; days of labor and nights of rest; duties to be performed and rewards to be won; it is all here, son—disappointments, struggles, success and honors—but the world doesn't owe you one of them; not one. You can't collect your living as you would a debt, by simply presenting your bill, or giving your lawyer the account to sue. You have to work for it, son, and work like a Trojan, too. When you hear a man say that the world owes him a living, and he is going to have it, make up your mind that he is just making himself a good excuse for stealing a living. The world doesn't owe any man anything, son. It will give you anything you earn, and you just look out over the world and know that all the plunder you can gather in by honest work is yours, and no more. If you can't get any, why none of it is yours, and if you can reach out and carry away ten times as much as your neighbor, why that is all yours, and he has no right to wait and whine over his bad luck and want you to divide. And, my son, in all human probability you will not want to divide. I hope you may, but it is very likely that you won't.—Bob Burdette.

More About Theodosia Burr.

The reported confession of a dying sailor in a Michigan poorhouse, a few months ago, concerning the death of Aaron Burr's daughter, Theodosia, has attracted much attention, and facts going to support the aged pirate's statement have recently come to light in the course of discussion and correspondence on the subject in North and South Carolina. The dying man in Michigan said he belonged to a gang of pirates who captured the vessel on which the lady named took passage from Georgetown, and asserted that he witnessed her death by being compelled to "walk the plank" into the sea; and now comes Dr. W. G. Pool, of Elizabeth City, N. C., who is the possessor of an oil-portrait which bears a remarkable resemblance to the engraving of "Theodosia" in Davis' history of Aaron Burr, and which, he says, he obtained in 1869 from an old lady named Mann, who lived near Nag's Head. According to Mrs. Mann's story, her husband found the picture in the cabin of a pilot-boat that came ashore near Kitty Hawk, with sail set and rudder fastened. The vessel bore evidences of having been plundered and abandoned, but there were no signs of violence. That a pilot-boat of the description of the one that sailed from Georgetown, S. C., for New York, having on board Mrs. Theodosia Burr Alston, came on shore at Kitty Hawk about that time, there is no matter of doubt. That the articles taken from the wreck, including the portrait now in possession of Dr. Pool, and articles of female wearing apparel shown him by Mrs. Mann did once belong to a lady of culture—such as Theodosia Burr—there is no manner of doubt. So that the unfortunate Theodosia "walked the plank" seems probable, if the story of the dying man in Michigan and that of the living Mrs. Mann in North Carolina are taken in connection.—New Orleans Democrat.

THE Boston newspapers tell of a stage-struck woman who got a divorce from her husband in order to become an actress, failed dismally behind the footlights, returned to her home, and begged to be made a wife again, which was done by a remarriage.

ALMOST THERE.

Once, when the bow'rs were fresh and sweet
With fragrant bloom of apple,
I took with me a trusting child
Unto the village chapel.
The bell's deep tones—clear and slow—
Rang out on the scented air;
The child looked up, and, smiling, said:
"We are almost there."

And, once again, when the apple bloom
Gave fragrance to the bower,
I sat beside that self-same child—
It was her dying hour.
She said: "Angels now are bearing me
To lands where all is fair;"
Then she closed her eyes and whispered low:
"We are almost there!"

English Prices for American Goods.

One of the commercial puzzles yet to be explained is the reason why you can buy excellent "Blue Point" oysters in London for a shilling a dozen; why the Atlantic and Scribner's monthlies can be bought there for the same price; how it is that American butter, cheese and beef are now to be found in nearly every village of Scotland and England, while the greater part of the seacoast population of Wales live on American canned goods, all of which can be bought for far less than here—a good cut of American beef, for instance, costs 2 pence half-penny, or 5 cents a pound. Developing our commerce is a good thing, but is there any reason why we should not be able to get things produced here for at least the same price that our British cousins can? If the Atlantic and Scribner's monthlies are to be bought in London for a shilling, why should we pay more than 25 cents for them? or, what is a more vital question, with American beef at 5 and 6 cents a pound at retail, why is it that the lowest price in the wholesale market here is 7½ cents a pound, and that without the added expense of transportation and other incidentals? An explanation is in order from the producers.—Philadelphia Press.

SCANDALS OF GRANTISM.

The Formation of the District of Columbia Ring.

[From the New York Sun.]

Gen. Grant was no stranger in the city of Washington when he was called to the Presidency. From the close of the war to the time of his inauguration, a period of nearly four years, he had lived there, in a house presented to him by some of those admiring friends whom he subsequently rewarded with offices. He had found associates by that natural law of selection which brings together those of a kind. A fiber of honesty ran through Andrew Johnson's character, and, although he was susceptible to flattery, he could not be used by the promoters of the scandalous jobs. But with the coming of Grant they saw the promise of ample rewards for their nefarious industry.

The city of Washington was governed for many years with reasonable economy by its own people. It got its charter from Congress and was subject to the Federal Government instead of to a State, but otherwise it did not differ essentially from other municipal corporations. Most of its inhabitants derived their incomes from the strangers within their gates, but they countenanced no intermeddling with their local affairs, and the majority of them were rather parsimonious in the matter of public expenditures. The Mayor of the city for the six years preceding 1868 was Richard Wallach, a war Democrat and an honest man. He was swept from power by the introduction of negro suffrage in the District of Columbia, and Sayles J. Bowen, a Republican of large officeholding capacity, was elected to succeed him. Under his rule the expenses of the city were doubled, the resources of the treasury exhausted, and the pay of teachers and laborers withheld because all the public money had been diverted to illegitimate purposes. Bowen was Mayor when Grant came to the Presidency. The floodgates of extravagance had already been lifted, but the methods of plunder were not perfected.

The first scheme for tapping the public till was audacious but grotesque. A company was formed in September, 1869, which proposed to hold a "Grand Universal Exposition of All Nations" in the city of Washington in 1871. Congress was asked to make an appropriation of $3,000,000. The Government was also expected to provide land for the buildings, to furnish from the navy ships for the free transportation of exhibits, and to bestir itself, through its foreign Ministers and Consuls, in puffing into success this great international swindle. Ulysses S. Grant was chosen President of the General Executive Committee and ex-officio Chairman of the Local Executive Committee. He accepted these dubious honors and openly consorted with the vulgar knaves who originated this absurd scheme. In December, 1869, the bill chartering the company and making the appropriation of $3,000,000 was introduced in the Senate by Mr. Patterson, of New Hampshire. This Patterson was the full flower of that plant of Christian statesmanship which bloomed and rotted under Grant. He had been a professor in Dartmouth College before he was made a Senator in Congress. His success was hailed by cultured flunkies as a recognition of the "educated classes," and as the advent of the "gentleman in politics." But, under the cloak of hypocrisy, this "gentleman" carried the weapons of the public plunderer. He was driven into disgraceful retirement at last by reason of his connection with the Credit Mobilier. But, in truth, his most shameless acts were wrought as the apologist and confederate of the District of Columbia ring. While Patterson was working for the success of this exposition steal, he was secretly engaged in real-estate speculations with the lobbyists and spoils-seekers who had it in charge. Senator Thurman denounced the job as "a humbug, imposing an expense of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 on the treasury of the United States." But it was dragged in and out of Congress till near the end of the session (June, 1870), when it was permitted by its sponsors to die, because larger plots monopolized their attention.

On the 20th of May, 1870, an act was passed turning over Public Reservation No. 7, on Pennsylvania avenue, between Seventh and Ninth streets, to the Washington Market Company for a term of ninety-nine years. The value of the land thus disposed of was $500,000, and the franchise carried privileges worth $500,000 more. In return for this royal grant the Market Company was to build a magnificent City Hall, and was to pay an annual rental to the poor fund of the district. But the rental was evaded, and an appropriation was smuggled through Congress to pay for the City Hall which was not built.

In 1870 Mayor Bowen was defeated as a candidate for re-election, and was succeeded by Mr. G. Emery, who ran on the Citizens' ticket. This ticket was supported in the main by men who desired to check the abuses and stop the reckless extravagance of the city Government. But it was also used by certain tricksters to promote their selfish ends. Among the men elected to the Board of Aldermen on that ticket was Alexander R. Shepherd, who was destined to figure in history as the friend of Grant and the boss of the District ring. Shepherd deserves all the notoriety he has attained. He was a plumber by calling, but not by trade, for he had never served an apprenticeship. He was not a natural leader of men. The qualities which enabled the late William M. Tweed to rob the metropolis were not despicable qualities, albeit they were put to a despicable use. He would have gained prominence in any sphere of life, and under almost any circumstances, by reason of his quick grasp of affairs and his intuitive knowledge of men. But Shepherd was of different stuff. If his promotion had depended on the votes of the people, he would never have risen above the office of Alderman. Even to secure that place he resorted to false pretenses, professing to favor the reforms which he sought to defeat. He was brutal to his workmen, patronizing to those whom he considered his equals, but obsequious to the dispensers of public favors. As soon as he entered the Common Council he began to plot for the overthrow of the municipal Government. As Chairman of the Finance Committee he recommended a reduction of appropriations from a million and a quarter to a million dollars, saying: "These taxes will bear heavily upon our people, and it therefore becomes our duty to administer their affairs with rigid economy." At this very time he had an agent on the road to negotiate for the monopoly of certain wood pavements, which were laid at a price which enabled their owners to divide evenly with the ruling powers.

During the spring and summer of 1870 the Common Council of Washington directed that Pennsylvania avenue be paved with wood, and that Louisiana and Indiana avenues be repaved. The property-owners on Louisiana avenue protested so vigorously against wood that stone was substituted for that portion of the work which was made a direct tax on them, but the center of the street was paved with wood, which quickly rotted away, leaving for years a suggestive contrast between honest work and jobbery. After three months' delay the contract for paving Pennsylvania avenue was let in four sections to the highest bidders, under that form of competition which flourished during Grant's administration. On the 1st of November, 1870, the contractors who had secured the job gave a fine champagne supper to invited guests in an improvised building near their shops. Wormley furnished the viands and wine, and the crowd that gathered saw the population of Washington doubled before their stimulated vision. The glory of wooden pavements was extolled by intoxicated blockheads hired for the purpose. The pavement was quickly laid, the surplus profit of $150,000 fairly divided among the embryo ring, and in February, 1871, on the birthday of George Washington (shade of the mighty dead forgive them!) the people of the capital turned out en masse to participate in a carnival and fete which the ring rascals had arranged for their delectation.

These preliminary paving jobs served a double purpose. They diverted comfortable sums from the city treasury into the pockets of their promoters, and they frightened conservative citizens at the possible excesses of a free Government in a place where the newly-enfranchised negroes held the balance of political power. The ring played upon this fear, and gradually unfolded its plan for erecting a Territorial Government in the District, in which the President of the United States should be vested with the appointing power, and Congress should ultimately be made responsible for all expenses. The plan, viewed from the standpoint of pure selfishness, was quite plausible, as a means of lightening the burdens of direct taxation. Two years of Bowen had made the people ready for almost any change, and when old Hannibal Hamlin introduced a bill in the Senate, in February, 1870, "to provide for a Territorial Government for the District of Columbia," it was received with more local favor than opposition. It passed the Senate in May without much discussion, and went to the House, where it slumbered in the District Committee till it was supposed to have died. But, on Jan. 20, 1871, Burton C. Cook, of Illinois, Chairman of the committee, reported back the bill with numerous amendments, which made it virtually a new act. This was crowded through a thin House by a vote of 97 to 58. On the same day Boss Shepherd, who had foreknowledge of the event, rushed off to the Board of Trade and offered a resolution "hailing with joy" the passage of the bill, "as the beginning of a new era in the development of our business interests"—which indeed it was. The board appointed Shepherd, Hallet Kilbourne and three others a committee to urge the Senate to accept the House substitute for the original bill without alteration. The Senate, however, demanded a conference committee, and in that committee the bill underwent a number of changes, all made in the interest of the ring. The bill finally passed on the 14th of February, 1871. Grant withheld his signature a week. This delay was not a concession to decency. He had no hesitation about approving the act, but he wanted to give the knaves who had the carnival in charge a double cause for rejoicing—at the incubation of a monstrous swindle, as well as over the completion of a paving job.

The Territorial Government of the District of Columbia consisted of a Governor, a Secretary, a Council, a House of Delegates, and a Board of Public Works. The Governor was clothed with all the powers of the most favored State Executives; he could veto bills, grant pardons, appoint officers, and posture as the center of a military staff. The Council, which was a sort of mock Senate, was appointed, as were also the members of the Board of Public Works. The House of Delegates and a Delegate in Congress were to be elected by the people. But the Delegate in Congress had no vote, and the House of Delegates might as well have had none, for the members were powerless for good and superfluous for evil.

Mayor Emery was induced to favor the abolition of his office, in the belief that he would be made the first Governor of the District. He had for a backer the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, of whose church he was a member. Dr. Newman held himself in readiness at all times and under all circumstances to certify to Grant's sobriety, honesty and innate piety. He was moderately certain that he had never seen the President drink, absolutely certain that he had never seen him steal, and profoundly convinced that he would be a devout Methodist, if he were any sort of a Christian. In return for his services, Dr. Newman asked only an occasional office for himself, his wife, and his immediate flock.

Boss Shepherd was also a candidate for Governor. His chief advocate was Henry D. Cooke, of Jay Cooke & Co. This Cooke was the President's banker, and in his opinion was the wisest financier of modern times—wiser even than Boutwell or Richardson or brother-in-law Corbin. That he might not be forced to take sides between Shepherd and Emery, Grant rejected them both and conferred the office of Governor of the District on H. D. Cooke. With this action Parson Newman could find no fault, for Mr. Cooke was loud in his religious professions. It was he who negotiated for the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington a large loan from the Freedmen's Savings Bank on worthless second-mortgage bonds. As these bonds were never paid, the loan was equivalent to a gift from the poor negroes to the association. Some of them had worked very long and hard for the little sums which they deposited in the bank, in the hope, by-and-by, of owning a home, or of giving to their children advantages of which they themselves had been deprived by slavery.

Gov. Cooke was the vain, pretentious figurehead of the District ring. Shepherd was quick to see that under this quack banker he could plunder the treasury with greater ease and safety than he could if he himself had been placed at the head of the Territorial Government. His own religious professions (for Shepherd also managed a Sunday school and "ran" a church) had failed to deceive anybody, while his financiering had been limited to a few paving jobs and to bulging his bills for plumbing and gasfitting at the Capitol. But Cooke was a certificated Christian and the Government's pet banker. Under his wing it was safe to steal.

Boss Shepherd was made a member of the Board of Public Works. This board consisted of four members besides the Governor, who was ex-officio its President. What the Board of Audit was in New York under the Tweed ring, the Board of Public Works was in Washington under the Grant ring. Shepherd was its Vice President and controlling power [illegible] to dictate the appointment of other members. The first of these was A. B. Mullett, then Supervising Architect of the Treasury. This appointment was a stroke of genius. Mullett was the man of all others whose favor venal Congressmen courted. If they wanted new public buildings in their respective districts, they must secure, first of all, Mullett's recommendation, and, after the new structure was authorized, they counted on him to award fat contracts to their friends. Mullett met these advances in a gracious spirit, but gently reminded each importunate Congressman that he, too, had a nest to feather; that favors should not be one-sided; that the beautifying and regenerating of the national capital was his particular hobby, and that a liberal appropriation would be gratefully appreciated by the Board of Public Works. Thus the ring and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury played into each other's hands in making Congress subservient to their purpose.

The third member of the board, and its Treasurer, was James A. Magruder, better known as Stubb Magruder. He worked with great diligence to confuse his accounts, so as to make it difficult to tell what part of the public money was spent and what was stolen. The records show that $1,000,000 which he claimed to have paid out in his official position was entered on his books.

S. P. Brown was the original fourth member of the board. He was a defaulting navy agent, but not acceptable to the ring. They finally crowded him out on the exposure of the fact that he was interested in a contract.

Grant appointed the members of the Council at the dictation of Shepherd.

It was necessary for the ring to control the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds. Gen. Michler, the incumbent of that office, was an honest man, but, he possessed an unfortunate fondness for liquor. The ring deliberately arranged a round of social gayeties to keep him perpetually in a bewildered state. But, finding that they could not make him absolutely subservient to their will, they arranged to rid themselves of him, and in June, 1871, the President ordered him to the Pacific coast.

Orville E. Babcock, Grant's private secretary, was immediately detailed as Gen. Michler's successor. Between him and Boss Shepherd a perfect understanding existed. Babcock, as Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, was to guard the rights of the people against the excesses of the ring. Shepherd, as chief of the Board of Public Works, was at liberty to go as far as Babcock permitted. And these two—one appointed nominally to check the extortions of the other—were partners in speculation, bound together by the cohesive power of public plunder, and equally interested in making the expenditure as extravagant as their mingled greed and audacity might suggest.

With other preliminaries arranged, it was deemed essential to buy back the followers of ex-Mayor Bowen and conciliate the negroes. Accordingly, Bowen's chief counselor, William A. Cook, an unscrupulous lawyer, was made attorney to the Board of Public Works, and a colored man named Johnson was appointed District Treasurer. Johnson had failed as a barber and restaurant-keeper, but was considered competent to keep the public money.

Nothing remained but to buy the local newspapers, and this was an easy task. The editors of the leading organs in Washington were given a slice of the spoils, and while the ring lasted they sang its praises continually, and pocketed their share of the plunder.

It will be seen that the ring at its inception embraced: 1. Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States; 2. Henry D. Cooke; 3. Alexander R. Shepherd and the whole gang of disreputable characters, including the Washington journalists whom he controlled; 4. Orville E. Babcock, who sold himself for a price and betrayed his trust as guardian of the Government's interests; 5. A. B. Mullett and the Representatives in Congress whom he influenced; 6. Senator J. W. Patterson, of New Hampshire, and De Golyer Garfield, of Ohio; 7. A gang of Pennsylvania contractors, who taught the lessons of addition, division and silence.

It remains to narrate the acts by which this comprehensive ring robbed the people of $43,000,000.

A fire was discovered in Union Block, at Crawfordsville, the other night. It originated in the room occupied by John L. Miller, dealer in boots and shoes, from which it quickly spread to the adjoining store-room of Bryant & Son, hardware dealers. The stock in each of these rooms was totally destroyed. The fire company, by energetic work, prevented the flames from spreading further. The total loss is $15,000, on which there was an insurance of $9,000.

The Indiana Bureau of Statistics has the following figures in relation to the churches: They show the approximate number of churches in the State to be 4,857. The membership comprises one-third of the entire population, and increased during the past year 10 per cent., while the increase of the population was but 3; so that, according to arithmetical progression, if the increase continues at this rate it will comprise the entire population in about fourteen years. The increase in the value of church property from 1870 to 1878 was 14 per cent.

Diamond Purchasers.

Purchasing diamonds for the retail trade is, I am told, a very difficult and delicate task. The buyer takes his seat at a table, with a large sheet of white paper spread out before him. On this paper is poured out the contents of certain of the packages, in which diamonds are delivered to the hands of the wholesale dealers. The keen eye of the purchasing expert at once singles out the flawed, shallow, ill-shaped or yellow stones. These are swept out ruthlessly, and are definitely rejected. The remaining stones must next be paired—a very difficult and delicate operation.

To facilitate it a tin plate mounted on feet and pierced with holes in graduated sizes is produced. On this the selected diamonds are laid, and are sifted to and fro until each diamond is fitted into a hole proportionate to its size. Then the stones are subjected to a second and final examination, the buyer pouncing upon every one that shows any defect, such as irregularity of shape, lack of brilliancy, dullness of water or yellowness of tint. The matched diamonds are then carefully put up in pairs, either in small cases or simply folded in papers. The refuse diamonds are generally sold to French jewelers, to make up the wonderful flowers and stars and insects that one sees blazing under the gaslight in the windows of the shops on the Palais Royal.

In fact, French costumers as a class are much more easily suited in diamonds than are Americans. They like something showy, and look more to the general effect than to the absolute perfection of each individual stone. I would, therefore, advise our country people, when they come abroad, to address themselves to American jewelers when they wish to buy diamonds, and not suffer themselves to be tempted by the dazzling gewgaws displayed on the Rue de la Paix or in the Palais Royal. They will only pay half as much again for them as they are worth if they buy in those latter places, and then, if they wish to dispose of their purchases or to have them reset in a new form, they will find themselves with a lot of flawed and imperfect stones on their hands.—Paris letter.

A Stray Billet-Doux.

Three ministers sat in the pulpit of East Liberty Church, on Sunday evening. A rising young artist who has a comfortable studio—if studios are very comfortable—on a street running from Water to Liberty, who is one of the workers in said church, walked bravely to the pulpit before service and gave one of the ministers a notice to read before benediction. The services were about being closed, when the young artist again went forward and reminded the minister that he must not forget the notice of the temperance meeting down town. The minister begged pardon for his remissness, took the slip of paper from his vest pocket, read it, looked dazed, rubbed his eyes, then smiled. He passed the note to a brother minister, and he smiled. Then he passed it to the other minister, and he smiled. Then all smiled. Then No. 1 remarked that he would like to speak to the young artist. The latter advanced to the pulpit, received the notice, looked at it, colored very red, and looked as though he would like to jump through the window. He had given the pastor a notice of a temperance meeting which read something like this:

Dear John: I am sorry I can't let you come to see me as frequently as usual, but papa and mamma think I should not receive even my very dear friends during the Lenten season. It's awfully disagreeable if not positively cruel, but you know we Episcopalians can't go back on Lent. I shall see you oftener than usual, I hope, when the holy season is gone where the woodbine twineth. Yours with friendship,

Exactness.

There is nothing like exactness. An officer having to proceed on duty from one station to another, in making out his claim for traveling expenses put down the item, "Porter, 6d.," an item struck out by the War Office. Not being inclined to be defrauded of his sixpence, the officer informed the authorities that the porter had conveyed his baggage from one station to another, and that had he not employed him he must have taken a cab, which would have cost 18d. In reply came an official notification that his claim would be allowed, but instructing him that he ought to have used the term "porterage" instead of "porter." He was determined, however, to have the last word, and wrote back that he was unable to find any precedent for using the word "porterage," but for the future would do so, and at the same time requested to know if he was to use the term "cabbage" when he meant "cab." —Chambers' Journal.

A Question of His Own Asking.

One cold winter evening a knot of village worthies were convened around a stove in a country store in a western town, warming their fingers by the stovepipe and telling stories and cracking jokes. The schoolmaster, the blacksmith, the barber, the constable, the clerks and the storekeeper, all were there.

After they had drank cider and smoked cigars to their hearts' content, and when all the current topics of the day had been exhausted, the schoolmaster proposed a new kind of bitters to remove the monotony of the evening.

Each one was to propound a puzzle to his neighbors, and whoever should ask a question that he himself could not solve was to pay the cider reckoning for the entire party.

The idea took at once, and the schoolmaster, "by virtue of his office," called Dick D——, whom most folks thought a fool and a few a knave, to put the first question.

"Wal, neighbors," said Dick, drawling out his words and looking ineffably dull and stupid, "you've seen where squirrels dig their holes, haven't you? Can any one of you tell me the reason why they never throw out any dirt?"

This was a "poser," and even the "master" had to "give it up."

It now devolved on Dick to explain.

"The reason is this, that they first begin at the bottom of the hole."

"Stop! stop!" cried the schoolmaster, startled out of all prudence by so monstrous an assertion. "Pray, now, how does the squirrel get there?"

"Ah! master," replied the cunning fool, "that's a question of your own asking!"

The result had been anticipated. The "schoolmaster was abroad" at that particular juncture.

The Biter was Bitten.

In New Hampshire is a well-known eccentric individual, self-constituted curer of all ills—a sort of panacea, "body and soul, head, heart and conscience doctor," who, with all his eccentricities, has a fun of actual wit that is hard to beat.

Not long ago the doctor was called to the witness stand. The opposing counsel, who is said sometimes to wet his whistle with "liquor pisen," knowing the doctor's peculiarities, ventured in cross-examining him, to show him up a bit.

"What is your business?" pompously inquired the counsel.

"My business is to do what little good I can to my fellow man," modestly replied the doctor.

"But that doesn't answer my question," grufly answered the counsel. "How do you spend your time?"

"Why, 'squire, it takes nearly all my time to do what I said," replied the doctor.

"But I want something more definite. How do you spend your time?" stoutly demanded the counsel.

"That depends upon circumstances, according to the nature of the case," explained the doctor. "For instance, if I were going to begin on you, the first thing I should do would be to advise you to sign the temperance pledge."

Household Recipes.

[Boston Trancript.]

The remove stains from books—Translate them into better language.

To remove spots of grease, oil or fat from woolens—Saturate the cloth with kerosene or naptha, and press it with an iron on the wrong side. Then treat it with a lighted match. This is the only sure way to remove grease from woolens.

To make your chimney draw—Send it to a Boston school, where it can have the advantage of regulation instruction.

To cleanse brass—Turn the hydrant on the sewing machine and book agent who knocketh at your door.

To keep bread from molding—Give it to the poor woman who keeps boarders and hens.

To prevent cake getting dry—Give the small boy access to the pantry.

Eleven Turkeys.

An old toper started for home one night from "down town" in his normal condition, with a turkey he had obtained for a holiday dinner. He found the road very rough, and fell several times over all sorts of obstructions in his path Each time he fell he dropped the turkey, but continued to pick it up again.

On entering his house he steadied himself as well as he was able, and said to his wife: "Here, wifey,(hic) I've got 'leven turkeys for you."

"Eleven turkeys; what do you mean? There is only one."

"There must be 'leven turkeys, wifey, (hic) for I fell down 'leven times, and every time I found a turkey."

Dear Will: Don't kum to see me eny more for a whial any way. Fauther has got awfully skeered about burglars, and he sits up every nite till late with a double-barreled shot gun, watching the back yard. Hendricks' Strong Points.

In speaking of the organization of a Hendricks club at Washington, the N. Y. Express says: "Mr. Hendricks has strong points as a presidential candidate. And one of the strongest points in his favor is the fact that he has kept the democracy of his state united and harmonious, loyal to their principles, devoted to the cause. There are no dissensions in that state. Strong and able men there are, who naturally aspire to leadership, and would fill important offices with credit. Yet they never swerve in their fidelity to the party, which in that state is a unit, and would give a popular majority of 15,000 to ex-Governor Hendricks in spite of all the republicans have done to colonize the state with southern negroes. Mr. Hendricks has a good record. No man can say aught against him. His views are moderate and conservative, fairly representing the democracy of the whole country. He has many elements of popularity, and resembles Lincoln in his sturdy honesty, simplicity, and straightforwardness of his nature, and his hearty sympathy with and regard for the people. He consented to take second place in 1875 against his will, at the urgent solicitations of the leaders of the party in all sections of the country, and the result proved his personal popularity. Among democratic candidates for the nomination his name shines with particular luster.

Home Attractions.

When love and affection are banished from home, life loses its greatest charm. Some homes are full of love and sunshine for strangers, and all ugliness and gloom for the ones for whom they live. To constitute a truly happy home, there should be pretty little adornments on the part of the wife, who thereby shows a desire to please her husband, and to add to the general attractions of her home. A pleasant work on her part, when the over-worked man comes home, often eats away the raw edge of some trouble on his mind, and draws out a corresponding desire to be both agreeable and respectful, which characteristics are always accompanied by affection. What is true of manners is true of dress also. Rudeness, roughness, and impatience are soon followed by insolence, and when sweet temper gives way to anger and discord, the home circle is no longer attractive. A disrespectful manner on the side of husband or wife leads to disastrous consequences.—Waverly Magazine.

SHE KNEW HE WAS THERE.—It was a warm afternoon, and young Mr. Cummagin did not go into the house, but sat down on the porch, as was his custom, after ringing the bell. Her little sister came to the door and looked at him with some curiosity. "Does your sister Mabel know I am here, Nellie?" he asked. "Oh yes," replied the innocent prattler, "I guess she does; she told me to come out and see how shady it made the front yard when you put your feet on the porch railing."

A sign in Towanda, Penn., reads as follows: "John Smith, teacher of cowtillions and other dances—grammar taut in the neatest manner—fresh salt herrin on draft—likewise Godfreys corjial—rutes sassage and other garden truck—N. B. bawl on friday nite—prayer meetin chuesday—also slam singing by the quire."

A young lady who had been married a little over a year wrote to her matter-of-fact old father, saying: "We have the dearest little cottage in the world, ornamented with the most charming little creepers you ever saw." The old man read the letter and exclaimed, "Twins, by thunder."—Keokuk Constitution.

The following explains iself:

Toledo, O., Jan. 28, 1880.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Sirs: Through the advice of friends I was induced to try Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. I have been a sufferer from that disease for twenty years past. My case was pronounced incurable and I was obliged to give up my profession. I have used twelve bottles of Hall's Catarrh Cure and am entirely cured. Physicians called it consumption. I was reduced in weight to 125 pounds; am now as sound as ever and back to my old weight, 160 pounds. Hoping this will reach the eye of my professional friends and the public in general, I am respectfully yours.

THESE ARE NOT INDIANA OPINIONS.

Louisiana Protests Against Tilden.

[New Orleans Picayune, (Dem.).]

In view of the whole field we reaffirm our belief that it would be unwise for the democrats to renominate Governor Tilden.

The Best of Reasons.

[Springfield Republican.]

Tilden in 1876 was the man to nominate because he was stronger than his party. Tilden in 1880 is not the man for the democrats to nominate because he is weaker than his party.

Colorado Sweet Toward the "Claimant."

Fort Collins (Col.) Courier (Dem.).

Tilden failed to fill the bill in 1876, and his entire course since has been such as to drive from his support the best elements of the party—all in fact but those for whom the historical "bar'l" has its allurements. We cannot see how an honest man can conscientiously say that Mr. Tilden has proven himself worthy, either during the campaign of 1876 or since, of a renomination at the hand of the democracy.

The Height of Absurdity.

Genesee, N. Y., Courier, (Dem.)

Mr. Tilden is at the head of a faction numerically strong, and probably as sensitive and unyielding as are most mortals. His nomination would be the height of absurdity, and opposed in this state and at the polls by a mass of say 75,000 democrats—no better democrats, perhaps than his supporters, yet massed in opposition, and strong enough to turn the scale and give Blaine or some other "erupted" fire-eater an easy walk over in the state of New York.

Ohio has Something to Say.

Columbus (O.) Democrat.

We do not believe that Mr. Tilden can carry the state of New York, and without the thirty-five electoral votes of that state the election of the democratic candidate is hardly possible. Last fall John Kelley and Tammany Hall defeated Mr. Tilden's candidate for governor in New York, polling 77,000 votes. The opposition was not so much against Mr. Tilden's candidate as against Mr. Tilden himself. It is against Mr. Tilden now and would be against him next fall. If he should be the democratic candidate for president the 70,000 votes that were cast against Robinson by John Kelley and Tammany Hall will be cast against Mr Tilden next November. If, therefore, Robinson was defeated it is reasonable to conclude that so would Mr. Tilden be. We cannot afford to lose New York.

He Ought to Believe the Party of His Claims.

Memphis Appeal, (Dem.).

The democratic politicians at the north, who, laboring under the belief that Tilden will be backed in the national convention by a solid south may as well dismiss the idea from their minds. He has lost the confidence of the south and cannot regain it. His nomination would be equivalent to defeat. He will not receive the support of even one southern state, not even of Kentucky, where the Courier-Journal is, as it were, moving heaven and earth for him. Tilden, if he is the shrewd, intelligent manager he claims to be, ought to know this, and if he is half as honest as he pretends, will relieve the party of his "claims" and cease to play the role of the "old man of the sea." Tilden is dead to the democracy of the south.

Plain Sailing With Tilden Out of the Way.

Charleston (S. C.) News, (Dem.).

We say to that "with this unfortunate man out of the way there would be plain sailing." It is pretty certain that he will not be a candidate for the nomination himself, but he demands that his wishes shall be consulted in making the nomination, and he is opposed to the nomination of Bayard. The threat is that unless Tilden's man is taken the democrats shall not carry New York. Now we are not disposed to accept Mr. Tilden, a reed shaken in the wind, as dictator of the democratic party. Grant can beat Tilden, and we fear that he can beat any candidate who is known to be forced upon the democratic party by Tilden. It is the duty of the democratic party to put Mr. Tilden down at any cost. There is nothing in him to command respect or admiration. Civility, and that of the commonest kind, is all that he is entitled to, and we are confident that the democratic candidate can carry New York in the face of Tilden's opposition, if the candidate be such a man as Bayard and the people be warned in time that the fight, among other things, is against every sort of dictation and ambitious scheming, both within and outside of the party. To the majority of the people Grant would be a more acceptable "boss" than Tilden.

Good Reasons for not Supporting Tilden.

Malone (N. Y.) Gazette.

An esteemed democratic friend desires to know why we object to the nomination of Mr. Tilden for president. Without mentioning all the grounds upon which we think his nomination would be unwise, we will only say that we shall regard it as suicidal from the fact that in this state the party couldnot be united in his support, and that the decisive and controlling vote of New York would be cast for his opponent. It may or may not be the fault of Mr. Tilden that he has no personal popularity, and that the only warmly attached friends he has are bound to him solely by interest. Governor Robinson was a stronger candidate for governor last year by thousands of votes than Mr. Tilden would be for president this year, and yet he was defeated. We are not in favor of repeating the folly of running a candidate whose defeat is as certain as anything future can be, and for the sake of the democratic party we trust Mr. Tilden will fail in his efforts to obtain the nomination. Our views are more fully expressed in an article in our paper to-day copied from the Catskill Recorder, to which we would refer our friends for a more complete and satisfactory answer to his inquiry.

Then and Now.

[Washington Post.]

Mr Tilden received the solid vote of Maine on the first ballot in the St. Louis convention, but he will not get it at Cincinnati.

Neither will he receive the vote of Connecticut, which was solid for him before. Ex-Governor English or Senator Eaton will be accorded that honor.

Florida was unanimously for him in 1876, but it is doubtful if he gets a vote from her in 1880.

California's vote was then his first and last, but this time it will probably be cast as decidedly for Judge Field.

Illinois was divided fairly in halves, but at Cincinnati will probably be solid for Morrison.

Maryland and Michigan were his by a two-thirds vote before, but both are against him now.

—Mississippi cast her full vote for him then; now she will cast her full vote against him.

New Hampshire was solid at St. Louis but at Cincinnati will at least be divided.

Nevada and Oregon were both for him, but will now be carried for Judge Field.

Virginia then gave him 17 to five; she now will at least reverse the figures if, indeed, she gives him a vote.

Delaware will present Bayard; Ohio and West Virginia, Thurman; Connecticut, English or Eaton; New Jersey, Parke; Pennsylvania, Hancock; Illinois, Morrison; Virginia, Missouri and Michigan, Seymour; California, Field and Indiana Hendricks. Other states will bring forward other candidates, such as Jewett, David Davis and Payne

New York, rent as she is by contending factions, will no longer be the potentiality she was in 1876. Where, then, can any friend or advocate of Mr. Tilden's figure up the 493 votes necessary to nominate him by two-thirds, or even a majority—370?

In 1876 he started out with 404 votes, 84 more than a majority, with seven other gentlemen dividing up the remaining 334. We are not opposing Mr. Tilden's nomination, but simply attempting to show by cold mathematics that it is impossible to replace him where he was on the 28th day of June, 1876. The party has grown stronger in the last four years, while Mr. Tilden has seen his personal and political strength visibly decline.

WEDDED IN SECRET.

A Reformed Gambler Marries a Fort Wayne Belle.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

FORT WAYNE, IND., March 29.—The last sensation here is the secret marriage of Mason Long to Miss Kittie Henderson, one of the most handsome, popular, and accomplished society belles in the city. The marriage was consummated nearly three months ago, but the facts were first made public today.

Mace Long was for many years one of the most notorious characters in this part of the country. He conducted gambling hells in this city, Logansport, La Fayette, and other cities. He was also proprietor of several disreputable saloons here and elsewhere, and manager of a low concert hall and variety dive in La Fayette. Two years ago, when he was conducting a faro bank here, he attended the gospel temperance meetings, signed the temperance pledge, and finally made a profession of religion. He was immersed at the Baptist church in the presence of a vast concourse of people. For more than two years past he has been a leading and prominent member of the Baptist church here, and has devoted his entire time to traveling work as a temperance evangelist. He has been faithful to his pledges, and has ingratiated himself into the confidence of our religious people.

On the fifth day of last January Mr. Long "happened" to be at Sturgis, Michigan. Miss Kittie Henderson, of this city, also "happened" to be in Sturgis Michigan. No license to marry is required. So Mr. Long and Miss Kittie were joined in wedlock by justice of the peace in the presence of two witnesses. Mr. Long left next day for Ohio to prosecute his temperance work there, while his fair bride returned to this city, the fact of the marriage being kept a profound secret by all interested. Long, however, was traveling through Ohio preaching temperance, and being generally regarded as a single man was smiled upon by all the temperance maidens. However, he pined for the society of his bride, and sent for her to join him. She did so, and visited Cleveland, Akron and other places, being introduced by him as his wife. The temperance people sent inquiries to this city, and were informed that Long was not married; so he was ordered by the state temperance society to desist from the work in Ohio at once, as it was believed he was traveling about with a mistress.

Mr. Long thereupon returned to this city and made public the fact of his marriage, with the evidence to prove it. He and his bride say they had good reasons for the secret ceremony, which will by made known in due time.

Senator Bogy's Son.

It appeared that when Mr. Bogy was elected to the senatorial chair, his son—Colonel Joe. Bogy, was rather more elated than his father, and with a natural pride in the paternal success, alluded to it on all occasions. He spoke of his father frequently as the successor of Mr. Benton, and himself as the son of his father.

One night, after a discourse of this nature a crony, a sleepy sort of a chap, remarked that he had been a victim of a peculiar dream a few nights previous, and on being pressed related it:

"I dreamed," said he, "I dreamed I died and went to heaven, and when the angel at the gate asked me who I was I told him. He pointed to a place and told me to wait there; that my turn for examination would come in a few hundred years. While I was waiting I saw Joe. coming. Said the angel, 'who are you?'

"'Don't you know me?' says Joe. "I'm Colonel Joe. Bogy, son of senator Bogy, of Missouri, the successor of Mr. Benton, you know me."

"'Certainly, Colonel Bogy,' replied the angel, 'come in, we've been expecting you. Walk right up,"

"So Joe walked up to the throne, and the Almighty looked at him." Who are you? he asked.

"'I'm Colonel Joe. Bogy,' son of Senator Bogy, of Missouri, who succeeded Mr. Benton."

"'Indeed said the Lord;' I am glad to see you. Christ, My son, get up and give Colonel Joe. your seat."

Didn't Take a Paper.

The eastern papers tell of a farmer way up in New Hampshire, who put up a large quantity of ice, but thinking himself too poor to take a paper, knew nothing about the price of the article. So when a Boston dealer came along and offered him $600 for his stock he took it at once. In a day or two he was offered $3,600 for it, but it was no longer his. He had the satisfaction a few days later to learn that the customer to whom he sold had resold for $5,600, clearing $5,000, enough to have paid for a paper several years, and leave something for other luxuries.

NO LONGER A BELLE.

The Sad Story of "The most Beautiful Woman in Arkansas."

[Correspondence of the Courier Journal.]

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 28.—The once most beautiful woman in Arkansas is now a begger, and, although not a literary woman, has a wooden leg. She is the daughter of Sandy Faulkner, the original "Arkansas traveler." She has been married several times, and is now known as Mrs. Trapnell. In the old days of Arkansas aristocracy, when the rich planters and men of note gathered at the Ashley mansion, Miss Faulkner was the belle, petted, flattered and admired by every one. Her wardrobe came from Paris and her lovers from everywhere. Slave to the demand of gayety and conquest, she was haughty, and considered heartless. Her sway for years was undisputed, and when her financial decline came, she would not recognize a fact which seemed to her so preposterous. She married, but her husband did not prove to be wealthy. From this husband, if I am correctly informed, she was divorced. She was still beautiful, and, though divorced from her husband, she was still inseparably wedded to society. But the bright star of her life had begun to grow dim. Her father died and left her with comparatively nothing. She still had offers of marriage, but she disdained them on financial grounds. On one occasion a large party was forming to visit the New Orleans Mardi Gras festivities. She was unable to meet the necessary expenses. A gentleman who had heard her express herself, and with whom she was scarcely acquainted, remarked to her:

"If you will marry me I will take you to New Orleans." "I will," she exclaimed, and they were married. This husband I think, died shortly afterward. Some time after this she met with quite an accident. While riding in a buggy the horse ran away. She was thrown out and sustained the injury of a broken leg. This might not have proved so serious had she not disobeyed the instructions of the physicians and disregarded the advice of friends. She insisted upon receiving visitors, and would sit all day and half the night, propped up in bed, laughing and talking in her gayest humor. Her restlessness at last rendered, amputation necessary. I met her to-day. She has just been turned out of a house for failing to pay her rent. A more forlorn-looking woman never lived. She has been out begging, and limping along she carried a basket. She is quite old now, and her hair is as white as the record of St. John. You can tell in a moment that she has been beautiful, for her mouth, pearly teeth, her eyes and magnificent brow, all declare that they were once organized into a convention of beauty with a rich suit of hair as the chairman.

OPIE READ.

Peck's Experience with a Coal Stove.

[La Crosse Democrat.]

We never had a coal stove around the house until last Saturday. Have always burned pine slabs and pieces of our neighbors fence. They burn well, too, but the fence got all burned up, and the neighbor said he wouldn't build a new one, so we went down to Mr. Jones' and got a coal stove. It is called the "Radiant Home," and any man who says we didn't have a radiant home at our house for about four hours last Saturday night is a republican and a villain. You see we didn't know anything about coal stoves. We filled the Radiant Home about half full of pine fence, and when the stuff got well to going we filled the artesian well on top with coal. It simmered and spluttered about five or ten minutes and all went out, and we put on an over-coat and a pair of mittens and "went out, too," to supper. We remarked in the course of the frugal meal, that Jones was a "fraud for recommending such a confounded refrigerator to a man to get warm by. After suppur we took a piece of ice and rubbed our hands warm, and went in where that stove was, resolved to make her draw and burn if it took all the pine fences in the first ward. Our better half threw a quilt over her and shivering remarked that she never knew what real solid comfort was until she got a coal stove. Stung by the sarcasm in her remark, we turned every dingus in the stove that was movable, or looked like it had anything to do with a draft, and pretty soon the Radiant Home began to heave up heat. It was not long before she stuttered like the new Silsby steamer. Talk about your heat! In ten minutes that room was as much worse than a Turkish bath as hades is hotter than Liverman's ice-house. The perspiration fairly fried out of a tin water-cooler in the next room. We opened the doors, and the snow began to melt as far up Vine street as Hanscomb's house, and people all around the neighborhood put on linen clothes. And we couldn't stop the confounded thing. We forgot what Jones told us about the dampers, and she just kept a boiling. The only thing we could do was to go to bed, and leave the thing to burn up the house if it wanted to. We stood off with a pole, and turned the damper every way, and every turn she just sent out heat enough to roast an ox. We went to bed, supposing that the coal would eventually burn out, but about 12 o'clock the whole family had to get up and sit on the fence. Finally a man came along who had been brought up among coal stoves, and he put a wet blanket over him and crept up to the stove and turned the proper dingus, and she cooled of, and since that time has been just as comfortable as possible. If you buy a coal stove, you want to learn how to engineer it, or you may get roasted.

He Believed.

The spirit of the gentleman (who by the way, had been somewhat severe in matters of discipline,) was called up, and held some conversation with the boy. But the messengers were not at all convincing and the youth would not believe that his father had anything to do with them.

"Well,' said the medium, "what can your father do to remove your doubts?'

"If he will perform some act which is characteristic of him, and without any direction as to what it shall be, I shall believe in it."

"Very well," said the medium; "we wait some manifestation from the spirit land.

This was no sooner said than (as the story goes), a table walked up to the youth, and, without ceremony kicked him out of the room.

"Hold on!—stop him!" cried the terrified young convert; "that's the old man! I believe in rappings!"

The hero has never since had any desire to stir up the old gentleman.

More Testimony for Hall's Great Catarrh Cure.

The following explains itself:

Toledo, O., Jan. 28, 1880.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Sirs: Through the advice of friends I was induced to try Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. I have been a sufferer from that disease for twenty years past. My case was pronounced incurable and I was obliged to give up my profession. I have used twelve bottles of Hall's Catarrh Cure and am entirely cured. Physicians called it consumption. I was reduced in weight to 135 pounds; am now as sound as ever and back to my old weight, 160 pounds. Springfield, Tenn., May 6, 1879.

Dr. A. R. White— Dear Sir: I am selling a great deal of your Pulmonaria, have a large demand for it, and recomend it to all as the best cough medicine in the market, and I am not afraid to recomend it, as I had it thoroughly tested on one of my customers, who was given up to die. After taking three fifty-cent bottles of Pulmonaria, he commenced improving, and when he had taken the fifth bottle he was up and in my store and said: "IT SAVED MY LIFE," and that "he should always love me and the Pulmonaria, for it saved him from death, and I was the cause of his taking it." I told him not to love me but Dr. White the inventor of this great medicine. I am selling from eight to fifteen bottles a week of your Pulmonaria.

Thieves Crying "Stop Thief."

[Newark (N. J.) Journal.]

The idea of the men who stole the presidency, and now fattening on the plunder thereof—the idea of these men crying "stop thief!" We wonder their hands and tongues are not palsied. Bah!

THE ALHAMBRA.

BY CHAS. M. LOGAN.

When Irving dwelt among those halls,
Near fifty years ago,
Among those ivy-circled walls
And myrtle all aglow,
Pacing in sweet reverie at night,
And o'er ramparts with longing gaze,
To watch the moonbeams in their flight
Around the flowery maze,
Were times of sweet enchantment to his soul.
In those days of dreamy slumbers,
His inspirations on his parchment scroll
Were written unto men with poetic numbers.
He wrote of nature's beauty rare,
Overflowing caskets, heavenly wrought—
Jeweled convoys, sparkling, rare,
With sweet, inspired thought.
That place has little changed since then;
Its moonlight beauty yet is seen—
The soft and mellow richness of each stain—
As if 'tis in enchantment or a delusive dream.
So now we sit alone, and ponder on the old
And former times of this retreat,
Beneath the liquid, tinted gold
That with other scenes compete.
We pass along the colonnade
And harken to the sound
Of some lone lover's serenade,
Floating sweet, profound.
And lean we o'er the parapet,
That flowery-fashioned crown,
The scene is soul-exalting, yet,
Where high, gray mountains frown
Against the spangled sky—
Looking solemn and so lone—
It seems as if with ecstasy my Spirit it had flown.
And o'er the silvered basin of Lindaraxa skim
The sweet exhaling liquid that doth fall,
And drip like crystal pellets from its brim
And scintillate with freedom through each garden hall.
There were many scenes, so soft, sublime
And manifold in each hue—
That showed there is a power divine;
His hidden hand within each view;
That, dropping checkered silver on yon vermillion tower,
Shaded Tocador's arches in the gloom,
Setting with a mellow richness on each bower,
Caught from varied halos of the moon.
We sit, we gaze upon Granada's peaceful sleep,
Upon its peaceful slumber of to-night.
From the exquisite ruins of a Moorish palace,
peep
The somber, saddened walls of convents in the light.
Still they carry dead beneath Alhambra's wa'ls—
Along its shaded arches, its colonnades, and fill
With saddened footsteps the melancholy halls—
To bury in Granada's ground, in Alameda's hill,
Pater Ximines still survives;
Though deaf and blind, he spends each day
In bringing up the past, and thus revives,
With patriotic strains, the "tales of the Alhambra."

SINCLAIR'S DECEIT.

The sun, as a great round ball of golden red, was fast descending through the lovely purple haze of Indian summer, which mellowed the distant hills of the Blue Ridge mountains, with an indescribable charm, as Ralph Waldron drove up to one of those old, but aristocratic, mansions of the Shenandoah valley—the home of some of the best blood of Virginia. He had been invited by its hospitable owner to spend a few days in quail-shooting among its rich stubbles. The same day he came, Harry Sinclair, a young farmer from an adjoining county, had also arrived ostensibly to enjoy the rare shootings of the neighborhood, but in reality to continue his address to Blanche Randolph, the only daughter and child of their host, and to whom for twelve months he had vainly declared his love. Ralph Waldron was welcomed by the old friend of his father in the hall, and, as the door of the stately parlor was opened, Blanche, with face toward the setting sun and back to Sinclair, was heard to say in a tender womanly voice, "No, it can never be." The noise of their entrance attracted the attention of the two, and Col. Randolph at once presented his young friend to his daughter, and to the gentleman by her side. It was an embarrassing situation for her, but recovering herself instantly, with exquisite womanly tact she bade him welcome. Blanche Randolph was a woman of peculiarly rare attractiveness for one so young, combining almost faultless beauty with a grace of manner that was irresistible. These characteristics she had inherited from a long line of ancestry that had claimed the fairest daughters, whose beauty and wit had been heightened by frequent participation in the out-door sports of the country, and social intercourse with the most gallant gentlemen of the times. But the most unwelcome visitor was Waldron to Sinclair. He had hoped that in the solitude of the country home, with no opposition, he would at last persuade her to be his own. When he saw Waldron enter with such an air of culture and refinement, and of such a prepossessing appearance, an indefinable dread leaped into his heart—the future stepped back into the present with prophetic clearness—there was his rival.

The evening passed pleasantly enough for all but him. The Colonel told with the rekindled fire of youth of the sports of former days, when every man was a fox-hunter—how he could stop the whirring quail and silent woodcock, the music of the deep-bayed hounds, and the silent stalk of the ever-watchful stag, until the old time-piece at the head of the stairs warned them that it was time to retire. As they rose, Blanche went to the mantel, took a solitary bud from the vase, and said: "This is the last rose of summer, it shall be his who brings the larger number of birds to-morrow." As the two young men separated, each determined for himself that he would win the prize. Waldron, as he lay trying to entice sleep to his eyes, recalled with the glow of young manhood the sweet glances he had caught, and the more eager he was to win her love. Sinclair would defeat the city gentleman, and have her fix with her own sweet hands the rosebud in his button-hole before the very eyes of his adversary. Thus each lay with their thoughts till long past midnight. Blanche thought of them, too, for a while, as a young maiden would, and quietly dropped off to sleep, not dreaming of the profound rivalry she had incited. There is no deeper strain capable of taxing the young breast of manhood than the contest of winning the approbation of woman over the head of a rival.

Morning came and with it a lovely autumn day, clear and bracing. Blanche stood in the hallway and bade them adieu as each separated—one to the west and the other to the east. All day long they hunted every field and hedge row, urging to the last degree their willing dogs. In the morning Waldron shot with nervousness, the effect of his sleepless night and inward excitement, and missed many birds that in a calmer moment he would have killed in the air. Sinclair was steadier, but by no means in his best form. As evening drew on Waldron recovered from his uneasiness, and, thanks to the untiring and indomitable energy of his Irish setter, who was apparently better than in the morning, made up much of his loss, while his competitor failed instead of improving. Twilight came too soon for each—the birds were all afield, until at last, in rising, the shooter had to drop to knee to get the line of flight above the horizon. Quickly night settled down, and reluctantly they had to stop. Each wended his way homeward, anxious yet hopeful. Never did maiden attire herself more sweetly than did Blanche that evening. Beauty, modesty, grace and gentleness combined to lend her their charms.

"How many, Mr. Waldron?" said Blanche as he came up the lawn in front of the house.

"Only twenty-seven. I fear I have lost the bud which I intended to have cherished to the last days of my life," and he looked ardently in her eyes.

"Then I trust you have won it," softly returned Blanche.

At that moment Sinclair appeared. Blanche half suspected he had overheard this last remark, and, to recover herself, quietly inquired how many he had brought in.

"Twenty-nine," said Sinclair.

An involuntary dejected look stole over Waldron's face, and without a word he entered.

"The flower is yours, Mr. Sinclair," said Blanche as she turned to enter. A tone of disappointment would have been apparent to a stranger, but the winner had worked so hard for the coveted prize that he was entirely oblivious to the expression.

A few minutes before 6 each appeared in the drawing-room completely transformed by their evening suits—differing in nothing from the city beau except the fine bloom of the cheek. Almost immediately Blanche presented the victor with the prize, but allowed him to fasten it in his button-hole unaided. I believe she would have assisted in this arrangement if the other had been the winner. Sinclair was vexed [illegible]. He had fought so hard to gain the prize, and then to lose what he considered its great value, was more than he could bear. Accordingly all through the evening he made constant allusion, in a rather ungenerous spirit, to his wearing the trophy, and to such an extent as to arouse the sympathy of Blanche for his rival. Waldron received his remarks with great forbearance, expecting, as is always the case, that he would, if he should not specially defend himself, find in her his advocate. At last a still more vain remark from Sinclair about his excellent shooting aroused Blanche to the highest pitch, and, taking rather nervously from her bosom a handsome gold locket, she said:

"Mr. Sinclair, I do not believe you are a better shot than Mr. Waldron, and to test it, whoever is the winner to-morrow shall have this locket. It is a gift of an old friend, and I prize it very highly."

Waldron instantly interposed and begged her to withdraw her offer, but Blanche was firm, and he had nothing to do but accept the situation. By this time the conversation was anything but pleasant, and the party broke up for the night. Waldron and Sinclair, who had the previous night tossed themselves restlessly, were soon, from their unusual fatigue, lost in sleep, but Blanche could not compose herself. More than ever she hated Sinclair. How unfavorably his conduct compared with Mr. Waldron. A victor should be magnanimous—not mean and contemptible. Such thoughts as these kept running through her mind, until Blanche came to regard Waldron with especial favor, and wished, to the bottom of her heart, that he might win and wear her locket—so rapidly had he by force of circumstances taken possession of her thoughts.

The next morning was a repetition of the same lovely weather as the day before. As they parted at the door each took the same route he had done previously. The fine bracing morning sent the rich blood bounding through their veins. Sinclair's pointer felt its influence too, as with nose breast high and magnificent pace he quartered his ground. Soon it was evident he winded the birds by his change of gait. Now he has them. What a sight! Rigid as marble and every feature of his fine head intensified with excitement. The setter may be in many cases the preferable dog to the pointer, but as a thing of beauty there is no equal to the latter when pointing his game. In a moment Sinclair was behind. A whir from a score of wings. Two barrels and a clean miss. Bad luck for the beginning. It never left him during the day. The fates seemed to be against him. Waldron, on the other hand, was more fortunate. With good sense he sought the coveys he had found the previous day. Both he and his dog were calmer, and he made many a beautiful shot as quail after quail sprung from the ground. The evening was setting in, and Sinclair's heart began to fail him. From across the hills he heard the frequent reports of his rival's gun, when he met an old friend, Tom Hardy, with a mongrel by his side. Tom was a hanger-on at a country store at the cross-roads, and shot for a livelihood.

"What are you doing here, Tom?"

"Been shooting a little, Mr. Sinclair."

"Any luck?"

"I believe I have a dozen or so."

"Let me see them."

Tom ransacked his pockets and counted out fifteen birds.

"I will take them, and pay you the next time I see you."

"All right, Mr. Sinclair."

Sinclair put them in his bag among those he had shot, and they parted. A smile stole across his face as he thought, "I will have the locket now."

He bagged but one more bird, and night forced him to turn his face homeward. He was the first to arrive. Blanche was waiting for them. She saw him come, and involuntarily tried to avoid him, but he called out: "Miss Blanche, come count them for yourself."

One after one he lay them before her until the bench in the veranda was completely filled; forty-three in all, including one woodcock. Ralph Waldron saw the immense amount of dead game as he came up, and knew at a glance it must be a close contest. He had not had time to count his own, and therefore drew them out as Blanche extended her hand to receive them. When he had counted as far as thirty-eight, it became truly exciting. Blanche hoped they would hold out—he feared they would not. Forty-two. Alas! he was defeated again.

"It is my locket," said Sinclair.

"You shall have it, sir," replied Blanche, irritated at his haste in claiming what she had never any intention of denying.

"Take it now," and she instantly loosened it from her chain and handed it to him.

"Thanks," and he quietly put it in his waistcoat pocket. Waldron exceedingly regretted he should have been the occasion of the loss to Blanche of anything so valuable, and particularly that which she had prized highly, and so expressed himself to her as Sinclair retired preparatory to dinner.

"I care nothing about the loss of the locket, Mr. Waldron, but I feel sure that he will wear it in the most conspicuous place, which will annoy me every time I see it, and may give rise among those who knew it as having been mine to some unpleasant remarks."

On the return of the young gentleman to dinner, the first thing which caught Blanche's eye was the locket suspended to Sinclair's watch chain. This was too much for her, and with great dignity of manner she said, "As you have given so prominent a place to the locket, I trust you will take pains to say under what circumstances you became its possessor."

"I thought, Miss Blanche, that as the article has become my property I would be entitled to dispose of it as I pleased."

It is hardly necessary to chronicle that the evening was passed even more unpleasantly than the previous one, the only relieving circumstance being the announcement by Sinclair of his departure after breakfast. He came unbidden; he was to go unregretted.

The next morning as the Colonel, with Blanche and Waldron, were standing on the terrace, while Sinclair was packing his portmanteau, Tom Hardy came on an errand from a neighboring farmer. When Sinclair saw him his deceit of yesterday rushed across his mind. He suspected Tom had come for his pay for the birds, and was telling his business to the party, and, without waiting to discover what was the occasion of the intrusion, said in an angry tone, "You impudent fellow, what brought you after me?"

"Why, Mr. Sinclair, I do not want pay for the birds now; I came on an errand for Mr. Pendleton."

Pale as a dead man's face, Sinclair became in an instant when he saw his mistake, and that his secret was so near the light. Blanche looked at him and was astonished at the change. The truth then came to her mind, and she said softly, "Tom, when did you sell Mr. Sinclair any birds?"

"I beg pardon, Miss Blanche, I know Mr. Sinclair will pay me."

"But when, Tom, did you sell him the birds—tell me all about it."

Tom, in looking down, as was his habit while talking, did not see the endeavors of Sinclair to draw his attention.

"Why, yesterday, as I was coming through the valley by the old mill, I met Mr. Sinclair out hunting, and I let him have fifteen of my birds, but don't think, Miss Blanche, I fear he will not pay me, for I know he will."

As Blanche turned on Sinclair, never did soldier stripped of his epaulets on battle-field look meaner.

"Give me back the locket," said she, in a commanding voice.

Without a word he took it from his chain and handed it to her and then stole away.

"Mr. Waldron, this is yours. You have won it fairly. Wear it for honor's sake."

Sinclair shortly afterward left the State, and Blanche, while on a visit to the city during the following winter, promised Ralph Waldron to be his forever.

The Benefits of Travel.

"It is a good thing," the fat passenger remarked, "for a man to travel."

"Yes," said the tall, thin passenger, "it takes the extra flesh off him."

"I should judge, then," the fat passenger remarked, for it is observed he still feels a little sore about the ghost discussion, "that you had been out to the moon a couple of times this spring."

"And you," replied the tall, thin passenger, "ought to walk around a billiard table twice a day. But I was going to say," he added, as though fearful that the discussion would assume a religious character, "that, as men learn each other more thoroughly, they like each other better; they endure each other's failings and whims and hobbies more patiently; they learn that the world is a great big world, full of good people, wise people, smarter people than themselves. A man learns his own general insignificance by travel. Every day he meets people who excel him in his own particular pet ambition. If he is ambitious to be considered a bad man, he finds men so much wickeder than himself that he is ashamed to think what an angel he is. If he thinks himself a wise, scholarly man, he blushes to hear other men answering questions that only expose his own ignorance. If he thinks he is funny, and is rather inclined to be proud of his wit, he meets men who will make people laugh where he can only put them to sleep. Travel is a great educator. It makes us charitable and assists us to fraternize with mankind."—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

WHEN Mr. John N. Abbott, General Passenger Agent of the Erie railway, came to Buffalo, some time ago, a witty and observing local passenger man called his attention to a scalper's runner, who had on his hat in flashy letters the high-sounding title of "General Passenger Agent." "See there," said the local agent; "what's in a name?" There may not be much difference in the name, but there is probably about $7,500 difference in the salary.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

THE tree-felling electric battery is an extension of a well-known and very useful surgical instrument for removing warts, etc. A small platinum wire is drawn tightly around a tree and connected with a battery, by which the wire is heated white hot. The wire is kept taut as it burns into the wood until it burns through, leaving the tree standing, but needing only a little force to bring it to the ground. It is not in practical operation.

"WE were awaked a few nights ago from sleep," says the Warrenton (Ga.) Journal, "by a low, soft, sweet singing, as if our mocking bird, which was in its cage in the room, had concluded to serenade us. The notes were distinct, clear and varied in tone. We listened quietly and then approached the bird-cage, but were convinced that the music did not emanate from our feathered songster. The next day and night we frequently heard the mysterious singing, which proceeded from different parts of the closet, until we were led to believe that a singing mouse had domiciled itself under our roof. We were correct, for a few nights thereafter the singing mouse ventured into the room, trilling his notes unabashed. In an attempt to capture this peculiar singing animal, we had to kill it to prevent its escape."

COPPER has many singular properties. Try to drill it, try to file it, to cut it, to plane, to planish, or to roll it out, or try to stretch it over a mandrel. These things may all be done, but only by an expert hand. In one case you must soothe the surface with oil, or with tallow and wax; in another the least smear of oil causes it to buckle up and all is spoilt. Under one operation a bathing of milk is used; in another a touch with the workman's saliva is more effective than anything else. The tool applied to it must be neither hard nor soft, beyond the limits of a straw tempering. Anneal it, and kindly it comes forth from the furnace and yields itself to the workman's will; but indiscreetly strike it a few times with a hammer, and in an instant the entire mass undergoes a transformation, and becomes sonorous, elastic, non-plastic, in a word unmanageable.

AN instance is mentioned in which a lock of hair two inches long when cut from the head of a small child, after lying between the leaves of a book for fourteen years, was found to have increased in length about four inches. Other cases have been chronicled from time to time, but medical men say that such reports are pure fiction. As to the length attained sometimes by ladies' hair, the following are amply proven: "Mrs. Murat Halstead, the wife of the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial, though the mother of eleven children, looks no older than 35. Her hair, of a rich golden brown, is seven feet long, and, flowing loosely, trails behind her on the ground, like a robe of gold. A young lady of Wellsboro', Tioga county, Pa., whose hair reached to within six inches of the floor, when cut off, on account of the lady's illness, is said to have weighed four pounds.

THE leaning tower of Pisa was commenced in 1152, and was not finished till the fourteenth century. The cathedral to which this belongs was erected to celebrate a triumph of Pisans in the harbor of Palermo in 1063, when allied with the Normans to drive the Saracens out of Sicily. It is a circular building, 100 feet in diameter and 179 feet in extreme height, and has fine mosaic pavements, elaborately carved columns and numerous bas-reliefs. The building is of white marble. The tower is divided into eight stories, each having an outside gallery of seven feet projection, and the topmost story overhangs the base about sixteen feet, though, as the center of gravity is still ten feet within the base, the building is perfectly safe. It has been supposed that this inclination was intentional; but the opinion that the foundation has sunk is no doubt correct. It is most likely that the defective foundation became perceptible before the tower had reached one-half its height, as at that elevation the unequal length of the columns exhibits an endeavor to restore the perpendicular, and at about the same place the walls are strengthened with iron bars.

A Torpedo After a Man.

The inventor has constructed a self-propelling torpedo which possessed the peculiarity of being able to be used on land as well as in water—a result which was obtained by fitting it with wheels. He undertook to exhibit this torpedo to a committee of naval officers at Lyme, Ct., last August. A canal-boat to be blown up had been anchored some distance from the shore, and it was understood that the torpedo would start from the beach, proceed to the canal boat, blow it to pieces, and return to the shore, where a subsequent experiment would demonstrate its efficiency on land. Whether the inventor had been guilty of ill-treating the torpedo, or whether it was a peculiarly vicious one, we have no means of knowing. We do know, however, that, after it had gone a few rods in the direction of the canal-boat, it turned around and came rapidly and with undue ferocity toward the group on the beach. The naval officers hastily retreated, but the torpedo paid no attention to them. On landing it made for the inventor, who fled with every symptom of extreme terror. In vain did he seek to outstrip his pursuer. The torpedo followed him across the country, jumping ditches, climbing fences, and steadily gaining on him. Happily, he recollected that the torpedo could not turn quickly, and so, when he was nearly overtaken, he suddenly doubled on his pursuer and ran toward the village. The torpedo turned and followed him, gaining so long as the inventor kept straight on, but losing a little at every turn. He was nearly exhausted when he finally reached his own workshop, the door of which stood open. He dashed in, shut the door, and dashed out again through a rear window, just as the ferocious and baffled torpedo flung itself against the door, and, exploding, blew the workshop into small pieces. No account of this incident has hitherto been published, for the obvious reason that the inventor was interested in keeping it secret. It is, however, every bit as true as many of the stories which have been told of the wonderful feats accomplished by other and tamer torpedoes, and it gives us a glimpse of the terrible consequences which may follow if our torpedoes should become rebellious and devastate our cities and towns, instead of annihilating the ships of the enemy.—New York Times.

The Pad Agent.

He was a well-dressed, pleasant-faced man, and he carried a small black box in his hand. He entered an insurance office on Congress street with a familiar air, walked up to the sole occupant, who was writing a letter, and began:

"Excuse me, sir, but I represent four different kinds of pads, viz., lung—"

"I am busy," interrupted the letter-writer.

"Viz., lung, liver, stomach and kidney, and in a few days we—"

"Didn't I say that I was busy?" demanded the citizen, as he put down his pen.

"You did, sir; and in a few days we shall bring out the heart-pad, the throat-pad and the ear-pad. Excuse me if I sit down. Please let me feel of your pulse."

"I want none of your pads, sir! I am busy, sir, and I want my office to myself!"

"Nevertheless, you do want a pad, and I can prove it. A healthy pulse should not beat over eighty-five per minute. I'll bet yours goes to a hundred. Anyone can see that you are ailing. I can sell you a beautiful stomach-pad at reduced rates. How much do you—"

"Didn't I say I didn't want any of your pads, sir?"

"Correct, you did. Do your lungs trouble you?"

"No, sir!"

"Heart all right?"

"Yes, sir!"

"Hearing good?"

"Yes, sir!"

"Ever have the backache?"

"No, sir!"

"Spleen all right?"

"Yes, sir!"

"Throat bother you?"

"No, sir! I tell you I don't want any of your pads! I want to be let right alone! I've got a headache this morn—"

"Eureka! Keep still!—not a word! You fur[illegible] the capital, and I'll put in my time [illegible] we'll bring out a headache pad! Capital idea—rich thought! Go ahead and write your letter, and I'll be—"

The citizen ran for his cane in the corner, but the pads had walked out to hunt for ailing humanity.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Government Lands.

In the arid public lands of the remote West, including Arizona, Dakota, Idaho, Colorado, Nevada, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming and parts of Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, Texas, with Washington and the Indian Territories, there are, in round numbers, not less than 900,000,000 acres. Not 1 per cent. of all this land has as yet been sold by the Government, and it will not be sold for many years, unless some means be found to supply it with water. It has been proposed, lately, to sink experimental artesian wells on the arid land, in order to irrigate it. Government surveys show that 200,000,000 acres of the whole are mountainous, and that they could not be rendered fertile with any quantity of water. An equal amount of land consists of lava beds, without either soil or vegetation, and of desert plains of drifting sand. This leaves 500,000,000 acres of plain and valley susceptible of high cultivation, if they only had water. But a very small percentage of this can, under the most favorable circumstances, be reclaimed by using, however efficiently, the rivers and small streams, and a great deal now employed for pasturage has such scanty grass that twenty-five acres are often needed for the support of each head of cattle. In Colorado alone there are 41,000,000 acres of such poor land, capable, with proper irrigation, of producing twenty-five to thirty bushels of wheat to an acre. The West wants Congress to appropriate $50,000 for boring artesian wells, and it is believed by some of the ablest geologists that the wells could be sunk. Private enterprise will not undertake the experiment; but, if the experiment were once made successful, there would be abundant capital to carry on a work which would prove to be of inestimable value. —New York Times.

Two Monstrous Cattle.

Mr. Jacob Benemen, of this town, has the largest pair of cattle in the United States. They are 4 years old; one of them is dark red, and the other red and white spotted. The larger of the two measures in height, from his withers to the ground, 6 feet 9 inches; from the top of his back across his rump, 7 feet 3 inches; from the tip of his tail to the tip of his nose, 18 feet 10 inches; around the top of his foreleg, 2 feet 5 inches; around his knee, 1 foot 10 inches; around the smallest part of his leg, 1 foot and 1 inch. The other is of similar dimensions, there being but little difference in their size. They are a genuine curiosity, and many people come to see them, and all pronounce them the biggest cattle they have ever seen or heard of. I have not learned their weight. These cattle were brought to this place from Kansas on the 23d of September, 1879, before which time they had never been fed with grain. They are still growing, and there is no telling what they will come to when they shall have got their full growth.—Marengo (Iowa) Cor. Chicago Journal.

CASTLE BUILDING.

BY HALLIE C. YOUNG.

Castles, O how well I love thee!
Dear to all in every thought,
Building castles high above me,
Where no loves are sold or bought.

Castles towering, grand, aerial;
Castles where no hopes are lost;
Fashion draws my brain material;
Never mind you what they cost.

So I build a cozy chamber,
Dust it well with rare perfume;
Ornament with purest amber,
Fling in all the flowers that bloom.

Sofas, velvet, purple, crimson;
Chairs of daintiest hue and make;
All the luxuries in profusion—
Love to give and love to take.

Give a nook and reed to sirens
(Harps and lutes, at any rate),
And we hear a song of Byron's
Sung in tones that captivate.

And there sits [illegible]—
Venus' self was ne'er more fair,
For her nectar and ambrosia,
Than this damsel dreaming there.

And she sits, this dreaming maiden,
In the castle I have made,
Saying in her heart love-laden;
"Heart to give and heart to take."

And there comes a cavalier,
Pierced by Cupid's tiny dart;
And this maid, with ne'er a fear,
Gives to him a heart for heart.

THERE is a good deal of square common sense about the Directors of a savings bank at Marysville, Cal. They engaged a new Cashier the other day, and the President said to him: "Mr. Steele, your duties will be very light and the salary $400 a month. Now, if you'll agree not to speculate in stocks or gamble or hypothecate the deposits, we'll double the pay. Come, now, what do you say?" "I'm very much obliged to you, gentlemen," was the reply, "and I'll think it over and give you an answer in the morning." But he refused the offer, after all. He said he couldn't be cramped down in that way.

Tight Lacing.

The belief has been current, of late years, that the dreadful habit of tight lacing is out of fashion, but there is reason to fear that it is not so much of an evil of the past as has been supposed. A painful impression has lately prevailed that a young married lady, moving in very fashionable New York society, whose death occurred not long since, was a victim to the pernicious practice, and those well qualified to form an opinion aver that there are many here who pursue it. The Lancet quite lately remarked on this subject: "Surely enough has been said as to tight lacing to make it plain that danger must attend the process. The process of improving nature by forcing the feet into tight boots, and the diverse other devices with which fashion beguiles the love of personal embellishment, are sufficiently monstrous; but the audacity of attempting to compress the trunk, which contains the central organs of life, for the sake of appearances, surpasses belief. Perhaps the recent death from tight lacing, in which the heart was so impeded in its action as to render life impracticable, may have some deterrent effect; but we doubt it. Fashion will prevail, and wasp-like waists will be cultivated in defiance of nature.—Health Journal.

Dying Words.

The last words of the great satirist Rabelais were: "I am going to take a leap in the dark; let down the curtain the farce is done." Mirabeau's farewell to life was thus expressed: "Let me die amid the sound of delicious music and the fragrance of flowers." Keats' last words were a poem in themselves: "I feel the daisies growing over me." Burns' dying words were: "Don't let that awkward squad fire over my grave." Chancellor Thurlow's: "I'm shot, if I don't believe I'm dying." Haller slept after the words: "The artery ceases to beat," and amid the growing darkness of mortality Goethe murmured the words, "Let the light enter."

VIEWS OF EX-GOV. SEYMOUR.

[From the Syracuse Courier.]

Gov. Seymour received the reporter courteously and kindly accorded his request for an interview.

"What do you think of the condition of the Republican party?" was the first question.

"The Republican party, both in this State and in the Union, is demoralized, and its quarrels are among young and active men."

"Do you think Grant will be nominated at Chicago?"

"I do not. I have no idea who will be nominated for President by the Republicans, but they will, in my opinion, nominate some new man, whose relationships are as yet unknown. The history of the Republican party has shown that its strong men have generally failed to receive the nomination for President. When Lincoln was first nominated for President he was comparatively unknown, and was accepted for the reason that no one knew what his views were. There was a bitter opposition to his renomination, for the reason that his party knew him better. So with Grant. When he was nominated for President the first time, no one knew what his politics or policy was. Now that both are known, there is a bitter contest over him, and, in my opinion, he cannot succeed in securing the nomination. The cause of this state of affairs lies in the fact that the Republican party is made up of discordant elements, men who are wild theorists. They range in religion from Bishop Simpson down to Robert G. Ingersoll, and in business matters from the free commercial ideas of the business men of New York to the rigid high-tariff ideas of Kelley, of Pennsylvania. In their political views of government they range from the opinions of Mr. Blaine, who wants to make this a sovereign nation, where the minority of the people living in States with small populations can govern the majority by the power and patronage of the Senate, while another class of Republicans, represented by journals like the New York Evening Post, wish to keep our General Government within its due limits. To satisfy such a party, made up of such discordant elements, it is necessary to take up men as they did in the case of Mr. Hayes, and others mentioned, who are so little known that no section of the country can take offense. I do not think that any of the candidates for the Presidential nomination now prominent will be selected by the Republicans at Chicago. They are all too republican for the Republican party. I know them all personally, and I have more kindly feelings toward them than large sections of their own party have, and I feel more respect for their characters than many of their political party express with regard to their morals, their fitness and their popularity."

"Have you an idea who will be nominated for President by the Democrats?"

"No one can yet forecast the action of the Democratic party, nor have those spoken of in connection with the nomination for the Presidency clearly made up their minds that they wish to be put on the ticket. I know but little about the current political events, and, as I live in a retired way, see but few people and read but few journals, my views are of little or no value; but it looks to me as if the action of the Democratic National Convention must, in a great degree, be shaped by the course of events, and particularly by the action of the Republican Convention, which will be held first. So far as the men are concerned who are spoken of in connection with the nomination for President by the Democrats, I feel kindly toward them all, and can give them all I have to give, my own vote; for the day has gone by when I can take an active part in a political canvass."

"What do you think of the condition of the Democratic party in this State?"

"With regard to the Democratic party in New York State, while there are unfortunate differences, they are drifting into the past and are getting behind the party in its course. On the other hand, the quarrels among the Republicans are breaking out all along the pathways before them. Those who have been prominent in shaping the policy of the Democratic party are getting old and infirm, and are dying out, and, as I am the oldest, I expect to lead off. The quarrels among the Democrats are over old men, and it is the height of folly to continue them. The old men will all pass away in two or three years at the most, and then the young and vigorous men who are left will find themselves embittered toward each other on account of men who are dead and gone, and who were not worth fighting over. I spent the early and best part of my life in espousing the cause of old men, and many and many were the bitter quarrels I had in their behalf. The wounds received rankle to this day, and the animosities engendered, many of them, have never been forgotten or allayed. I fought bitter fights over Clay, Cass, Van Buren, and others, and before I knew it they were all dead. It is foolish for young men to waste their time in quarreling over or espousing the cause of old men. The Republican combatants are active men, in the vigor of life, and will continue to lead or mislead their friends for many years to come."

"What do you think of the methods proposed to unite the Democratic party in this State?"

"As to the methods by which the Democrats can be brought to act in harmony, there is one simple answer to that: When they wish to get together they will easily find a way to do so. The true rule is to excite a spirit of good will, and not spend any time or care about plans for united action."

"Do you not think some plan could be adopted whereby the factions of the party could harmonize their differences?"

"In nine cases out of ten these plans excite ill rather than good will, and always have a suspicious look of contrivances for personal or special objects. The Democratic party must grow together in natural ways and under the healthful influences of town and county views and organizations."

"Do you think that a conference of the leading men of the party in the State would accomplish good results?"

"In my mind all conferences and contrivances of leading men looking to harmonizing differences do more harm than good. They excite jealousies rather than allay prejudices."

"Are you in favor of sending to Cincinnati as delegates from our State unpledged men?"

"In the coming State Convention to select delegates to the National Convention, the interests of each county, as well as of the State and the Union, should lead to the selection of fair and able men, who will have in view the promotion of peace and good will, and whose discussions—not so much in an oratorical way in the proceedings of the convention, but in their personal intercourse and conversation—will enable them to learn the state of public feeling and to shape their action in a way to promote the true interests of those they represent."

"Governor, you have heard the name of Hugh J. Jewett mentioned in connection with the Democratic nomination for President. How do you regard his candidacy?"

"I have no personal acquaintance with Mr. Jewett himself, but I know one of his brothers well. I should say from what I have read and heard of Mr. Jewett that he is an able and estimable man, possessing rare executive ability. He seems to be highly thought of by the business community, and, I should judge, is a strong man. The Democrats must nominate for President some man upon whom they can unite, and I am confident that, when they get together in the convention, and talk matters over they will be guided in their selection of a candidate for President by the desire to promote the true interests of those they represent."

In concluding, Gov. Seymour said that, while he had a dislike to be interviewed, and did not feel that his opinions were of value, yet he had no views which he was not free to set forth to those who cared to know them.

THE REPUBLICAN WHOPPER.

The Old Lie That "Republicans Put Down the Rebellion"—The Claim Annihilated by Figures Which Don't Lie.

The War Department gives a statement of the number of troops furnished the Union army by each State and Territory and by the District of Columbia from April 15, 1861, to the close of the war. It shows the total number of volunteers to have been 2,678,967.

From the official statement of the War Department we get the following highly interesting facts, which Republicans should not fail to memorize:

Troops furnished the Union army by eight free States and one slave State from April 15, 1861, to the close of the war:

Missouri		109,111
Vermont	[illegible]
New Hampshire	33,629
Rhode Island	[illegible]
Minnesota	25,159
Connecticut	57,379
California	15,725
Nevada	1,080
Oregon	1,810
Total		106,636

Rebel Missouri furnished 2,475 more Union troops than did the eight States of Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Minnesota, Connecticut, California, Nevada, and Oregon combined.

Again:

Missouri		109,111
Michigan	90,372
Minnesota	25,052
Iowa	76,309
Nebraska	3,159
Nevada	1,080
Oregon	1,810
Total		106,782
		2,329

Missouri furnished 2,329 more Union troops than did the six States of Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Nevada and Oregon.

Again:

Missouri		109,111
Wisconsin	96,424
Minnesota	25,052
Iowa	76,309
Nevada	1,080
Total		108,855

Missouri furnished 256 more Union troops than did the four States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Nevada.

If the number of troops a State furnished for the Union army be the test of "loyalty"—and this has been the position always held by the Republican party—then Missouri must have been a very loyal State. Her representatives in Congress should, therefore, hereafter be permitted to vote for the repeal of obnoxious laws, and escape being called "Southern Brigadiers" by less loyal men who vote the Republican ticket.

Again:

Thirteen Free States.		Thirteen Slave States.
Maine	72,114	Missouri	109,111
New Hampshire	33,629	Kentucky	79,025
Vermont	35,262	Virginia (W.)	32,068
Rhode Island	23,699	Tennessee	31,092
Connecticut	57,379	Maryland	50,316
Minnesota	25,052	Delaware	13,670
Kansas	20,151	Arkansas	8,289
California	15,725	Louisiana	5,224
Colorado	4,903	North Carolina	3,156
Nebraska	3,159	Alabama	2,576
Oregon	1,810	Florida	1,290
Nevada	1,080	Texas	1,965
Iowa	76,309	Mississippi	545
Furnished troops for the Union army.	373,372	Furnished troops for the Union army.	432,327
			373,372
Difference			58,955

These facts bear hard on the few honest Republicans who, in their ignorance, have claimed that their party "put down the Rebellion." It must grieve them to see by the official report that thirteen slave States furnished 58,955 more men for the Union army than did thirteen free States in which their party was in the majority during the war. Why, in Iowa the Republican majority has been nearly as great as the whole number of men furnished by that State to the Union army. But, previous to the war, Iowa was one of the reliable Democratic States. The war record, taken in connection with the election returns, indicates most clearly that Democrats enlisted, while the brave Republican boys fought and voted at home. This the Democratic party has always contended to have been the fact, not only in Iowa but generally throughout all the States, and now we have figures furnished by the Secretary of War, a stalwart Republican citizen of Iowa, which sustain the Democracy and brand the Republican party as unworthy of credence when speaking of its war record.

Again:

States that were Democratic or doubtful before the war, largely Republican during the war, and now Democratic or doubtful:

Massachusetts	[illegible]	Ohio	319,659
New York	[illegible]	Indiana	197,147
Pennsylvania	[illegible]	Illinois	259,147
Wisconsin	[illegible]	Michigan	90,372

That a large majority of the men furnished the Union army from the eight States above named were at the time of the enlistment Democrats is evidenced by the fact that the Republican party had majorities of thousands, immediately after enlistments began, where previously it was in the minority. These figures from the War Department fully confirm as false the claim that the Republican party put down the Rebellion. They show that thirteen slave States, in which the Republican party had no organization or ticket before the people, furnished to the Union army 58,955 more troops than did thirteen Northern States in which the Republican party was in the majority during the war, solely because Democrats had enlisted while Republicans remained at home to vote and suppress free speech.

It is to be presumed that Republicans will admit that New Jersey was both loyal and Democratic, though during the war her Democratic majority was greatly reduced because of the enlistment in the Union army of 81,010 volunteers.

There are those still living who have not forgotten that Pennsylvania was invaded by the Southern army; that Gov. Curtin called upon the Governors of each of the Northern States for aid when Harrisburg was in danger, and that at that time there were but two Democratic Governors—Horatio Seymour, of New York, and Joel E. Parker, of New Jersey—and that these two Governors of Democratic States heard the call of their sister State, in danger, and furnished the aid asked. No Republican State responded to that call. Gov. Seymour immediately turned over to Maj. Gen. John E. Wool, U. S. A., Commander of the Department of the East, and stationed at New York, 25,000 State militia, armed and fully equipped for active service. I suppose Blaine Republicans would call these troops Seymour's rebel Democrats. Gen. Wool accepted these men, and sent them forward at once, and they were in the thickest of the fight ere Pennsylvania had got her own militia into service. The Confederates supposed this noble band of Democratic volunteers to be old veterans, so bravely did they stand fire and regularly close their depleted ranks.

For accepting these Democratic troops, Maj. Gen. John E. Wool, who had been in the service since the War of 1812, was, by a Republican administration, removed from his command and sent to his home at Troy, N. Y. When asked by the administration why he accepted troops from Seymour without consultation with the War Department, that brave old Democrat sent to the traitor Halleck an answer that will never die: "When my country is in danger I know nothing about red tape."

The people were taught that Gov. Seymour was a rebel sympathizer with whom Gen. Wool was on friendly terms, and, therefore, should not remain in command of the Department of the East. The presence of Gov. Seymour's militia at Gettysburg alone stamps the claim of the Republicans for the credit of putting down the Rebellion as a lie.

INDIANA ITEMS.

THERE are nineteen miles of single track of street railway in Indianapolis.

THE prospects for an abundant wheat crop in the northern part of Indiana are flattering.

THE embalming and shipping of the body of Nellie McFeely, from Leadville, Col., to Fort Wayne, involved an expense of $1,500.

THE lady crusaders of Morristown got a case against the saloon-keeper, Hand, for selling liquor to a minor, and closed up his shop.

WILLIAM McCOLLOUGH, a miner, was killed and Chas. Williams badly hurt by falling slate, the other day, at the Diamond mine, near Harmony.

CHAS. STAPLEFORD, the head switchman at the Pittsburgh yards, in Fort Wayne, injured last week, was taken with lockjaw, and died in two hours.

AT Patoka, Gibson county, Thomas and Byron Fisher, cousins, quarreled while in an intoxicated condition—the former killing the latter with a brick.

BOYS in the southeast part of Indianapolis are defacing and destroying trees, and, if caught, they will be summarily dealt with by the exasperated property owners.

J. H. WALLACE, of Cass county, called at the State Auditor's office and got the first deed to his farm recently. He pre-empted the land in 1834, and has held it ever since by his certificate of purchase.

A WOMAN named Baker, who separated from her husband at Wheatland, Knox county, last fall, and was wandering about with an unknown tramp, was burned to death in Washington a few days ago, her clothing having ignited from a camp fire.

EX GOV. HENDRICKS has filed a claim against the city of Indianapolis for the payment of $157.55, paid out for repairs to his carriage. The damage was occasioned by driving into a sewer excavation on North Illinois street on the evening of Jan. 4, 1880

THERE is a 10-months-old baby in Fort Wayne which measures 31 inches around the waist, 33 inches around the hips, 21 inches around the thigh, 13 inches around the calf of the leg, 13 inches around the arm, and is 33 inches in height. It weighs 57½ pounds.

HARRY SHEETS will bring suit against the city of Indianapolis for $150,000, on account of damages to the old Sheets Hotel building by the fire of March [illegible], 1874, claiming that they resulted from negligence and improper management by the Fire Department.

AN attempt will soon be made to burst the city charter of Wabash. It is alleged by the movers in the affair that the charter was fraudulently obtained, and that by surrendering the charter taxpayers would be relieved from the heavy taxes now levied by the city government.

MRS. SAGE, of New Albany, brought suit against Albert Sage, her brother-in-law, for stealing and carrying away her husband. Her husband is ill with consumption, and, having $2,000 insurance on his life, there is a quarrel between his wife and his family over its possession.

THE office of the Columbus Daily Evening Republican took fire and was almost totally destroyed. Loss, about $6,000; insured for $5,600. Damage to building $700. The Daily Democrat tendered the use of its type and presses and an extra was issued. The office will be replaced at once.

IT turns out that the late Grand Jury of Shelby county, which adjourned last week after returning twenty-one indictments, was not a legally-organized body. One of the members was not a freeholder, as is required by the law of this State, and his disability to act invalidated the action of the body.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred at Hahn's cement mill, near Jeffersonville, by which George Golden, the engineer, had his two arms torn off. The man turned on the steam too suddenly, when both his hands were caught in the cogs and drawn in pretty near to the elbow, tearing the arms off and lacerating them in a terrible manner.

THE Greencastle Star says that over sixty-five years ago triplets were born to the wife of a farmer named Alexander Gorham, late of Putnam county. One of the three became Mrs. John Sanders, and now resides in Iowa; another became Mrs. Caleb Reeves, now a resident of Indiana; the other married Mr. Henry Sanders, and resides near New Maysville, Putnam county. Mrs. John Sanders is the mother of eight children; Mrs. Reeves has had born to her only one child, a son, and Mrs. Henry Sanders is the mother of eight children. The triplets, who have already lived to almost the age allotted to man by holy writ, are still hale and hearty, and give token of years of healthful life and vigor.

IT seems strange that more of our railroads do not adopt the palace reclining-chair cars used by the Chicago and Alton railroad between Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City. The fatigue attendant upon sitting ten or twelve hours in an ordinary car seat, which is very great, is entirely obviated by the reclining seat, as the position can be changed at will. The improvement over the old style, for day travel, is as great as the Pullman palace sleeping car over the ordinary coach for night travel. The Alton road runs these magnificent cars on all through trains, and no extra charge is made for seats in them. Another feature of this excellent road is the Palace dining cars, where meals can be obtained—the cuisine being fully equal to any first-class hotel, while the charge is only 75 cents. Travel on this road may justly be termed a luxury.

A Physician's Mistake.

Dr. Clemenceau, the eminent Parisian physician, is also a member of the French legislature. He is a brisk and busy man, keenly cognizant of the fact that "time is money," and one day, while he was in attendance at his Montmartre consulting room, two men simultaneously solicited an interview with him for the purpose of taking his advice. One of them, admitted to his presence, and asked, "What was the matter with him?" complained of a pain in his chest; whereupon he was ordered to take off his shirt, and Dr. Clemenceau subjected him to a careful examination. Before the doctor, however, sat down to write his prescription, he rang the bell and ordered his servant to show the other patient into the consulting room. As the latter entered the door-way, Dr. Clemenceau, without looking up from the desk at which he was writing, said to him: "Just undress yourself, too, if you will be so good. We shall save time by your doing so." Without a moment's hesitation, the second visitor proceeded to take off his clothes, and, by the time the doctor had finished writing his receipt, taken his fee, and dismissed the preceding patient, was stripped to the waist ready for inspection. Turning toward him, the doctor observed: "You are also suffering from pain in the chest, are you not?" "Well, no, doctor," the man replied, "I have called upon you to beg that you will recommend me to the Government for a place in the postoffice."

Equal to the Emergency.

Mr. Bliss, a conductor on the Rock Island railroad, was only five feet in height, and Mr. Henry, a passenger, was almost seven! Henry put his ticket in his hat band and stood up straight when the little conductor come along. Bliss could not reach the ticket, even by standing on his toes, and his comical efforts made the passengers laugh uproariously; but, without changing countenance, he brought a stepladder, leaned it against the big man, climbed up to the ticket, and then went on as though nothing had happened.

THROUGH the exertions of the faculty of the Drew Theological Seminary, at Madison, N. J., the endowment fund of $600,000, which was lost by the failure of Daniel Drew in 1876, has been made up to the extent of $280,000, to which fund additions are being made all the time.

THE Bank of England has had no end of valuables committed to its keeping. The vaults of its establishment hold moldering chests, deposited there for safety's sake, and apparently forgotten by their owners.

The Dreadful Waste of Time Over "The Puzzle."

Sixty thousand puzzles sold in New York alone, which, at a dime each, makes $6,000 diverted from the Herald Irish relief fund.

One half, or 30,000, of the puzzles were sold to able-bodied men, each of whom, at a low estimate, passed three hours a day for at least five days trying to get 13—14—15 in proper sequence. Total time of able-bodied men consumed, 450,000 hours, or 56,250 working days.

Suppose these 30,000 men had put on old suits of clothes, sallied forth with pick, shovel and broom, and made an onslaught on our dirty streets? Wouldn't they have astonished the universe more after fifteen hours' work than they would even if they had all solved the problem of the little wooden blocks?

After the streets of New York had become so clean, by the efforts of the 30,000 men who wasted 450,000 hours, or 56,250 average working days, in the childish occupation of shifting little squares of wood from one small space to another, that a lady could take a promenade for her health's sake without ruining her delicate kid boots or the train of her silk gown, wouldn't there have been a bigger shower of gratitude from the fair creatures than if each one of her brothers, cousins and nephews had devoted thrice three hours a day trying to show them how to put 13 before and 15 behind 14, and then fail in the end, anyhow?

And what an awful thought it is that at least 30,000 of the lovely beings whom man adores and the gods protect invested each her dime in this newfangled toy, and that each of these 30,000 toys has received the attention of at least four other creatures besides the owner for at least five hours a day for six days, and that, during all this time, amounting in the aggregate to 4,500,000, no stockings were darned, no buttons sewed on, no gowns retrimmed, no bonnets made over, no mittens knit for the heathen, no pincushions sewed for the next church fair, and not even the standard of Art (with a big A) raised by ever so little through the criticism of Miss Brown's new hair crimps or Mrs. Jones' new puffs!—New York Graphic.

Oleomargarine.

It was once believed of Mrs. Winslow's soothing syrup that "the children cried for it," and the makers of oleomargarine would like to have the world believe that their sapid substance is in as good repute as this with all generations. Oleomargarine, no doubt, has its uses and its excellences, and may in many circumstances be regarded as a well-invented and acceptable substitute for butter. As such it is a legitimate article of commerce. But it should stand on its own merits, strictly and severely. If it is better than butter, it ought not to descend to pretending that it is butter, or be made the occasion for any devices of dealers aimed to make the public believe that they are buying mere butter when in fact, according to the theory of the makers, they are actually buying a superior substance. There has been much complaint on this score on our own side the Atlantic, and we find by the foreign papers that John Bull has his weather-eye open on this point. Our merchants know the readiness with which the English Government seizes upon any plausible pretext for stopping or impeding the sale in England of American products. Unscrupulous dealers ship unhealthy cattle, and that fact is seized upon as reason for stopping at once an enormous trade in live beef. American pork has, in the same way, found its market somewhat reduced beyond the seas because of the sale of bad meat by men of little conscience. If the trade in American butter is ever impeded or stopped by any European country, it will be on the theory that the trade in oleomargarine has shaken the confidence of foreign officials as to the actual nature of the contents of any package from America pretending to be butter. In view of such a possibility, it may be thought by those most concerned that the present laws about the marks to be put upon oleomargarine are not so effective as they might be made.—New York Herald.

What Eyes Are For.

The saying that the faculty of speech was given to men that they may conceal their thoughts is eclipsed by a reply attributed to the Chevalier Bunsen. He was present with Bishop Bloomfield and others at a "clairvoyant seance." The Bishop, amazed at the performance which, of course, he could not explain, exclaimed, "What, then, were our eyes given us for?" Bunsen immediately replied, "To limit our vision." This certainly is a clever paradox. The significant truth it expresses is confirmed in every observing man's experience. The hopeful and sanguine and curious see wonders mentally and can give the exact dimensions, capacity and style of "castles in the air." But when actual sight and experience are appealed to the airy vision is limited and circumscribed by stubborn facts. Half our lives are spent in dreaming and the sight in dreams is far-reaching and magnifying. Bring the theories of philosophers and discoverers—the scope of their imagined vistas—down to the test that seeing is believing, and then they frequently find the things they think they see are but dissolving views. In the political field the "far-seeing" politicians are preparing themselves for an illustration of Bunsen's definition. All see; but, since all do not see alike, there must be many cases of color blindness, and the roseate hue, in the actual light of events, will prove itself somber to ninety and nine. If our eyes are given us to limit our vision, those are wise who make the limit include what they actually know, and never overlook the present and practical in trying to peer beyond.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE physicians have informed the Pope as their unanimous opinion that it is necessary for his health to quit the Vatican, and pass the summer where he can avail himself of sea-bathing. "You are merely telling me that it is necessary to do what is impossible," he answered. He has consented, however, to allow salt-water baths to be erected in the Vatican.

The ratio of representation will be the same as that provided for the democratic state convention, as follows:

By order of the democratic congressional committee.

C. A. O. McCLELLAN, Chairman.

National Democratic Convention.

The executive committee of the national democratic committee issues the following call:

The national democratic committee, having met in the city of Washington, February 23, has appointed Tuesday, the 22d of June next, at noon, as the time, and chosen the city of Cincinnati as the place of holding the national democratic convention.

Each state is entitled to representation therein equal to a double number of its senators and representatives in the congress of the United States. All democratic, conservative and other citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political association or differences, who can unite with us in the effort for a pure, economical and constitutional government, are cordially invited to join in sending delegates to the convention. At the last national democratic convention, held in the city of St. Louis in 1876, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, That the states be requested to instruct their delegates to the national democratic convention to be held in 1880, whether it be desirable to continue the two-thirds rule longer in force in the national convention, and that the national committee insert such request in the call for the next convention.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM, of Connecticut, Chairman.
FRED'K. O. PRINCE, of Massachusetts, Secretary.

State Democratic Convention.

The following call has been issued by the democratic state central committee:

The voters of Indiana, regardless of past political affiliations, who are desirous of co-operating with the democracy in the support of its principles and nominees, are invited to participate in the meetings called throughout the state for the purpose of selecting representatives to attend a delegate convention, to be held at Indianapolis,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9th, 1880,

for the purpose of adopting a platform of principles and the nomination of candidates to be supported for the following offices:

Governor.
Lieutenant-Governor.
Two judges of the supreme court.
Secretary of state.
Auditor of state.
Clerk of the supreme court.
Reporter of the supreme court.
Attorney general.
Superintendent of public instruction.

The ratio of representation will be one delegate for each 200 votes cast for Governor James D. Williams, in 1876, and one delegate for each fraction of 100 or over. [DeKalb county is entitled to 18 delegates.]

The delegates from each congressional district will meet on the evening previous to the convention, at places to be hereafter designated by this committee, for the purpose of selecting and reporting to the convention one committeeman on permanent organization, one committeeman on platform and resolutions, and vice-president for the convention, two delegates to national democratic convention, one assistant secretary of the convention, two alternate delegates to national democratic convention, one presidential elector, one contingent presidential elector, one member of the state central committee to serve for the ensuing two years, and one committeeman on credentials.

The committee on platform and resolutions will meet immediately after the adjournment of the district meetings, say 9 o'clock p. m., at the consultation rooms of the supreme court, Tuesday evening, June 8.

The committee on permanent organization will meet at the same hour in the governor's office. It will be their duty to name a president and principal secretary of the convention, four delegates at large and four alternate delegates to the national convention, two electors for the state at large and two contingent electors, and also to recommend rules for the government of the convention.

The committee on credentials will meet at 8 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, June 9, at the rooms of the state central committee, to determine such contests as may be submitted to them.

Delegate tickets of admission to convention will be issued to the chairman of each county delegation, and to authorized representatives of the press upon the presentation of credentials at the state central committee rooms, Masonic building.

By order of the democratic state central committee.
B. C. SHAW, Chairman.
JAMES H. RICE, Secretary.

FIRST BLOOD

For The

DEMOCRACY!

9 | Nine To Four | 4

The Fight was made on trustee by both parties in every township in DeKalb county, and the dems elected NINE out of THIRTEEN and gave the other four close calls, the republicans only saving them by majorities of 8, 15, 17 and 35.

The Proposed Constitutional Amendments all defeated by Large Majorities.

All of which is the result of a united effort by the democrats in every township.

Keep the Ball Rolling until Oct. and Nov.

The Result.

Though the democrats of the several townships had not completed their organization for the campaign of 1880, the work of last Monday assures us that the party is awake to the importance of success at every step, from the beginning to the close of the campaign. We are more than pleased with the energy manifested and good accomplished in every township. But one democratic township (Keyser) was lost, and in that township we have no doubt but the democratic workers used their utmost endeavors to prevent it. Below we give the majorities for the officers elected in the several townships as reported by the committeemen. Next week we will give the full vote in tabulated form, taken from the official returns.

Election Notes.

It is charged that Capt. Likens was defeated for trustee, in this township, by the very parties who were most instrumental in having him nominated. It was thought necessary to nominate and defeat him this spring, as he was likely to be in somebody's way next fall. So says Dame Rumor.

Did the railroad company, or the land company have anything to say about who should appraise the property of Keyser township?

The majorities against the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendments will be from 600 to 800 in the county.

Jay Van Auken had lots of fun with "the boys" on election day. Jay is the kind of a worker we like to see at the polls.

Where were all the soldiers when Capt. Likens was running for trustee?

The greenbackers hold the balance of power in Union township, though it was not their votes that elected the democratic trustee.

An Editor In Luck.

ST. JACOB'S OIL cures Rheumatism; of this I am convinced. For two years I suffered with Rheumatism in my left shoulder and right arm, and last fall I was incapable of attending to my duties, and lay many a night unable to sleep, on account of terrible pains. A few weeks ago a severe attack of this trouble struck me, and this time I concluded to try the ST. JACOB'S OIL, I must acknowledge, with but little confidence in its merits. I freely confess that the result has completely astonished me. The first application relieved the pain very materially, and the continued use of only two bottles has completely cured me of this chronic evil, and that, after the most eminent physicians and their prescriptions had been of no avail. I therefore consider it a duty to publish the above for the benefit of all sufferers with Rheumatism and kindred complaints. G. H. Heilman, Editor Republican, Pittsburg, Pa.

She has been a sufferer from Catarrh for a good many years. We had tried most all known remedies, but they all failed to relieve her. She has been taking Hall's Catarrh Cure of late, and we consider her cured. We would gladly recomemnd it to any one who has the Catarrh. We consider it worth ten times its cost.

GARFIELD GETS GRACE.

In the Shape of a Postponement by Agreement. His Trial Fixed for May 24.

It was stated in last week's COURIER that Lewis Garfield, who lies in jail on a charge of burglary, with the circumstances of which all our readers are familiar, would be tried Monday of this week. His case came up promptly before Judge Lowry on that day, according to appointment. Upon the opening of the session the court stated, for the information of the attorneys in the case, that upon setting the case for trial on that day (Monday) ample arrangements had been made and precautions taken for having affairs in such condition as that the trial could be proceeded with as expected, without giving rise to any question as to the right to proceed. It was further stated that, notwithstanding this fact, it had so happened that a case set for trial last week before another judge, to whom it had been assigned by Judge McClellan, had not been tried, and this created an intermission in the sittings of the court which the officers of the court and auditor, having been led to believe it would be necessary to guard against, had taken certain steps for that purpose in the way of making a temporary appointment of a member of the bar, in order as was intended to keep the term of the court from lapsing, but which still further complicated matters in a way which the judge explained, so that there might be doubt about the legality of proceeding with the trial, as it might be assumed that the term of the court had expired. He further stated that he understood the defense desired to raise the question and take advantage of any objection there might be to going on, and in that view of the matter he would hear counsel on both sides, if they desired. Judge Morris and W. L. Penfield for the defense, then objected to proceeding, as it seemed to have been anticipated they would do; and counsel for the state, Messrs. Adams and Moody and Judge Best, after consultation, expressed their concurrence in the views of the court as to there being such doubts about the matter that it was rendered unsafe to go on. The court then announced that, on its being continued, the case would be fixed for the first day of the next term, and by agreement of the parties the cause was then continued and set for trial on the 24th day of May next.

Before continuing the case, the court made an order providing for defraying the expenses of aged, decrepit, indigent or non-resident witnesses, and also for the issuance of a special venire for thirty jurors, in addition to the regular panel. Some observation being made by counsel for the defense in reference to their being deprived of an opportunity to communicate with one of the witnesses for the prosecution, whom they said they frankly avowed they had a desire to see,—namely, a person who had at least sustained the relation of wife to the defendant,—the court said that, while the defendant had a right upon the trial to be confronted with the witnesses face to face, it was yet the right of the state and its officers to exercise a prudent surveillance over the witnesses for the prosecution; but if the party herself, or any one else, complained of any illegal restraint, of course the remedy by habeas corpus was accessible.

An application for a reduction of the bail, before fixed at $3,000, was also made, but the judge stated that, in view of the general character of the charge—being that of burglary with intent to commit larceny any murder—and in the absence of any other knowledge of the facts, he would not interfere, unless the counsel desired to make a showing of the facts in connection with the application, and in that event they should have a hearing at this or any other appropriate time; but this they did not seem desirous of doing.

Garfield will therefore be tried Monday, May 24 next, and in the meantime he will doubtless retain his present quarters in the DeKalb county bastile, where, to all appearances, he seems to be perfectly contented.

Rose, secretary; Mrs. G. H. Forkner, treasurer; Mrs. S. W. Ralston, Mrs. J. L. Davis and Mrs. S. B. Miller, executive committee.

—That donkey, "Blondy," belonging to the Uncle Tom's Cabin company, doesn't make much noise in going up stairs, either. He goes up at a hop-skip-and-a-jump, regardless of where the steps are, and gets there all at once. When we first heard him making the ascent, our immediate impression was that a double-twisted cyclone had come to town and made a straight shoot for the Odd Fellows' block.

—Within the two weeks last passed Mr. W. L. Meese has sold handsome tombstones to the following parties: Mr. F. E. Davenport, Mr. Joseph Walters, Mr. James Goetschius and Mrs. Richard Dearborn. Mr. Meese is working up a fine trade, and expects to be able soon to keep a line of samples on hand for inspection. His office is on Eighth street, west of Davenport's drug store.

—The public entertainment given by the Woman's Foreign Mission society of Auburn, last Sabbath evening, at the Methodist church, is spoken of as an exceedingly pleasant affair. The society meets semi-annually for this purpose, the last being the third meeting, and the programme consists of recitations, readings and other exercises calculated only for self-improvement and social pleasure. The society now numbers about forty members.

—Rev. H. Johnson was observed strolling around the Jackson depot, last Saturday morning, in an unsettled frame of mind, he didn't seem to fully understand whether he wanted to go north to Jackson, south to Ft. Wayne, or straight up into the clouds. An investigation revealed the fact that a little minister—a very young minister—had that morning made application at Mr. Johnson's house for permanent board and lodging, and then we comprehended the situation. Weight, nine pounds —On a Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago railway train going west from Ft. Wayne, last Saturday, was a lady who wanted to get off at Columbia City, where she expected relatives to meet her; but failing to hear the conductor's call, she was carried on to Bourbon, 34 miles past her stopping-place, before noticing her misfortune. There she got off the train, without money and an entire stranger, and her distress was pitiable in the extreme. To appreciate her situation just exactly, one needs to get into the same dilemma.

—Coop. Ralston is expected home from New York this evening. He started several days ago, but the recent snow-storm has rendered the walking so bad that he will probably not get in until midnight.

—The Republican charges Mace Long with being a man "who delights in advertising himself as the debancher of innocent girls." This is carrying the thing a trifle beyond the limits, but it is a fair sample of the imaginative powers of an enterprising and cultured mind.

—Company "H," 30th regiment of Indiana volunteers, the first company organized for the war in this county, met yesterday in Auburn. Seven gallant comrades were all that could be mustered of the one hundred strong who left, nearly twenty years ago, to meet the hardships and perils of the battle field.

—Married, at the residence of Harriet Holman, in Cedar Creek, DeKalb county, Tuesday, March 30, 1880, by 'Squire John Harvey, Nicholas Lung, of Cedar Creek, and Miss Ore Lobdell, of Noble county.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton will deliver a lecture in the Presbyterian church in this city, on the evening of April 19th 1880. Subject, "Our girls." Mrs. Stanton is one of the most gifted of American lecturers, and this lecture will afford a rare opportunity to hear her. The committee have put the admission fee at the small sum of 25 cents and hope the people of Auburn and vicinity will give the eloquent lady a crowded house. Tickets for sale at Willis & Co's book store.

—The verdict of everybody who saw W. J. Austin's movements, Sunday last, was something like this: "The 15 puzzle has got him, and got him bad. He is crazy as a bed-bug." These painful suspicions were attributable to his having been seen endeavoring, with frantic gestures and a very loose tongue, to sell the big wooden boot upside-down to a lady whom he had never seen before; and on Sunday, too. But do not censure him too severely for his rashness, because he knew not what he did. It was a bran new nine-pound girl. All waltz.

Spiritual Philosophy.

Prof. S. C. Watt will speak at Ensley's hall, Saturday evening, April 10, on Spiritual Philosophy, as set forth in the bible. All scriptural declarations scientifically explained through the medium of a philosophical chart, which enables the most skeptical minds to comprehend their true meaning and acknowledge the omnipotent power of Truth.

The speaker is one of the early pioneers of DeKalb county, possessing eloquence, talent and genius combined, which enable him to move in the circle of science without a rival and to stand without a peer.

Amusements.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."

The Thorp & Bibbins company put this very familiar but always popular play on the stage Tuesday evening. Owing to an accident on the Lake Shore road, they were minus an orchestra, and this tended, as a matter of course, to render the performance tame. The audience was better than any one had anticipated, in consequence of the snow-storm, but many were disappointed in the performance. Two or three of the characters, however, were impersonated very creditably, amongst which were those of "Topsy," by Miss Dot Huntington, "George Harris," by Mr. Chas. Drake, formerly of the Alvin Joslin company, and "Uncle Tom," by Mr. Jay Huntington. Aside from these, the rendition of characters was below the average.

"THE SETTLERS."

Ensley hall was "jam full" of people last night—the best people of Auburn—who had turned out to see the drama entitled "The Settlers, or a Child of the Woods," by the Minnie Wallace company. The play is an entertaining one, and the cast of characters in this troupe is first-class. Minnie Wallace is a whole theatre by herself, and Chas. E. Dobson on the banjo is hard to get over. Both received enthusiastic and repeated applause. Pressure for time and space prevents any further mention of this excellent little company. They play to-night at Hillsdale, Michigan.

THE EAST.

THE quarterly interest on the Government bonds held by William H. Vanderbilt, just paid at New York, amounted to $310,300. ....Edison claims that he has discovered the cause of the cracking of the globes containing the incandescent carbons, and has found means of removing the cause of the fracture.

PARDON has been refused to the parties who were convicted some time ago of corruptly soliciting votes of members of the Pennsylvania Legislature in connection with the Riot-Claims bill.... The ex-Comptroller and ex-Treasurer of Elizabeth, N. J., lately convicted of defrauding the city, have been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment and $2,200 fine, and to four years' imprisonment and $900 fine, respectively.... Abel R. Corbin, a brother-in-law of Gen. Grant, died the other day in Jersey City, N. J.

THE WEST.

VICTORIA'S band of Apaches have killed six men on the west side of the Rio Grande, between Potomas and Santa Barbara.

COUNT DE LESSEPS, the great engineer and canal builder, spent a couple of days in Chicago last week, and was elegantly entertained by the commercial men of that city.

CAPT. WESTERN and Dr. Le Compte, stationed at Fort Douglas, engaged in a shooting affray, the other day. Both received painful wounds. Neither will explain the cause of the trouble, but it is understood to concern a woman. The men are unmarried.

A SEVERE wind and rain storm visited Southern Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Indiana and most of the Western States, on the 27th ult. Fences, outbuildings, signs, etc., were blown about in every direction. The storm appears to have been particularly severe in the neighborhood of St. Louis and Lafayette.

IN Utah, Idaho and Oregon cattle have suffered severely the past winter from the cold and for want of pasturage, and the mortality has been great beyond precedent.

THE Chicago and Alton railroad has reduced the fare over all lines of the roads to 3 cents per mile, in order to stimulate travel. The Chicago and Alton people are foremost in all railroad reforms.

THE SOUTH.

CRITTENDEN county, Ark., is nearly all covered by water to a height varying from one to ten feet, and large numbers of cattle are perishing there for lack of food and from their limbs being swollen with standing in the water.

NORTHEASTERN Alabama is reported greatly excited over the accidental striking of petroleum near Birmingham. In digging a well the workmen tapped a current of gas, which was shortly followed by a flow of oil at the rate of ninety barrels a day.

A SOLDIER of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was recently killed by a Sheriff at Fort Davis, Texas, while trying to arrest him.

DURING Gen. Grant's visit in Houston, Texas, somebody shut off the gas from the city, necessitating the use of candles, and spiked the cannons. The Mayor offers a reward of $500 for the arrest of the miscreants.

THE Court House and jail of Brown county, Texas, were lately burned, together with a number of prisoners.

POLITICAL.

THE Texas Republicans met in convention at Austin March 25. The following resolution was adopted after some discussion: "While the Republicans of Texas, in convention assembled, recognize the fact that U. S. Grant is the first choice of Texas Republicans, it is deemed inexpedient to give the delegates elected to the Chicago Convention any other instructions than to vote as a unit on all ballots for President." This is virtually an instruction for Grant, as nearly all the delegates to Chicago are his open and avowed partisans.

THE State Committee of the regular Democracy of New York met on the 26th of March, and prepared a call for a State Convention. A member of the committee from Utica stated that Gov. Seymour would under no circumstances accept a nomination for the Presidency. The Tammany State Committee met in New York the same day, and resolved to call a convention, to which three delegates from every Assembly district in the State should be invited. There was no abatement in the general feeling of hostility to Tilden, whom it was determined to oppose to the bitter end.

AN Associated Press telegram from Indianapolis says: "A very prominent politician, and a leader in the Republican party of Indiana, who is in the confidence of Gen. Grant and the secrets of the Grant movement, denies the truth of the statements that come from Boston and Washington that Grant has decided not to make the race for the Presidential nomination. He declares that Grant's nomination on the first ballot by an overwhelming majority is already assured, and that it will be done unless it can be demonstrated that he cannot poll the full strength of his party or secure as many votes as any other candidate, in which case his name would be withdrawn without a ballot. He says Grant would not accept the nomination unless he should have that assurance, in which event he would consider it a duty he owes to his country to accept."

THE Alexandria (Va.) Gazette publishes short letters from editors of nearly every Democratic paper in Virginia in regard to Tilden's candidacy, and there is but one expression of opinion: that, as between Grant and Tilden, the former will sweep the State. Tilden is pronounced the weakest man the Democrats can nominate.

THE New York Democratic State Convention for choosing delegates to the Cincinnati Convention will meet at Syracuse April 20. The John-Kelly-Tammany-anti-Tilden Democrats will hold a State Convention at the same time and place.

THE Kansas Republican Convention met at Topeka on the 31st ult. There was an exciting contest over the manner of choosing the delegates to the National Convention, the Grant partisans insisting upon the district, while the friends of Blaine wanted them chosen by the convention. The latter, being in the majority, carried the day, and the delegates, all of them said to be Blaine men, were elected. It is said the Grant men in one or two Congressional districts will insist on sending their own delegates to Chicago.... Secretary Sherman delivered a speech at Mansfield, Ohio, on the 31st ult. He admitted that he was a candidate for the Presidential nomination, but declared that if the Republicans of Ohio did not, in their convention, express a preference for him and support it with substantial unanimity his name would not be presented to the National Convention.

THE San Francisco municipal election has resulted in the defeat of the Kearney ticket by majorities ranging from 2,000 to 3,000.

WASHINGTON.

SECRETARY RAMSEY says in regard to the proposed surrender of Sitting Bull's Indians that the only way the War Department can receive them is as prisoners of war, in which event they would be held until some provision could be made by the Government for their maintenance. Gen. Sherman maintains that the Indians are British subjects, and that the United States has nothing to do with them.

THE excess of exports over imports for the twelve months ending Feb. 29, 1880, was $212,298,962; for the twelve months ending Feb. 28, 1879, $238,782,187.

THE President and Secretary of State made a flying visit to New York last week, and Secretary Sherman started on a ten days' trip out West.

GENERAL.

FRENCH Canadians are leaving Montreal at the rate of sixty or seventy a day, their destination being Michigan or Colorado, while a few are destined for California.... A discharged employe entered the room of Hon. George Brown, editor of the Toronto Globe, and attempted to assassinate him. After firing once, the ball striking the old gentleman in the thigh, the would-be murderer was seized, disarmed and conveyed to prison.

THE United States ship Constellation, with a cargo of potatoes, flour, meal and clothing for the Irish sufferers, has sailed for the Green isle. Commander Porter expects to make the run in about twenty-five days.

THREE murderers, all colored, passed from this life, at the end of ropes, on Friday, March 26—William Barton, aged 17 years, at St. Charles, Mo.; John Henry, at Corsicana, Texas; and Allen Towne at Fairfield, Texas. The latter was hanged by a mob, the others by the proper authorities.

FROM Sept. 1 last to the present date 2,971 miles of railway were completed in this country, and within the same period arrangements were completed for the building of 12,641 miles more. This nearly equals the entire increase of mileage during the years 1869, 1870 and 1871, celebrated for activity in railroad enterprises.

THE tide of immigration is already setting in at an unprecedented rate. No less than 2,000 persons from various European countries landed at New York in one day last week.

FOREIGN.

THE Emperor of Russia has presented Prince Alexander, of Bulgaria, with a war steamer, 40,000 rifles, and several Krupp guns. ....Queen Victoria has gone to Germany; ex-Empress Eugenie has embarked for South Africa; the Empress of Russia is failing fast; the Queen of the Netherlands is in an interesting condition, and Bismarck has quit drinking beer.... A MUTINY of miners, at a place called Anguera, in Mexico, has resulted in the killing of two Americans and one Canadian....China does not intend to relinquish its control in Central Asia, and is said to be willing to risk a war with Russia not only to maintain it, but even to regain some of its lost possessions.... Advices from South America report that Chilian armies, numbering 23,000 men, are moving on Arica, and the position of the Peruvians is considered critical.

A BRITISH General named Donovan refused to fire a salute in honor of Washington's birthday at Hong Kong, China, which caused no little indignation among the American residents there.

IN Russia Jews are having a harder time than ever. They are representing themselves Protestant Christians to escape expulsion from the capital. From several towns, Jews, who have long been residents, have been expelled.... Sixteen printers have been arrested in St. Petersburg. They were connected with the establishment which issued documents not at all complimentary to the Czar or to his administration.... People in Northern Hungary are selling their property at ruinously low figures, and emigrating by thousands.... Several Parliamentary candidates—Parnell among the rest—have been mobbed in England. One ex-member, seeking a re-election, was pitched into the sea by his political opponents, and narrowly escaped drowning.... The King of Siam is coming to America.

IT looks as if there would be war between Russia and China.... A Rome dispatch says that overwork, want of exercise and of salubrious air are telling on the Pope disastrously.... Some sharp fighting between the British and the natives is reported from Afghanistan.

THE Parliamentary elections in England opened on the 31st ult, in a manner disastrous to the Beaconsfield Ministry. There was a net Liberal gain of fifteen members in the boroughs which voted on that day.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

On Thursday, March 25, very little business of importance was transacted in the Senate. Mr. Cameron introduced a joint resolution appointing a joint commission to investigate, during the coming recess, the railroad system. The bill incorporating the National Educational Association, and a bill amending the act of 1879 authorizing the issue of twenty-year 5 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia, passed; also several private bills. Mr. Pendleton introduced a bill to construe and define the act to cede to the State of Ohio unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State. The bill to provide for issuing patents for public lands claimed under the Pre-emption and Homestead laws in cases where claimants have become insane was passed. The Senate then went into executive session, and when the doors reopened adjourned until Monday. .....The House, after another day's wrangle, succeeded in getting out of the muddle in which it was been for two days, by the adoption of a resolution of Mr. Wood that the journals for Tuesday and Wednesday are approved, and that Mr. Townsend's bill be taken from the Committee on Revision of the Laws and given to the Ways and Means Committee. The final vote stood 124 to 89. Mr. Converse, Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to quiet the titles on the Des Moines river lands in Iowa.

The Senate was not in session on Good Friday, March 26, and nothing of importance was accomplished in the House. The morning hour was consumed in the consideration of private bills, and the House then entered upon a long and uninteresting discussion as to whether a two-thirds vote was requisite under the rules to lay aside private business and proceed in the consideration of public bills. Without determining the point, the House went into committee of the whole on the private calendar, and, without disposing of any bill, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

Only the House was in session on Saturday, March 27, where very little beside talk was indulged in. A resolution was adopted asking information in regard to frauds in Indian contracts, as was one calling on the Secretary of the Interior for a copy of the testimony taken by Gens. Hatch and Adams touching the Ute outbreak. The resolution calling for information upon bond purchases by the Government prior to the war was also adopted. Many bills being received and referred, the House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Converse in the chair) upon the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. Pending a vote, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

On the meeting of the Senate on Monday, March 29, Mr. Kirkwood presented a memorial from the Iowa Legislature protesting innocent users of patent articles, and Mr. Cameron presented a memorial of the Wisconsin Legislature recommending an appropriation to enable the Secretary of War to construct improvements of the Upper Mississippi river. Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. Williams, to construe the act granting pensions to soldiers and seamen of the War of 1812; by Mr. Cockrell, providing for the opening of direct trade between the States of the Mississippi valley and Brazil. The Deficiency bill was reported with amendments. The Senate then resumed consideration of the Geneva Award bill, and a spirited debate ensued between Messrs. Thurman and Blaine, which was terminated by a threatened apoplectical attack of the former, who was obliged to retire. A board of survey upon the double-turreted monitors was ordered. In executive session, the Senate ratified the French claims treaty without amendment. The following nominations of Census Supervisors were rejected: William F. Brown, Metropolis City, Eighth district, Illinois; and Spencer Smith, Council Bluffs, Third district, Iowa.... In the House, under the call of States, the following bills, etc., were introduced and referred: By Mr. Herbert, authorizing the President to decide between two rival Legislatures in any State; by Mr. Robertson, for strengthening the Mississippi levees; also, reaffirming and applying the Monroe doctrine; by Mr. Hawley, providing that no bill shall include more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in its title; by Mr. Barber, making ships plying between different States liable for certain duties; by Mr. Scales, for a monument to Gen. Greene, of the Revolution, by Mr. Steele, for a monument to Gen. Davidson, of the same war; by Mr. Warner, for the appointment of a commission to revise and readjust the Tariff and Revenue laws, by Mr. Ward, for the appointment of a commission to take into consideration what legislation is necessary to encourage commerce between the States; by Mr. White, to provide the proper arms for the army and navy, and for the militia of the several States; by Mr. Dibrell, regulating the compensation of members of Congress; by Mr. Downey, giving to Territories one member each in the House of Representatives; by Mr. Davis (Cal.), to organize the Territory of Alaska and providing for the establishment of a civil Government thereof. On motion of Mr. House, a bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of War to lend ten United States flags to the Centennial Commissioners at Nashville, Tenn. The morning hour was dispensed with, and the House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Converse in the chair) on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill.

In the Senate, on the 30th ult., the Military Committee reported adversely to authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish tents, etc., to the Grand Army of the Republic of Wisconsin, there being no tents available for the purpose; the same Committee reported favorably on the bill authorizing the President to restore Dunbar R. Ransom to his former rank in the army. Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to provide for the sale of the Miami lands in Kansas; also, providing for the proper punishment of crimes on Indian reservations; also, a bill for the relief of settlers on Shawnee lands in Kansas. The House bill for the protection of the Potomac fisheries and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac river was passed. The Geneva Award bill was temporarily laid aside on motion of Mr. Eaton, and the Immediate Deficiency Appropriation bill taken up. The Senate rejected the following nominations of Census Supervisors: Thomas H. Sherwood, First district, Pennsylvania; Charles F. Jadwin, Fifth district, Pennsylvania.... In the House the Senate amendment to the House bill for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the present condition of the double-turreted monitors was concurred in. The morning hour having been dispensed with, the House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Converse in the chair) on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. The bill passed without amendment. Mr. Clymer reported the Army Appropriation bill, and it was referred to the committee of the whole. The report states that, after the deliberate study of estimates and full inquiry of the various officers of the War Department, the committee had concluded that the estimates of the department could be reduced $1,201,675, leaving the sum of $26,425,800, which is recommended in this bill, and which is $317,500 less than the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year. A long and dry debate ensued upon the contested-election case of Bradley vs. Slemons, which was not concluded at adjournment.

The Senate Elections Committee had printed the testimony and reports in the Kellogg-Spofford case, in which was included the testimony of Webber, a witness whose evidence was discredited by the committee and ordered omitted, therefore Mr. Cameron (Wis.) rose in his place on the morning of the 31st ult. and made an explanation. After some talk the report was recommitted for the purpose of expurgation. The bill providing for an International Exhibition in New York in 1883, was amended and passed. The Committee on the Judiciary reported adversely on the bill making Feb. 22 a legal holiday in the District, and it was indefinitely postponed. The bill introduced by Mr. Paddock to equal as homesteads by allowing locations in more than one place, where necessary to make up 160 acres, was passed. The Immediate Deficiency bill was taken up, and a long and rather sharp debate ensued between Messrs. Blaine, Edmunds, Eaton, Beck, Allison, Davis, Carpenter, Whyte and Dawes. ....In the House, a large number of bills were reported from committees, most of which were placed on the calendar. The Post-Route bill was passed. Consideration was resumed of the contested-election case of Bradley vs. Slemons, from the Second district of Arkansas. The report of the committee, in favor of Mr. Slemons, was adopted, by 140 to 81.

Longest Speech on Record.

The longest speech on record is believed to have been made by a member of the Legislature of British Columbia, named De Cosmos. It was in the interest of settlers, who were to be defrauded of their lands. De Cosmos was in the hopeless minority. The job had been held back till the eve of the close of the session. Unless legislation was taken before noon of a certain day the act of confiscation would fall.

The day before the expiration of the limitation De Cosmos got the floor about 10 o'clock a. m., and began a speech against the bill. Its friends cared little, for they supposed that by 1 or 2 p. m. he would be through, and the bill could be put on its passage. One o'clock came and went, and De Cosmos was still speaking—hadn't more than entered upon his subject. Two o'clock—he was saying, "In the second place." Three o'clock—he produced a fearful bundle of evidence, and insisted on reading it. The majority began to have a suspicion of the truth—he was going to speak till next noon and kill the bill. For a while they made merry over it, but as it came on to dusk they began to get alarmed. They tried interruptions, but soon abandoned them because each one afforded him a chance to digress and gain time. They tried to shout him down, but that gave him a breathing space, and finally settled down to watch the combat between the strength of will and weakness of body. They gave him no mercy. No adjournment for dinner; no chance to do more than wet his lips with water; no wandering from the subject; no sitting down. Twilight darkened; the gas was lit; members slipped out to supper in relays and returned to sleep in squads, but De Cosmos went on. The Speaker, to whom he was addressing himself, was alternately dozing, snoring and trying to look awake.

Day dawned, and a majority of the members slipped out to breakfast, and the speaker still held on. It can't be said it was a very logical, eloquent or sustained speech. There were digressions in it; repetitions also. But the speaker kept on, and at last noon came to a baffled majority, livid with rage and impotence, and a single man who was triumphant, though his voice had sunk to a whisper, his eyes were sunken and bleared and blood-shot, and his legs tottered under him, and his baked lips were cracked and smeared with blood. De Cosmos had spoken twenty-six hours and saved the settlers their lands.—Peoria Democrat.

Pritchett's Speech.

The young fellows and girls at Pritchett Institute, Glasgow, Mo., went out at night with horns, pans, and bells to serenade the faculty. They made a diabolical noise in front of President Pritchett's house, and he came to a window to know what they wanted. "A speech, old Baldy," was the response. "I'll give you one," he cried, evidently displeased by the nickname. Then he blazed away with a shotgun, wounding two of the girls. He says that he meant only to scare them, and they charge that he aimed to hit.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

ENGLISH farmers in 1879 lost something like $500,000,000.

THE average life of a paper wheel under trucks of locomotive engines ranges from 300,000 to 1,641,880 miles, and under dining and palace cars, from 794,000 to 878,836 miles.

THERE are 60,000 locomotives in the United States, and each contains 2,800 different pieces, requiring renewal every ten or twelve years. This conveys a notion of the industries which railroads foster.

NEBRASKA has risen from the yield and area of 9,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn and 351,000 acres in 1871 to nearly 82,000,000 bushels and 2,677,690 acres in 1879; and still less than one-tenth of the State is under cultivation.

THE German papers publish the following figures concerning the newspapers and periodicals in existence: In Germany there are 3,778; in Austria, 1,200; in England, 2,509; in France, 2,000; in Italy, 1,226; in Russia, 500. Altogether there are in Europe 13,600 newspapers and periodicals. In Asia there are 388; in Africa, 50; in America, 9,129; and in Australia, 100. The number for the whole world is 23,200.

IN 1869 Great Britain imported 400,000,000 pounds of wool, and exported 259,000,000, leaving 141,000,000 pounds, which, added to the home production of 155,600,000, made a net supply of 296,000,000 pounds. Included in the imports are 4,250,000 pounds of alpaca and 9,750,000 pounds of mohair, besides 75,000,000 pounds of woolen rags intended to be torn up and used again. This is familiarly known as shoddy, and the trade in it has increased from 5,250,000 pounds in 1855 to the above large amount.

ACCORDING to the last statistics published by the French Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, the population of the republic is 37,000,000, of whom 12,000,000 live in cities and the remainder in the country. There are in France 210,000 individuals who have no special profession, 71,300 beggars and tramps, 1,531,000 professional men, 3,837,000 persons engaged in navigation and commerce, 9,274,000 tradesmen and workmen, 2,151,000 bondholders, and 18,968,000 persons engaged in agricultural pursuits. Of the latter 10,000,000 are land-owners, about 6,000,000 tenants, while 2,000,000 are market gardeners, viticulturists, and the like.

A Young Swell's Experience in Virginia.

A young society swell of Washington visited the interior of Virginia on one occasion, and had an experience that was not altogether happy. He visited church, and after service a young lady who owned a very comfortable place near there invited him to go home and take dinner with her. There were three or four very interesting young ladies stopping at her house, and of course he accepted her invitation with great pleasure; but his hair fairly stood on end when she said to him: "I guess you will have to take one of the girls on your horse; in dividing up our party one at least comes to you." The young man in question is not a heavy weight physically. He does not weigh over ninety pounds. The young woman who fell to his lot was a bouncing Virginia lass, plump and pretty, who would weigh at least 140 pounds. He was in no haste to get into the saddle. He watched very carefully how the rest of the fellows got their fair companions upon the upper deck. He was the last man to swing his horse in line. He had a little doubt, too, about his horse. The horse was very high-spirited, and had never been ridden double. He darted up to the horse-block, and the young woman was ready. The blanket was arranged behind, after the most approved fashion. He edged his chestnut up to the horse-block. She gave him one hand, and in a second she bounded firmly to her place behind him and wound her arms around him in as firm a hold as the proprieties of the occasion demanded. She was not the only one that had bounded. The horse bolted about ten feet in the air and came down on his fore feet, and, as the young fellow said, suddenly became very light behind. The young man, although a very good rider, said he would have gone over the horse's ears several times if it had not been for the young lady. She held on, and he felt perfectly convinced that if he went off she wouldn't, and so he stuck. His horse fought, shied, jumped and balked, greatly to the amusement of the young lady, who very near cracked several of his ribs in holding on to him when his horse bolted to the right and left. It was five miles to his destination. When he got off his horse finally and walked into the farm-house three great streams of perspiration slowly trickled down the side of his face. He was weak and trembling.

The lady of the house asked him how he liked the trip.

He said that under less exciting circumstances he might have relished the hugging part of it, but beyond that he was very willing to confess that it was one of the greatest tests that he had ever undergone in his life.

Health in Middle Age.

At the age of 35, says a writer in the Family Doctor, mankind, according to some eminent authorities, is said to have reached the meridian of life, while others name forty as the number of years of our earthly existence. But, be this as it may, no one who has taken the ordinary means to preserve his health in youth and early manhood should feel other than young at the age of forty-five, from which period until that of sixty, if life be spared to us, we shall do well to consider ourselves middle-aged, and to adopt greater precautions for the preservation of health and consequent happiness than might have been deemed necessary when youth was on our side. And if this be done, the period of middle age should be one of the greatest activity, of both body and mind. What though the hairs are turning gray? That but shows one has suffered sorrow and survived it, or that, sorrow apart, he is a man who thinks. And what though the limbs be not quite so nimble? Calm enjoyments foster thought and generate habits of that true temperance which conduce to long life and contentment more than anything can in this world, and, whatever some may say to the contrary, I maintain that the desire to live long is inherent in every healthy sane man or woman. To die of old age is the only natural death, and, if death may ever be said to be pleasant, the only pleasant one. Though younger than some of my professional brethren still in harness, I have nevertheless seen death in very many shapes and forms, and in almost every case I have found the aged more resigned to the inevitable than those less advanced in years. For a well-spent life is like a well-spent day; at its close there is a wish for a rest.

Interviewing an Actress.

Maybe the reporter didn't know how to interview an actress, and maybe that's why he had so much trouble. Having sent up his card and been admitted to her presence, he stated his business, and she said, languidly: "I'm sorry you've come; I don't fancy you newspaper men, and hate being interviewed." Maybe he knew this was just said for effect, and that she wouldn't miss the interview for a heap, but he replied, "Oh, well, then, I won't trouble you. Sorry I intruded. Good day." However, she got to the door first, and said, "Oh, now you're here, I'll oblige you." And he answered, "Oh, no; I wouldn't trouble you for the world." "But it won't be very much trouble." "Well, never mind; I don't care particularly about it." "But—but—in—fact —it will be a pleasure. I only object because reporters always ask the same questions, and then don't print just what you say." "Well, I'll try and do better than that," and they seated themselves. Then he asked:

"How did you celebrate your 34th birthday?" "Eh?"—jumping up—"what d'ye mean, sir! You're a mean wretch to ask such a question." Steps on her lapdog—addresses dog, "Drat your pelt, get out!" Then she observed him writing, and asked what he was doing. He replied, "I promised to print exactly what you said, and I have taken down your very words." "About the dog?" "Yes." "Goodness gracious! You won't print that?" "I will." "But that wasn't meant to print." "Can't help it." "Oh, but it won't do. You mustn't. Let's begin the interview now." "Very well. Which do you prefer as an advertisement—being robbed of diamonds, run away with by a hack, or having a divorce suit?" "Sir, I—I—don't do such things! I never heard such questions!" "I promised to try to vary the list you said had become so monotonous. How many husbands have you living?" "See here, if you don't stop this I'll send for one of 'em. That is—please state that I'm not married." "Just so. Do you shave your head?" "Sir; of course not! Are you crazy?"

"Look here, ma'am, I was to print just what you said."

"But I don't want you to."

"But it must be done."

"Well, then, if you don't ask me if the audiences everywhere are as enthusiastic as they are here, and what I do with all my bouquets, and if I don't almost feel that I ought to be in a boarding school instead of on the stage, as I'm so young, and if I don't find it very embarrassing to have all the men so madly in love with me, and several bank directors committing suicide because I won't marry them—if you don't ask me those questions I won't say another blessed word! So, there! And if you print what I've said I'll sue you for libel."—Boston Post.

History of a Celebrated Necklace.

The famous diamond necklace presented by the Khedive of Egypt to Gen. Sherman's eldest daughter on the occasion of her marriage to Lieut. Fitch has at last ceased to have any public history. It will be remembered that the necklace, valued by the Custom House authorities at $200,000, was held some time for the payment of $20,000 duties, which Lieut. Fitch, not being rich, could not pay. Congress finally passed an act authorizing the Custom House officers to deliver the diamonds to him free of duty, which was done, and they were sent to Washington for safe-keeping in the treasury. After this Lieut. Fitch ascertained that the yearly taxes on the diamonds in St. Louis county, Mo., where he lived, would be much more than his salary, and he once more found them an elephant on his hands. His father-in-law, Gen. Sherman, took pity on the boy, and returned the necklace with thanks to the donor in Egypt. Upon receiving them the Khedive wrote to the General, saying that it was not his desire that the diamonds should be given to any one member of his family, and, having learned that he had four daughters, it was his wish then that the diamonds should be mounted in sets, and divided equally between them. These daughters are Mrs. Fitch (nee Minnie Sherman), Ella Sherman, Lizzie Sherman, and Rachel Sherman. The necklace was then returned to the Sherman family, and mounted in four magnificent pendants, four pairs splendid solitaire ear-rings, and eight rings. These four ladies are now the happy possessors of four complete suits of diamonds, the value of each suit being at least $75,000. This makes each of them rich in her own right, thanks to the generosity of Egypt's former ruler.

Chased by a Water-Spout.

William H. Hallock, who not long ago was a passenger on a steamship of the Pacific Mail Company, tells of an exciting experience while the ship was off the coast of Guatemala. A water-spout of tremendous power suddenly appeared near the ship. In the midst of the consternation the Captain ordered his course reversed, and soon the steamer was driving along, with the waterspout in pursuit. Its crest was hidden in a dark mass of cloud, its base seeming to operate like an immense revolving colendar, while the entire external periphery formed a cushion of foam, over which the sea bird screamed, occasionally seizing upon the dead fish which came within reach. The spout itself formed a sort of spiral cylinder, streaked with opaque parallel lines through its whole length, from the surface of the sea upward. These lines were evidently ascending columns of water, for afterward, when the upper and lower sections became detached the accumulated volume of water overhead immediately began its descent within the body of the spout, as though it had been the valve of an immense syringe. The water thus released must have been equal to several tons, as it was solid and almost black and returned to the sea with a loud roar, all the other parts of the aerial structure gradually dissipating. Perhaps the most singular of all was the serpentine form assumed by the section nearest the clouds, which moved off at first almost horizontally and then turned up itself in a perfect coil, so that for a moment, when the end of the aqueous rope—or whatever it was—switched around squarely to the eye of the observer, showing a section, it resembled a ball of ink. When the spout was in its finest condition lightning several times flew through the penumbra in zig-zag courses, making a spectacle not only terrible in the manifestation of power, but sublime and beautiful.—Philadelphia Times.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

TO CURE A COUGH.—Roast a lemon very carefully without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot, cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is as good as it is agreeable to the taste.

HICCOUGH IN CHILDREN.—According to the Lyon Medicale, Dr. Grellety has observed that this complaint in children was immediately stopped by giving them a lump of sugar saturated with table vinegar. The same remedy was tried on adults, with similar instantaneous success.

INFANTS' FOOD.—The Oneida Community, having brought fifty children through the perils of childhood without loss by death, give a few points as to how this was accomplished. Their children are weaned when about 9 months old, and the first substitute for mother's milk is either Robinson's Prepared Groats or his Patent Barley, cooked in the same way that clear starch is ordinarily made. The child is first fed on a mixture of one-third milk, two-thirds porridge, with a little sugar, and gradually the amount of milk is increased until no porridge is used with it. After thirteen months the child thrives on milk alone for a time. The writer in the American Socialist, from whom we have quoted the above, says no more on the subject, and, we think, has omitted to give an important part of it. It is in the transition from a plain milk diet to solid food that so many mistakes are made. Too many children are directly promoted to the family table, and allowed to make their own choice of what it bears.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

The Doctor's Advice.

T. G. met an old friend, who was formerly a prosperous young lumberman up North, but whose bad habits of drinking resulted as they often do, though he has since reformed and is trying to do better. "How are you?" said T. G. "Pretty well, thank you, but I have just been to a doctor to have him look at my throat." "What's the matter?" "Well, the doctor couldn't give me any encouragement. At least, he couldn't find what I wanted him to find." "What did you expect him to find?" "I asked him to look down my throat for the sawmill and farm that had gone down there." "And did he see anything of it?" "No, but he advised me, if ever I had another mill, to run it by water."

THE churches throughout Spain are decorated with the canvases of the early painters, but so hung, says a correspondent, that there is no hour in the day that a good light can be found on them.

COLTON, the discoverer of the Bobtail lode, in Colorado, which has yielded millions of dollars, is passing the evening of his days on a little ranch on the Platte, where he is barely able to make a living.

AUBURN COURIER

[illegible] Lowry

[illegible] has declared himself an advocate of [illegible].

The city of Baltimore is preparing to celebrate its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary next fall. A grand banquet, addresses and the reading of historical papers will be features of the occasion.

In an address at the Parnell banquet in Cork, Ireland, one of the speakers alluded approvingly to the work of Hartmann, the Nihilist, and said, if the present constitutional land-reform movement failed in its object, Ireland might be able to produce another Hartmann, and probably with better results.

Business is quickly done in Chicago. For instance: A woman, desiring to enter a church for a short time, confided her baby to a girl, who went away, leaving the infant on the church steps. A good Samaritan came along, and took the little one to the Foundlings' Home. Probably in half an hour some one would have adopted the baby, had not the frantic mother ascertained its fate and hastened to the rescue. It was a narrow escape from a total loss.

A Deadwood correspondent of the Chicago Times, in order to show the output of precious metals from the Black Hills mines, presents the following figures: Fifteen hundred stamps in operation; capacity of stamp per day, two tons; per month, sixty; per year, 720. Total crushing capacity per year, 1,080,000 tons. Yield of rock per ton, $8; of total rock crushed, $8,640,000. This year there will be added 400 stamps, which will increase the yearly capacity 280,000 tons, and the revenue $2,240,000.

A San Diego (Cal.) man caught a fine specimen of the California vulture, and gave it to the proprietor of a small menagerie to keep for him. In the menagerie was a pet coon, and the vulture was placed in a tree above the box in which the coon was kept. In the morning fur and feathers marked the spot, the vulture lay on his back, claws up, stiff in death, and the coon lay on his side, still alive, but in a very dilapidated condition. The expression of his face suggested the remark attributed to the parrot after a somewhat similar experience with a monkey.

The Irish Register General's return of the extent of land under crops in Ireland shows a decrease in last year of 82,172 acres. The diminution is principally in the oats sown. The decrease in crops is pretty evenly distributed throughout the island. The depreciation in the money value of the crops amounts to $50,073,940, as compared with 1878, which was also a bad year. The principal deficiency was in potatoes. The yield of these for 1879 was but 22,273,520 cwts., against an average for ten years of 60,782,918 cwts. There was also a serious decrease in cereals. The cause was wet weather and a low temperature.

Buck Singleton, one of the most desperate moonshiners of North Carolina, was recently married to Lillie Latour, the daughter of another noted moonshiner, under romantic circumstances. For several days the distillers had been pursued so closely that they could not halt by day, but when they reached the wildest and most inaccessible portions of Alexander county they sent two men to do picket duty, while two others were sent on a prospecting tour for a minister. They rode twenty-seven miles, and finally secured a Baptist preacher, telling him they wanted him to marry a sick man so that his affianced might get his property in case he died. When the minister reached the rendezvous he was directed to perform the ceremony as quickly as possible, after which he was given $50 in gold and escorted home.

Incident of the Grant banquet in Galveston: Gen. Sheridan was called up, and said he knew Texas very well in all her parts, and was glad to see her steady improvement. He once made a remark about Texas. He wanted to explain. He had been down to the border to consult with representatives of Juarez in regard to driving Maximilian out of Mexico, and was called suddenly to New Orleans. He traveled by wagon. His officers fell sick, and he was in such a hurry he had to leave them. He arrived at Galveston at dark, sick, tired, dusty, and mad. He went into a little hotel to put down his name, when a newspaper man appeared at his elbow, and asked how he liked Texas. Then he said if he owned hell and Texas he would rent out Texas and live in hell. He did not mean anything against Texas, but only that he was mad at the newspaper for asking such a question. [Loud laughter and cheers. A voice, "Tiger for the explanation."

The passage of the Senate bill to remove the political disabilities of Roger A. Pryor recalls the following incidents of his career to the Philadelphia Press: He was one of the "fighting editors" of Richmond, and had figured in a duel or two before he entered public life. While a member of the House of Representatives he challenged Mr. Potter, of Wisconsin, to fight a duel, but, when the latter chose bowie-knives as the weapons, Mr. Pryor concluded that the code did not require him to continue the quarrel. Mr. Pryor rose to the rank of Brigadier General in the Southern army, and was considered a brave soldier. His war experiences tamed his fiery nature, and he was one of the first "to accept the situation" after the surrender. He removed to New York, settled down to the practice of the law, and has attained distinction in his profession.

An adventure which put five lives in peril, but resulted fortunately, is reported from Lake Champlain. A gentleman and lady started from Willsboro for the Vermont shore in an ice-boat, whose owner had agreed to take them across, although he knew the ice was thin and that there was "one pretty bad place." The first alarm was when the runners cut through the soft ice and the boat stopped; the second was when a large air hole was barely avoided, and the third was when the boat sunk through the treacherous ice into the lake. Just at this point two skaters, who had witnessed the disaster, hastened to the rescue from the Vermont shore, pushing before them a light sleigh. The lady, a daughter of Capt. Anderson, of the Lake Champlain Transportation Company, seated herself in the sleigh and the perilous journey was continued. Soon open water appeared and the party turned back toward the New York shore, but the ice suddenly began to break up all around them and they were finally rescued by persons from Essex, after an hour or more spent in springing from cake to cake.

Having struck a happy thought or a good item, it is hard to tell which, an Arkansas paper put it into shape as follows: Mr. Lawnisky, a Polander, who came to this country from Michigan, and who resides ten miles east of here, was greatly frightened on last Wednesday by an occurrence which placed his little boy, Varaf, in a perilous position. The child, Varaf, was in the barn-yard feeding corn to the chickens, and in the work finding a childish amusement. The little boy's bubbles of glee, blown through the reed of joy, soon burst, and cries of distress were borne upon the air to the father's ears. An eagle, which had been soaring above the yard for some time, had pounced upon the lad and commenced an attack upon him with its talons. The child, rendered helpless by extreme fright, was dragged along the ground a short distance by the rapacious representative of a $10 gold coin, and would no doubt have been seriously injured but for the opportune arrival of the father, who, with remarkable presence of mind, picked up a rail, and, beating the bird off from its intended victim, soon dispatched it. The boy suffers more from the shock occasioned by the fright than by the few scratches he received. The bird measured seven and a half feet in length and is of the bald species.

A Test of Indian Courage.

An Indian inter-tribal fair was held, not long since, in the Indian Territory, in order to show some of the results of civilizing the savages. A number of tribes attended and displayed articles of home manufacture, such as needle-work, embroidery, lace-work, and blankets. Many of the Indians had their photographs taken, and showed a childish delight in looking at their faces. Others, however, could not be persuaded to go near the camera. Yellow Bear, of the Arapahoes, was the first to pass through the ordeal of a sitting. He suffered himself to be properly seated, and the camera to be brought to bear upon him; but when the prepared plate was placed in the box, and the cloth lifted, he leaped to his feet with a bound, and attempted to leave the tent. All attempts to reason with him failed. At last a photograph of a Cheyenne, taken some years ago, was shown to him. He looked at it a moment, then went quietly back to his chair, and sat there like a statue while his negative was taken. He explained that no Cheyenne warrior was a greater brave than he. The gigantic Osages, on the other hand, would not approach the tent. They say the camera robs them of their good spirits. The Kickapoos gave the same reason, and the photographer was peremptorily ordered out of their country on that account. The Indian is a profound believer in the power of spirits for good or evil, and takes care never to offend them.—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

Southern papers say that Humphrey Marshall's daughter, Mrs. Nellie McAfee, has notified the Legislature of Kentucky that unless it provides for a monument for her father she will build one herself, and inscribe upon it an epitaph that will fitly set forth the ingratitude of his State.

FARM NOTES.

Three pecks of boiled potatoes, fed a day, warm, is a remedy for diarrhea in cattle.

Keep a good supply of old mortar, or crushed oyster shells, where your fowls can help themselves, and see that the gravel box is kept full.

The chinch bug, so destructive to the wheat crop, and the bed-bug both belong to the same order, yet one has wings and the other is wingless.

Hogs are sometimes troubled by disordered stomach. The best antidote is charcoal. Aside from charcoal, charred corn-cobs, or charred corn have a good effect.

In trimming off branches they should be cut close to the trunk, so that no dead stumps shall disfigure the tree; also that the bark may readily grow over.

Of all the products of the soil none are so prolific in seeds as weeds; 60,000 seeds have been counted upon one mullein stalk. Some people cultivate them with great faithfulness and reap luxuriant crops.

My observation has been that when all the conditions for both are equally favorable, the cut seed from large potatoes yield 8 to 10 per cent. better than small ones planted whole.—Henry Ives, Genesee county, N. Y.

Plowing land when it is nearly dry is nearly as hurtful as when it is wet. In plowing, the soil should have enough moisture to cause the furrows to fall loosely from the plow with no appearance of packing and no lumps.

Mixed husbandry is what we need. The farmer who grows something of everything adapted to his locality will be safer and, in the long run, will save more than he who devotes his energies and land mainly to one or two crops.

Saturating ashes with kerosene and applying a handful in a hill, will keep the striped bugs from cucumbers. It is not the bugs that recommend the recipe, but the people who have tried it. It is said to be more effective than a legislative enactment.

Eggs intended for hatching should be promptly gathered two or three times a day. It is not known how much chilling an egg will bear and still retain the life of the embryo, but it is not safe nor desirable to take any unnecessary risks in the matter.

The Utica Herald says that for five years past the average quantity of milk to the pound of cheese has steadily increased in that dairy district, and gives two reasons for it: First, that a firmer cheese is demanded; and, second, that the practice of watering the milk is increasing.

French and German authorities recommend the use of salt at the rate of 150 pounds per acre for clover and other leguminous plants; for wheat and flax, 250 pounds, and for barley and potatoes 300 pounds, to be sown broadcast in the spring season, before the herbage has attained any considerable growth.

About the best way to prepare Osage orange seeds for planting is to place them in a coarse gunny-bag; tie a rope around the top of it, and lay it flat down in a stream of running water, turning it over every day until the sprouts can be seen coming through the sack, when they will be in the best possible condition to plant, and should be planted immediately. They will sprout in six days to two weeks.—G. F. H., Hutchinson, Kan.

A first-class authority tells us that the good ox should have a long, lean face and bright hazel eyes, which show capability to receive instruction and disposition to obey it. Large nostrils denote the capability of the ox to work on a hot day. Very large horns at the base denote laziness. Full breast, straight back, wide ribs—by which is meant the ribs that round out nearly as wide as the hip bones—and wide gambril, are evidences of strength. Straight knees, broad toes, pointed forward, show an ox that can travel on hard road or pavement.

An experienced farmer says: "I have thoroughly tested planting potatoes whole, in halves, quarters, eighths, and in one, two and three eyes, and my conclusion is that cut to a single eye on a piece and two pieces in a hill is the best economy for the most profit. I prefer planting in drills, three or three and a half feet apart, dropping the pieces together every ten or twelve inches. It is true that, in this way of planting, there are not as many potatoes, but what there are grow to a good size for the table, and will yield more bushels to the acre than more seeding will give."

What a Husband Learned About Trimmings.

A gentleman not versed in the intricacies of feminine attire evidently thought it his duty to become a little critical in such matters after his marriage. Of course nothing was good enough for his bride, and several times he made slighting remarks about an overdress of hers. It was not heavy enough nor long enough to suit his fancy.

"I have a new black silk to trim," she said, "and you may buy me the trimmings in Boston to suit yourself." This he very cheerfully consented to do, merely asking her for the number of yards of fringe and silk and jet gimp for its heading. He entered a large Boston store, asked to see the prettiest of silk trimmings, and, after much careful thought on the subject, selected the softest and heaviest of the chenille silk fringe, and the widest and prettiest and most jetted of gimp, and had the required number of yards cut off. He remembered having heard somewhere that trimmings were expensive, yet, after all, they were but trifles, and a very small part of the whole. Yet, he thought, as he took out his pocket-book, the pile looked so soft and pretty and glittered so that, perhaps, it would break pretty well into a $10 bill, and he had it ready. The clerk figured away, and remarked, as he signaled a cash boy, "Fifty-one dollars and seventy cents, sir." Whatever the inner man may have felt, there was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was newly-married, or it might have been different. He has now one more commission. His wife insists that he shall go to Boston once more and buy her a black silk suitable for that trimming, the one she has being not half fine enough; but he refuses to do any more shopping, and falls into a brown study when a glittering garment sweeps past him, and is convinced that the trimmings of this vain world would clothe the naked and feed the hungry. —Boston Transcript.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Railroad Cake.—One teacup of sugar, three eggs, two table-spoonfuls of new milk, one teacupful of flour, one teaspoonful of cream-of-tartar and one-half teaspoonful of soda. Bake ten minutes.

Soda Biscuit.—One quart of flour, one teaspoonful soda; two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar; a little salt, and new milk enough to mix soft. Dissolve the soda in the milk and mix the cream of tartar in the flour.

The Queen of Puddings.—One pint of bread crumbs to one quart of milk, one cup of sugar, the yelks of three eggs beaten, the grated rind of a lemon, a piece of butter the size of an egg, and a cup of raisins. Bake till done, but not watery. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, and stir in a teacup of sugar. Spread over this, a layer of jelly, pour the whites of the eggs over the pudding, and replace in the oven to be baked slightly. To be eaten without sauce.

Hard Soap.—One pound of concentrated lye dissolved in two quarts of soft water; pour into a large pitcher to cool. Melt five pounds grease of any kind, have it milk-warm and pour in the lye slowly, stirring rapidly until it begins to thicken. Add one or one-half ounce oil of sassafras. Pour into a box one foot square and cover it, leaving it in a warm place for three or four days. Cut into squares and it is ready for use. Try it.

College Pudding.—Take eight ounces bread crumbs, eight ounces suet, eight ounces currants, one ounce citron peel, one ounce orange peel, a little sugar and nutmeg, three eggs beaten, yelks and whites separately, and a glass of brandy. Mix well, and shape them into balls; rub them over with egg and roll them in flour. Fry a nice brown in boiling butter or lard, and drain them on blotting paper. Or they may be put into small molds and baked in the oven. In either case, serve with wine or brandy sauce.

Corn Flour Pudding.—Boil one quart of milk, then beat the yelks of four eggs with four table-spoonfuls of corn flour and a little milk; stir into the boiling milk, let it boil up once, and turn into a pudding dish; then beat the whites of the eggs to a froth, and add four spoonfuls of white powdered sugar; cover the pudding with the mixture, and set in the oven and brown lightly; flavor with vanilla, lemon, etc. The frosting is improved by adding a flavor to it.

The flavor of food baked or broiled in earthenware is said by those who have made the experiment to be far superior to that of vegetable or animal food cooked in the same way in iron vessels, for the reason that iron is a conductor of heat, while earthenware is a non-conductor; consequently, food cooked in the latter is rarely ever burned, the degree of heat not varying perceptibly during the process of cooking, thus preserving the flavor of what is cooked, as well as uniformity throughout the substance of the meat, vegetables, or grains, until the process of cooking is completed. The fire in stove or range that parches and burns in iron vessels, and either impairs or spoils the food, is powerless to injure the contents of earthenware.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Witty.

A lawyer's wit, sometimes, does more than enliven a dull hour in court. It so opens the eyes of the Judge that he sees with clearness a point that otherwise he would have ignored. An illustration of this penetrating wit once occurred at the trial of a sailor in a New England seaport.

The sailor, after having drunk to excess in a low saloon, had quarreled with the landlord, and beaten him severely with a bottle snatched from the bar.

As the case admitted of no legal defense, the sailor's lawyer, putting in a plea of guilty, addressed himself to the court in order to secure as light a sentence as possible. He urged that the prisoner had acted under the influence of liquor—and very poor liquor at that.

"But, sir," said the court, not inclined to view the appeal with favor, "we are to consider the aggravated character of the offense. Your client admits he assaulted this man with a bottle."

"Yes, your Honor," interposed the witty lawyer, "we admit all that; but I beg you to remember that this man first assaulted my client with its contents."

The court smiled at this unexpected point, and Jack got the benefit of it in a light sentence.

The Decadence of Greece.

Nowadays a cart cannot pass along the road from Pylos to Sparta, where a carriage could travel in the days of Homer, and a mule now climbs with difficulty over rocks through which Pyrrhus led a train of elephants. Even vegetation has withered and decayed. Mountains once covered with forests are now bare rocks. Water is sought for in vain in the channels of streams immortalized in song. The oak tree has disappeared, and the forests of chestnut are yearly diminishing in extent. The quantity of volona is decreasing, and the fruit of the chestnut tree has already degenerated to such a degree as to be a mere ball of fiber. The apples of Lombotina, once an article of export, are now almost unfit for sale in the domestic market. The best land remains uncultivated, because it would require too great an expenditure of capital in order to drain it in winter, to irrigate it in summer and to clear it from weeds and grapes, the roots of which form Gordian knots three feet below the surface of the soil. The vegetable earth, that enabled ancient Greece to support millions where thousands now starve, has been washed into the sea or formed into malarious swamps since, the terrace by which it was supported on the mountains' side have been allowed to crumble and decay.

A Strange Bedfellow.

Apropos of hunting and fishing, did you ever hear of a wild-cat taking possession of a spare bed in an inhabited cabin. Such a case really occurred this winter in this vicinity, at the herd-house of Overholt & Cronse. A Mr. Burns had been left in charge, and for several nights, after he had retired, was disturbed by a scrambling noise in the chimney, followed by the sight of two glaring, fiery eyeballs in the opposite bed; and when he (Burns) moved or made a noise the low, fierce growl of some wild animal. This kind of thing occurring for several nights in succession so discomposed Burns that he finally vamosed the ranche, and for some time the intruder had things his own way. With plenty of fat beef and venison in store he must have come to the conclusion that he had struck comfortable quarters. John Garrison, a miner, hearing of the circumstance, made his way to the herd-house, determined to interview the beast that had taken possession. When he arrived at the ranch, about 4 p. m., he was somewhat surprised to find the animal in bed and disposed to fight for the preempted establishment, but at sight of the gun the miner carried he flew up the chimney and into the brush. Garrison hung around until dark, then went to bed, placing his gun where he could reach it, and quietly waited for Mr. Cat. About 10 o'clock he heard a scrambling in the monstrous chimney, followed by the sound of stealthy footsteps across the floor and the sight of the flaming eyes peering out at him from the spare bed. John carefully raised his rifle, took as good aim as he could in the gloom and darkness at the shining orbs and fired. The report of the rifle was followed by a short scream of agony, then the sound of struggling in the opposite bunk. The intrepid hunter struck a light, and there, sure enough, was his cat, fully five feet in length, lying in the bed, its life blood slowly oozing through a bullet hole in its breast and bedabbling with its crimson stream the blankets on which it had sought repose.—Salt Lake City Herald.

Uncle Johnny at Church.

When good Gov. S., who is a most devout Episcopalian, was the Chief Magistrate of Kentucky, he was wont to frequently entertain the members of the General Assembly at the Governor's mansion. To one of these levees came, with the members from his county, an old mountaineer who had just reached Frankfort with a raft of logs which he had brought down the Kentucky river.

The old man, who was called familiarly "Uncle Johnny," soon became the center of an admiring group, to whom his jean clothes were not at all an improper attire for the Governor's levee; and his tongue being loosed by a glass of sherry wine—which he then tasted for the first time in his life—he was entertaining his auditors with stories from "his country," when the Governor approached.

"Uncle Johnny, here is the Governor,' said one of the company; and straightway the old man was silent, for he was overwhelmed by this first vision of the majesty of the commonwealth.

"Go on with your story, Uncle Johnny," said some one; "the Governor will like to hear it."

"Yes, go on, Uncle Johnny," said the Governor, with a kindly smile of encouragement; and the old man, thus convinced that even the Governor was also a man, concluded his narrative.

Then, becoming bolder, he ventured to address the Governor, saying:

"Guvner, I went to your meeting yistidy, and I seen whar you sets."

He had been to the Episcopal Church, and had been shown the Governor's pew.

"Did you, Uncle Johnny?" responded Gov. S. "And how did you like it?"

"Well, Guvner, I never knowed much what they was a doin', but I riz and fell with 'em every time."

A Story of Texas and Arkansas.

An eminent divine from New England, traveling in Texas for his health, impaired by arduous clerical duties, upon arriving at one of the towns, went in search of the barber's shop for repairs and improvements. On entering an establishment of this kind, he observed a big double-barreled gun leaning against the wall. Having a constitutional awe of firearms, he hastily asked the barber if the gun was loaded. A half-shaved native, who occupied the chair, turned around his lather-beaten face and exclaimed:

"Stranger, ef you're in an all-fired hurry, you'll find a six-shooter, what is loaded, in my coat tail pocket!"

This recalls another story of an English tourist who proposed to visit Arkansas, and asked a citizen if he ought to provide himself with a revolver.

"Well," replied the citizen, "you mout not want one for a month, and you mout not want one for three months; but ef ever you did want one, you kin bet you'd want it almighty sudden!"

How to Catch Minnows.

Anglers are very often troubled to get minnows enough for bait. A Tennessean now comes to the front, however, with a simple little arrangement with which minnows by the million may be caught. It is made of glass, and in appearance resembles a cuspidor, with an adjustable top. It is constructed upon the old-fashioned basket fish-trap principle—the finny tribe entering the trap through a funnel-shaped aperture from which they are never able to extricate themselves, owing to the transparent character of their prison. The glass trap is perforated to permit of the passage of the water, while at the base is placed a metal adjustable slide, covering a miniature grate about a couple of inches wide, through which the minnows are removed as they are needed.

Butter 2,500 Years Old.

At a meeting of the Society of Public Analysis, in London, a paper by Prof. Church and Mr. Wigner "on two samples of ancient butter" was read, of which the Chemical News give the following extract: The first was a sample of Irish bog butter, and its probable age was judged to be about 1,000 years. The sample contains nearly 4 per cent. of curd, which consisted partly of vegetable matter derived from the bog, but contained quite enough animal matter to prove that the butter had been originally made from animal milk, and was not a mere artificial fat. Its fatty character had, however, been entirely changed, and the glycerides, of which the fat had originally consisted, had been decomposed so as to leave simply a mixture of the fatty acids, which constitute the acid portion of animal fats. The butter had, in fact, become changed into a substance closely resembling in character and composition the substance of which good composite candles are composed. The result is singular, as showing that length of time combined with exposure to moisture will effect the decomposition which the manufacturer of stearine has to effect by the agency of heat and acids. The other and older sample of butter had been taken from an alabaster vase in an Egyptian tomb; it had evidently been melted and poured into a vase, and carefully sealed over. This sample was probably about 2,500 years old, but the preservation had been so perfect that it was only slightly rancid, and had fully retained the chemical properties of genuine butter, the fat not having been decomposed to any sensible extent. This sample possessed a decided taste and smell of butter, while the sample from the bog was cheesy rather than buttery in smell.

The Lost Umbrella.

"There!" she cried, in an excited voice: "I should like to know what's become of the umbril. I sot it up agin the counter when I come in, and afore I could turn round it's gone—and it was only a Monday that I gin 4 shillings and 6 pence for 't!" "What kind of an umbrella was it, ma'am?" asked the polite clerk in his blandest tones. "A speck and span new gingham, young man," was the eager response, "with an iv'ry handle on't, and a—" "Like the one in your hand, ma'am, for instance?" "Sakes alive!" she exclaimed. And one might have thought she saw a serpent rather than her own "spick and span gingham," with the "iv'ry handle" clutched fast in her hand. She colored up like a druggist's window, and went off amidst unintelligible excuses. She never felt so flustrated in all her born days, as she told Jemima Ann when she got home.—Boston Transcript.

A Peck at the Cheese.

Geo. W. Peck, of the La Cross Sun, recently delivered an address before the Wisconsin state dairyman's association. The following is an extract from the witty document:

Fellow-Cream-a-tionists: In calling upon me, on this occasion, to enlighten you upon a subject that is dear to the hearts of all Americans, you have got the right man in the right place. It makes me proud to come to my old home and unfold truths that have been folded since I can remember. It may be said by scoffers, and it has been said to-day, in my presence, that I didn't know enough to even milk a cow. I deny the allegation; show me the alligator. If any gentleman present has got a cow here with him, and I can borrow a clothes-wringer, I will show you whether I can milk a cow or not. Or, if there is a cheese here handy, I will demonstrate that I can—runnet.

The manufacture of cheese and butter has been among the earliest industries. Away back in the history of the world, we find Adam and Eve conveying their milk from the garden of Eden in a one-horse wagon to the cool spring cheese factory, to be weighed in the balance. Whatever may be said of Adam and Eve to their discredit in the marketing of the products of their orchard, it has never been charged that they stopped at the pump and put water in their milk cans Doubtless you all remember how Cain killed his brother Abel because Able would not let him do the churning. We can picture Cain and Able driving mooly cows up to the house from the pasture in the southeast corner of the garden, and Adam standing at the bars with a tin pail and a three-legged stool, smoking a meerschaum pipe and singing "Hold the fort for I am coming through the rye," while Eve sat on the veranda altering over her last year's polonaise, and winking at the devil who stood behind the milk-house singing, "I want to be an angel." After he got through milking he came up and saw Eve blushing, and he said, "Madame, cheese it," and she chose it.

But to come down to the present day, we find that cheese has become one of the most important branches of manufacture. It is next in importance to the silver interests. And, fellow cheese mongers, you are doing yourselves great injustice that you do not petition congress to pass a bill to remonetize cheese. There is more cheese made in this country than there is silver, and it is more valuable. Suppose you had not eaten a mouthful for thirty days, and you should have placed on the table before you ten dollars stamped out of silver bullion on one plate and nine dollars stamped out of cheese bullion on another plate. Which would you take first? Though the face value of the nine cheese dollars would be ten per cent. below the face value of the ten silver dollars, you would take the cheese. You could use it to better advantage in your business. Hence I say cheese is more valuable than silver, and should be made legal tender for all debts, public or private, except pew rent. I may be in advance of other financiers, who have studied the currency question, but I want to see the time come, and I trust the day is not far distant, when 412½ grains of cheese will be equal to a dollar in codfish, and when the merry jingle of slices of cheese shall be heard in every pocket. Then every cheese factory can make its own coin, money will be plenty, everybody will be happy, and there never will be any more war. It may be asked how this currency can be redeemed. I would have an inconvertable bond, made of limburger cheese, which is stronger and more durable. When this is done you can tell the rich from the poor man by the smell of his money Now-a-days many of us do not even get a smell of money, but in the good days which are coming the gentle zephyr will waft to us the able-bodied limburger, and we shall know that money is plenty.

The manufacture of cheese is a business that a poor man can engage in as well as a rich man. I say it, without fear of successful contradiction, and say it boldly, that a poor man, with, say 200 cows, if he thoroughly understands his business, can market more cheese than a rich man who owns 800 oxen. This is susceptible to demonstration. If my boy showed a desire to become a statesman, I would say to him, "young man, get married, buy a mooly cow, go to Sheboygan county, and start a cheese factory." Speaking of cows, did it ever occur to you, gentlemen, what a saving it would be to you if you should adopt mooly cows instead of horned cattle? It takes at least three tons of hay and a large quantity of ground feed annually to keep a pair of horns fat, and what earthly use are they? Statistics show that there are annually killed 45,000 grangers by cattle with horns. You pass laws to muzzel dogs, because one in ten thousand go mad, and yet more people are killed by cattle horns than by dogs. What the country needs is more mooly cows. Now that I am on the subject, it may be asked what is the best breed for the dairy. My opinion is divided between the southdown and the cochin china. Some like one best and some the other, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death.

There are many reforms that should be inaugurated in the manufacture of cheese. Why should cheese be made round? I am inclined to the belief that the making of cheese round, is a superstition. Who had not rather buy a good square piece of cheese, than a wedge shaped chunk, all rind at one end, and as thin as a congressman's excuse for voting back pay at the other? Make your cheese square and the consumer will rise up and call you another.

Another reform that might be inaugurated would be to veneer the cheese with building paper or clap-board, instead of the time-honored piece of towl. I never saw cheese cut that I didn't think that the cloth around it had seen service as a bandage on some other patient. But I may have been wrong. Another thing that does not seem to be right, is to see so many holes in cheese. It seems to me that a solid cheese, one made by one of the old masters, with no holes in it—I do not accuse you of cheating, but don't you feel a little ashamed when you see a cheese cut, and the holes are the biggest part of it? The little cells may be handy for the skipper, but the consumer feels the fraud in his innermost soul.

Among the improvements made in the manufacture of cheese I must not forget that of late years the cheese does not resemble the grindstone as it did years ago. The time has been when if the farmer could not find his grindstone all he had to do was to mortice a hole in the middle of a cheese, and turn it and grind his scythe. Before the invention of nitro-glycerine, it was a good day's work to hew off cheese enough for a meal. Time has worked wonders in cheese.

In Indiana, a husband, after a spree, was led home by one of his friends, who after posing him safely on the door steps, rang the bell, and retreated somewhat deviously to the other side of the street, to see if it would be answered. Promptly the door was opened, and the fond spous, who had waited for her truant husband, beheld him in all his toddiness.

"Why, Ury, is this you?"

"Yes, my dear."

"What in the world has kept you so?"

"Been out on a little turn with the boys, my d-d-arling."

"Why, Ury, you're intoxicated!"

"Y-e-s, dear, I estimate that's so."

"What on earth made you get drunk. And why, oh, why do you come home to me in this dreadful state?"

"Because, my darling, all the other places r' shut up!"

A doctor went out west to practice his profession. An old friend met him on the street one day, and asked him how he was succeeding in his business. "First-rate" he replied; "I've had one case." "Well, and what was that?" "It was a birth," said the doctor. "How did you succeed with that?" Well, the old woman died, and the child died; but, by the grace of God, I'll save the old man yet!"

The call for the democratic county convention will be published soon, giving the representation each township and precinct will be entitled to.

Everybody should remember that when the census enumerator comes around asking pertinent questions, a refusal to reply will subject the recusant to a fine of "not exceeding $100." Even the question as to age must be accurately and promptly answered, however disagreeable may be the process.

There never was a time when the democrats of DeKalb county were more energetic than they are now. Each township seems to be striving to excel, and men are taking hold who have stood back and looked on for several years. The success of last week will encourage democrats in every township to prepare for the great national struggle next fall, when the country must be redeemed from fraud and corruption, the state must be made permanently democratic and every candidate on the democratic county ticket must be elected. We ask every democrat in the county to gird on the armor and be prepared for the conflict.

Why Are There Any Unmarried Women?

[Cricket on the Hearth.]

One of the greatest social problems of the day is to explain why there are so many marriageable women who never get married. Some say that it is owing to an excess in numbers of women over men, in consequence of which there are not husbands enough to go round. This, however, is disproved by statistics. Take the world through, and figures show that there are as many men in it as there are women. Others attribute it to the expensiveness of modern life. Men do not marry because it is said they cannot afford to. But the fact is, that no man who truly loved a woman ever hesitated to become engaged to her and eventually marry her because of poverty. There are cold-blooded men, with no idea of any feeling for a woman stronger than languid admiration, who may be deterred from assuming what they regard as a burden in the shape of a wife, unless assured of a liberal income, but most are not so calculating. Others, again, attribute the evil to woman's fastidiousness. They expect too much in a husband, and, while waiting for an impossible shadow, let the possible substance slip through their fingers. This is a libel on the sex. As a rule they are no more fastidious than men are, and are just as susceptible as men to that enchantment of love which invests its object with every perfection and covers up every fault. So far as men and women are concerned, they are as prone to marriage now as in any period of the world's history. Nevertheless, there are the women waiting for husbands and not getting them. They are pretty, they are accomplished, they are sensible, and, under proper training, they would make excellent wives and mothers, but they never get a chance. What seems to be needed is a more thorough method of bringing men and women into social contact with each other.

A Theory that Won't Answer.

[Albany Argus.]

The fact that Grant was surrounded by peculators, and that he packed the offices with them, that he promoted them in proportion to their success in peculation, and that they gorged him with presents, interferes with the theory that he was "personally untainted." That theory had better be retired from service.

He Was Glad.

[Galveston (Tex.) News.]

A stranger from the interior, who happened to be strolling down Market street, asked a proverbially uncouth customer when the next train arrived. The rough party replied: "What in the Helen Blazes is that my business?" A bystander, wishing to put up a joke on the man, said: "Don't you know that was Gen. Grant?" "You don't say so? I am glad that I didn't say any strong language."

Still It Goes On.

A special to the Chicago Tribune, not a great while since, tells of more scandal at Washington in these words: "Yesterday a woman named Susan Wheeler died of an abortion, and the name of Simkins, a treasury clerk, is connected with the affair. The Simkins involved in the alleged abortion is Fisher A. Simkins, a clerk in the office of the controller of the currency. He used to be stenographer to the controller, but was transferred some time ago. Simkins is an Ohio man. He was appointed in the department from that state about two years ago. He was tried in the courts here on the charge of rape. It was alleged that he raped a small colored girl who brought him his week's washing. On his first trial he was convicted. He secured a second trial, and was acquitted. A short time ago, while supposed to be at work in his office, he wrote an obscure letter to a woman of his acquaintance. He left it on his table, the messenger came by, and, thinking it was an official document to be press-copied, he impressed it on the letter book. The book went into one of the rooms where ladies were employed, and there it was seen by them. He denied that he wrote such letter, but, being comforted with the proof said it was written to his wife. Simpkins made a statement before the district attorney to-day to the effect that he merely befriended the woman, who has since died."

Third Term.

Ex-President Woolsey has written a letter to a gentleman in Springfield, Mass., in which he earnestly opposes the election of any man to the presidency for a third term. He says:

"One effect of breaking once the habit in question, would be the opportunity held out to a clique within a party of continuing their special influence in the government, by the election of one who is indebted to them for his success. In a government like ours, such a clique becomes all powerful and selfish, so that the sooner it is disbanded the better. Another effect is, that the president, after two terms, would be tempted to accept the offers of his friends, to endeavor to continue him in authority, and it is such considerations that have made limitation to a single term seem at present, to be desirable in the view of many. And aside from these reasons, if a party is to remain in power for 16 or 24 years or longer, it would be found in all probability more conductive to national welfare and unity, to have the smaller charges of policy likely to occur under a new administration, made possible, than to have the old fixed regime of a single man and his special friends continue. * * * Suppose a citizen who was not 'natural born,' should be by far the most available candidate of a party, would it be wise on general grounds to attempt to alter the constitution in order to make him eligible? Even so to alter the national habit as to a third term for a particular instance, unless in an extreme case, would be an injury to the stability of institutions supported mainly by opinion."

A Sure Cure.

Every little while we read in the papers of some one who has struck a rusty nail in his foot or some other portion of his body, and lock-jaw resulted therefrom. If every person was aware of a perfect remedy for all such wounds, and would apply it, then all such reports must cease. But although we can give the remedy, we can not force its application. Some will not enjoy it because they think it too simple; others will have no faith in it when they read it; while others think such a wound of small account, and not worth fussing over, until it is too late. Yet, all such wounds can be healed without the fatal consequences which follow them. The remedy is simple, can be applied by anyone, and what is better, it is infallible. It is simply to smoke the wound, or any bruise that is inflamed, with burning wood or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wood will take the pain out of the worst wound; repeated two or three times, it will allay the worst case of inflamation arising from a wound. People may sneer at "the old man's remedy" as much as they please; but when they are afflicted, just let them try it. It has saved many lives and much pain, and is worthy of being printed in letters of gold and put in every home.

A MODERN SAMPSON.

His Name is Angelo Cordela, and he Strikes Five Hundred Pounds.

The strongest man in the world at the present time, so far as we are able to learn, now lives in Reno, Washoe county, Nevada. A reporter recently witnessed the astonishing feats of this remarkable man, and was fully satisfied by what he saw that he is really all that is claimed for him. His name is Angelo Cardela, an Italian, aged 38 years; stature, five feet 10 inches; weight, 190 pounds; occupation, laborer; habits, temperate, though he has no scruples against the moderate use of malt liquors and the light wines of his country. In personal appearance he is not remarkable, merely a good-natured looking son of Italia, with a broad, heavy face, a noble development of chest and shoulders, and large, fleshy hands. His strength was born with him, having had no athletic training. When "stripped to the buff," however, a marked peculiarity in his spinal column is at once apparent. His backbone is, we might say, double-jointed, with the vertebral articulations unusually large and prominent. Though he is not a man of unusual size, his spinal column is double the ordinary width, and his other bones and joints seem made on a similar large and generous scale. After some solicitation he finally consented to favor the reporter with an exhibition of strength, which proved to be such an astonishing exhibition of lifting power as scarcely to be believed. The reporter, whose weight is 150 pounds, stood with one foot on the floor, and arms outstretching, his hands being lightly grasped by two friends, one on each side, to preserve the balance of his body. This slight assistance, however, had no tendency to raise his body, being merely to keep him from toppling over. Cordela then stooped down, and placed the third finger of his right hand under the hollow of the reporter's foot, upon which he was balancing, and, with no perceptible effort, raised the reporter to a height of four feet, and deposited him, standing, on a table near at hand. This feat he repeated, and then grasped the reporter's ankles with both hands, raised him above his head, and gently lowered him to the table in a sitting posture. Cordela had a pipe in his mouth while lifting, and continued smoking, as much as to say, "Per Baccho, 'tis nothing; a way we have in our country!" On a former occasion he raised Mr. Lawson, a gentleman connected with the editorial staff of the Reno Gazette, in a similar way, with one finger, carried him across a room and left him standing on a table. He has also lifted by the same plan, using only his third finger, (which seems to be his most reliable one), several Reno heavy weights, one weighing over 200 pounds. He can strike a blow with his fist with a power of 500 pounds, measured on a register. It is said that two Irishmen, near Verdi, started in to whip him one night, but concluded to give up the contract, as he grasped one in each hand and beat them together until the life was nearly hammered out of them. Many other tales are told of his extraordinary strength, and there can be no doubt that, in his particular specialty, he is unrivaled, and, indeed, a lusus naturæ, when the peculiarities of his physical "make up" and his almost limitless power are considered. He states that his father could strike a blow equal in power to 1,000 pounds, so that his strength seems a direct inheritance. Cordela has not much education and an imperfect knowledge of English. He dislikes to show his strength, and fails to realize his own value. If he were to give public exhibitions of his wonderful powers, he would doubtless be recognized and acknowledged to be the most powerful man in the world in certain lines of strength.

William H. Kemble, the boss republican rogue of Pennsylvania, and a potent plutocrat, who was recently refused a pardon for his attempt to bribe legislators to steal $4,000,000 from the state treasury, is the author of the motto, "Addition, Division and Silence," which has been adopted so generally by the republican party, and which has greatly facilitated the enormous stealage of that organization.

As Henry Clark, of Jefferson City, Mo., was driving to Cassville, a stranger asked to ride, and his request was granted. The stranger proved a genial companion, and treated Mr Clark to a cigar, which the latter puffed with enjoyment until he suddenly became dizzy, and nearly fell out of the wagon. The stranger caught him and set down in the bottom of the wagon, and that was all Mr. Clark remembered until two hours later, when he awoke to find his pocketbook, with $165 was gone. Likewise the stranger.

A New Wrinkle That Lies Over Previous Dead-Beat Stories.

[Cleveland Herald.]

"Talk about your beats," said a clerk in one of the hotels of the city the other evening, "I herd one of the toughest cases which happened a short time ago. I got the first part of the story from the proprietor of a prominent restaurant, to whom a fellow told a history of the affair before he skipped out of town. He said that one evening this fellow came in and sat down at a table, giving his orders with the air of a millionaire. He was nicely dressed, and wore a long, handsome ulster. After he had finished his supper he started out, seeming to forget that he hadn't paid. The proprietor stopped him with a reminder of the fact, when it was found that the fellow was a beat, and hadn't a cent of money. The restauranter was angry, and about to administer a dose of leather beneath the tails of that elegant ulster, when the fellow begged off, and said he would leave his pantaloons with the proprietor as security until morning. The gentleman, in order to test him, consented, and the fellow went behind the screen and divestated himself of the afore-mentioned garment, leaving only the light covering of his underclothing. With his ulster buttoned close around him, he had the appearance of a finely-dressed gentleman with his pantaloons stuffed in his boot tops. He left the breeches and went out. Entering a certain prominent hotel, he walked to the register, entered his name, demanded to be shown to his room, and instructed the clerk to have him called at 8 o'clock in the morning, all of which was complied with; but when the boy called him at 8 o'clock the air about that room was blue with profanity, and the fellow ordered the boy to send the landlord up immediately. The landlord, thinking something terrible had happened, immediately repaired to the room and found the guest apparently in a terrible rage. He wanted to know what kind of a d—d house they kept there full of petty sneak thieves. "Just look here," said he, "my pantaloons containing my pocketbook and watch are gone, and someone connected with this house took them, for they must have crawled in over the transom. I tell you by——, I'll give this house away to every man on the road." The landlord was considerbly chagrined about the matter, and sent for a pair of pantaloons, and as the rest of his clothes were very elegant, an elegant pair was purchased. The fellow was then taken to breakfast the landlord gave him $20, as he had to leave immediately, and promised to leave no stone unturned until the thief was discovered. The cute young gentleman went to the restaurant, redeemed his pants, told the story, and skipped the town about 19.50 ahead."

A Bridal Quarrel.

[Detroit Free Press.]

Among the passengers who arrived at the Michigan Central depot yesterday was a newly-wedded couple from near Dexter, Michigan, the husband giving the name of Henry C. Bartow. Going into the waiting room to stay until the train for Toledo should leave, Bartow, accidentally and without any thought of trouble as he thought, began playing with a two-year-old child, and eventually engaged in a conversation with the mother of the child. Mrs. Bartow immediately arose and quietly walked out of the room, a movement which caused Bartow to follow her. He called to her and she would not talk, and had gone to within a few feet of the edge of the wharf when he seized and held her. After acknowledging that she intended to jump into the river, she changed her mind and accusing him of flirtation, began upbraiding him. Bartow bore it all patiently, made an explanation, and in less than ten minutes after the beginning of the trouble the pair were again in the waiting room pleasantly chatting, having apparently forgotten the difficulty.

Those young persons whose shyness proceeds from an undue self-consciousness, may be benefitted by the following remark of Sydney Smith: "I was once very shy, but it was not long before I made two very useful discoveries —first, that all mankind were not solely employed in observing me (a belief that all young people have); and, next, that shamming was of no use—that the world was very clear-sighted, and soon estimates a man at his just value. This cured me, and I determined to be natural and let the world find me out."

GENERAL.

OVER 5,000 negro immigrants from the South have settled in Indiana during the past fall and winter....French Canadians are moving into the Eastern States in large numbers. Five hundred persons, including many entire families, have left Montreal within a few days for New York and New England.

THERE were no less than nine executions in the United States on Friday, April 2. There was a triple hanging at Macon, Miss., all the victims being negroes—Samuel Boler, Andrew Macon and James Brown. All died expressing implicit assurance in an eternal salvation. Macon said: "I feel ready to die, because God has pardoned my sins. I risked my soul on the murder, but God has forgiven me. There's not a cloud in the way." Brown said: "Whisky was the cause. I thank God all is well. I am ready to meet death this day. Let it come! God has washed me in his blood." Boler said: "My mouth will soon be closed in this world. I rested in the arms of Jesus last night. I am satisfied. I feel guilty of nothing. God is well pleased with my soul." Seven thousand people witnessed the execution. At Louisville, Ky., Robert Anderson (white) and Charles Webster (colored) were hanged—the first for murder and the latter for rape. Both died protesting their innocence, and expressing a belief that they would go direct to heaven. Edward Tatro, a young farm laborer, was executed at Windsor, Vt., for the murder of Mrs. Butler, the wife of his employer. He confessed that he was guilty. At Washington City was witnessed one of the most soul-sickening hangings on record. The victim was Wyatt Stone, a negro wife-murderer. When the drop fell the body shot down, hung a second and fell to the ground with a heavy thud. The head was cut completely off as though it had been done with a knife. The body fell on the breast, and the blood gushed from the neck and head. The rope used was a three-quarter inch, and the drop was about five feet. It was a terrible sight, and the spectators turned away sick with horror and disgust. Gustave Brieux (colored) was hanged at Baton Rouge, La. We are told that he "ascended the gallows smiling, and said he had made his peace with God and all men, and warned his friends to beware of the fate that had befallen him." Joseph Walker, of East Carroll, La., was the ninth victim. The telegraph operator at that point failed to impart to an anxious world the culprit's last words.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA and other Fenians have called a convention of Irishmen to meet in Philadelphia, June 25, to devise means for raising $3,000,000, sending 100,000 rifles to Ireland, and raising the revolutionary flag....The French-Canadian emigration into the United States continues at a rate which alarms the Canadian authorities. The immigrants are said to be coming at the rate of 1,000 per month....A new transatlantic line of steamers has been established. The ships of this line will ply between New York and the Mediterranean, stopping at Lisbon, Gibraltar, and Marseilles....The Vice President of a manufacturing company at Wheeling, W. Va., has defaulted to the amount of $31,000....Last year 247,315 acres of land were sold in Manitoba and the British northwest territories.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says that a very strong movement in favor of Hugh J. Jewett, of Ohio, as the Democratic nominee for President has sprung up quite recently.

MR. GROESBECK, in answer to the invitation of a conference of New York Democrats, says that he will willingly accept a nomination at the hands of the party to which he belongs, but he will not engage in a canvass to secure such....Utah Republicans have elected two Blaine delegates to the Chicago Convention....The Missouri Greenbackers will hold their State Convention May 20.

MUNICIPAL elections were held in many Western cities April 5. In Indiana the amendments to the constitution were adopted....President Garrett, of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, has written a letter in which he says that, if Speaker Randall cannot be nominated by the Cincinnati Convention for President of the United States, why then he (Garrett) is in the hands of his friends.

SENATOR HOAR has written to a member of the Massachusetts Legislature a letter on the Presidential question, in which he advises strongly against the instruction of delegates to the Chicago Convention. He does not believe Gen. Grant is the strongest candidate that could be nominated.

THE city of Chicago held an election for town officers and for one Alderman from each of the eighteen wards, on the 6th inst. The town officers chosen in the South and West Divisions were Republicans, and those in the North Division Democrats. Of the eighteen Aldermen elected, ten are Republicans, five Democrats, two Independents, and one a Socialist. A very light vote was polled....The Connecticut Republican State Convention was held at New Haven, on the 7th inst., Amos Treat presiding. A resolution was introduced favoring the nomination of some man like Edmunds or Washburne, but it was withdrawn, the temper of the convention appearing opposed to anything like instructions. The delegates chosen are said to be divided between Blaine, Edmunds and Washburne....The Iowa Democrats held their State Convention at Burlington April 7. It is said the convention was practically unanimous for Tilden, with a proviso that the split in New York State shall be fixed up so as to insure the full Democratic vote for him. It is understood that the delegates appointed at Cincinnati will vote as a unit for Tilden, provided they are satisfied he can carry New York. A resolution in favor of adhering to the two-thirds rule at Cincinnati was adopted....There was no choice for Governor and Lieutenant Governor at the election in Rhode Island on the 7th inst., the Republican candidates not receiving a majority of all the votes cast. The Legislature is largely Republican, however, and will elect them in due time. The Prohibitionists polled a surprisingly large vote for their candidate—over 5,000 votes—while the Republicans polled some 10,000 and the Democrats 7,000 votes....The Minnesota Republicans will hold their State Convention at St. Paul on the 20th of May.

THE play of "Julius Cæsar" has been interdicted by the Russian authorities....An explosion of fire-damp in a Belgian mine has resulted in the death of a large number of workingmen....A Berlin dispatch states that emigration to the United States is again on the increase, and extensive preparations therefor are being made in every part of Germany.

COUNT BISMARCK has just celebrated his 66th birthday.

ONE of the most exciting political contests ever witnessed in Great Britain has resulted in the triumph of the Liberal party, headed by Gladstone, and the defeat of the Conservatives under the leadership of Disraeli. Dispatches from Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Rome represent that disappointment and uneasiness are felt in these capitals at the success of the Liberal party, while at St. Petersburg the news is received with the utmost delight.

CHINESE troops are said to have entered one of the Asiatic provinces of Russia. If this statement proves true, it is evident that China has determined to declare war on Russia....The Irish Home-Rulers are quite jubilant over the defeat of the present Chief Secretary of Ireland, Mr. James Lowther....The French Ambassador to Vienna has resigned in consequence of his dislike to the anti-Jesuit laws....The courier of the Russian Minister of Domains has been arrested at St. Petersburg for complicity in the Nihilist plots....Mohammed Jan has been killed, and the Afghan soldiers under him were routed....A fire in a village in Savoy killed seventeen persons and destroyed thirty-one dwellings....The Jesuits are to be expelled from the French colonies.

SAN DOMINGO has another conspiracy, this time to restore ex-President Gonzales to power....The Liberal gains in the English.

THE Liberal gain in England, up to the 7th inst., was sixty-five. This will be about the number of the Home-Rulers. In Cork, Parnell and Daly, Home-Rulers, were elected to Parliament, defeating a Conservative and a Liberal. Mr. Parnell declares that the Home-Rulers will use their power to force concessions from the Whig Government as they once did from the Tory Ministry....Bismarck resigned his Chancellorship of the German empire lately, in consequence of a vote in the Bundesrath. A correspondent at Berlin reports that the Bundesrath passed the Stamp law, but with certain modifications. These were not agreeable to Prince Bismarck, and he sent his resignation to the Emperor, who refused to accept it, using the word, "Never." Prince Bismarck again sent in his resignation, saying the vote in the Bundesrath was not the sole ground for his action, but that his health was such he considered it necessary to withdraw from public life. Popular opinion seems to be that he will remain in office....An English bark which sailed from Mobile, on the 26th of February, had to be abandoned in mid-ocean after the loss of five of her crew. The ship Shannon, from Baltimore, rescued the others, ten in all....Leon Say has been appointed French Ambassador to England, with special instructions to negotiate a commercial treaty between that country and France.

THE armed force which recently invaded Russian territory in Asia, was made up of Tartars, and not of Chinese, as reported....Thebaw, the King of Burmah, has died of small-pox at Mandalay.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Mr. Wallace, on behalf of a majority of the Senate select committee on alleged frauds in the late elections, submitted to the Senate, on the 2d inst., a special report and a bill concerning political assessments. The Vice President laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War recommending an appropriation of $30,000 for the new military post between Forts Custer and Assiniboine. A pension bill for a scout was discussed and opposed, but no conclusion reached. The Senate adjourned to Monday. The President nominated John R. McFie, of Coulterville, Randolph county, Ill., as Supervisor of the Census for the Eighth district of Illinois, and George S. Houghton, of Tabor, Iowa, Supervisor of the Census for the Third district of Iowa....In the House, the Star Service Deficiency bill occupied the day; the Senate amendments were concurred in, and the bill was passed.

The Senate was not in session on Saturday, the 3d inst., while the House met for general debate only. Accordingly, the meeting resolved itself into committee of the whole on the state of the Union, and a number of members "spoke their little pieces" upon whatever subject they were primed for.

On the opening of the session of the Senate on Monday, the 5th, a communication from the Secretary of War was laid before that body, showing the necessity of an additional appropriation of $268,000 to pay certificates for arrears of pay and bounty. Mr. Pendleton presented a petition of the type-founders of Cincinnati against the reduction of the duty on type. A joint resolution providing that employes of the Government Printing Office be allowed holidays with pay Jan. 1, Feb. 22, July 4, Dec. 25, and Thanksgiving day was placed on the calendar. Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. Allison, paying certain railroads for the transportation of mails; by Mr. Williams, repealing the statute prohibiting farmers and planters from selling leaf tobacco directly at retail to consumers without a special tax. A bill to amend the Revised Statutes, in relation to settlers' affidavits in pre-emption and commuted homestead entries, was passed. The debate on the bill ratifying the agreement with the Ute Indians was continued, Messrs. Morgan and Dawes speaking, both in opposition to the bill....In the House, Mr. Springer made a personal explanation of his connection with the Washburn-Donnelly contested-election case in the Elections Committee, and denying corrupt reasons for voting against his party in committee on the question of unseating Washburn. An anonymous letter had been received by Mr. Springer, which offered a $5,000 present to the wife of the Congressman for his vote in favor of the present holder of the seat, and Mr. Springer intimated that the proposition emanated from the contestant, or his friends, with the purpose of smirching his character if he could not obtain his vote. Mr. Townshend made a motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of his Tariff bill and to place it upon its passage under a suspension of the rules. This motion received 113 affirmative and 80 negative votes, not two-thirds, and therefore failed. This was the bill for free paper. Mr. Weaver moved the suspension of the rules and the adoption of his financial resolution. After a short debate the resolution was defeated by yeas 84, nays 117. The following bills, etc., were introduced and referred: By Mr. Gibson, relative to the appointment and pay of the Mississippi River Commissioners; also, to entitle State banks to circulate notes on the same conditions as national banks; by Mr. Davis (Mo.), requiring the Postmaster General to mail, on the 1st of each month, to every member of Congress, an itemized statement of all mail contracts made during the preceding month; by Mr. Chalmers, for the relief of the heirs of colored soldiers; by Mr. Armfield, to reduce the tax on distilled spirits; also providing that producers of leaf tobacco may sell the same in quantities of not more than ten pounds at any one time without a license. Mr. Aldrich (Ill.) moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill to amend the statute in regard to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods. Agreed to. Bills were passed for the erection of public buildings at Paducah, Ky., and Charlestown, W. Va., and for the repair of the public buildings at Cleveland, Ohio.

The Senate refused to recede from its amendments to the Census bill, on the morning of April 6, and Messrs. Pendleton, Harris, and Morrill were appointed a conference committee. The joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to lend United States flags to the Centennial Commissioners at Nashville passed. The joint resolution to allow employes of the Government printing office holidays with pay was passed. The Vice President appointed Messrs. Hamlin and Beck as visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next examination of the Naval Academy. The Senate, in executive session, rejected the President's nomination of John R. Lynch, the nominee for Supervisor of the Census for the Third Mississippi district, and John Burton as a Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for that State, on the ground that both were too active in politics, and would use their positions to further their political ambition. The President nominated H. S. Lovejoy, of Nebraska, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Niobrara, Neb....In the House night sessions were ordered for Wednesday and Thursday of next week for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and on the 21st and 22d inst., for the consideration of the Municipal Code of the District of Columbia. The Senate joint resolution passed providing for the payment of the wages of the employes of the Government Printing Office for legal holidays. Mr. F. Wood, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the rate of duty on importations for the last five years, and what would, in his judgment, on each article so imported, have yielded a maximum amount of revenue, and it was adopted. The House then went into committee of the whole on the Army Appropriation bill.

Vice President Wheeler sent word to the Senate, on Wednesday, April 7, that he should be absent for several days, and Senator Thurman was elected President, pro tem. Mr. Carpenter, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on two bills to provide for terms of United States Courts at Lincoln, Neb., and to divide Nebraska into two districts. A bill was introduced for a public building at Louisville, Ky. A long discussion occupied the whole day upon the Ponca Indian question. The President nominated William A. Newell, of New York, to be Governor of Washington Territory....In the House, a large number of committee reports were made, the bills being either placed on the calendar or indefinitely postponed. Mr. McCook introduced a resolution in regard to the West Point case of outrage upon the colored cadet, but the matter was postponed for further developments. The Army bill was discussed in committee of the whole, the proceedings being enlivened by a personal controversy between Messrs. Sparks and Clymer, in which the lie was given by the former gentleman and afterward retracted.

The circular states that the bullion from the Comstock lode contains 41 20-100 per cent. gold and 58 80-100 per cent. silver. Of the so-called base bullion from Nevada 27 per cent. was gold, and of the whole product of the State, 27 50-100 per cent. was gold.

Totals of mining statistics for a series of years are:

Gold product of the Pacific coast since 1848, $1,622,040,000.

Silver product of the States and Territories west of the Missouri river since 1858, $446,625,000.

Combined gold and silver product of the Pacific slope since 1848, $2,068,665,000.

An Outraged Court.

It was in Telico township, Arkansas. Court day. Justice Scatterfield presided. He could neither read nor write. Had been elected out of pure fun, by a mischievous constituency. A case involving $100 came up for trial. George W. Beasley for plaintiff, Stephen W. Childress for defendant; both able lawyers. In the progress of the case, defendant proposed to introduce some evidence, to which plaintiff's counsel objected. To sustain his right to put it in, counsel for defendant produced and read "Greenleaf on Evidence." This authority was directly in point. Beasley felt his case utterly hopeless, unless he could dodge the law.

Rising with great gravity, he addressed the court: "May it please your Honor, I am astounded to witness the impudence of friend Childress. He has actually tried to swindle this court and get a ruling in his favor by palming off English law upon this court for Arkansas law. What have we to do with foreigners and their laws? Have we not the statutes made by our law-makers to govern us? Why, then, should we go to other countries to learn how to administer justice? It is a contempt of this court, and, were I in your position, I should fine any attorney heavily who undertook to deceive me as Mr. Childress has done."

This had the desired effect. Turning to the dumbfounded Childress, and while from "his eye-balls flashed the living fire," the Court said: "Sir, I am astonished at you in trying to impose on this 'ere Court. It can't be did! As it is the first time, the Court will look over it. But you never try it again. If you do, this 'ere Court will find you to the utmost extent of the law. Judgment for plaintiff; court's adjourned." Childress appealed and swore worse than the army in Flanders.

Josh Billings' Philosophy.

The only advantage in having a great reputashun iz, it enables a man to do mutch more good than he otherwize could, but how few thare are who ever think uv this.

All authors hav their trials and tribulashun. I hav even had a taste uv them miself. I hav been familiarly called "Daghm Phool," "Kussid Idiot," and menny other kurious things; but I hav two consolashuns: One is: I never hav wrote a line for an unkind or sinister purpose, and the other iz, I have allwuss got a good stiff price for what I hav wrote, and hav got the money on hand to show now. Moral: Bully for me!

Suckcess iz what wins. It makes even a phool appear like a wize man.

It iz the genius uv the devil that makes him terrible; if he had but fu branes hiz iniquity would be far more dangerous to himself than to others.

Mi Dear Richard, be kerful what yu say, and who hears it. The world haz both ears wide open to ketch enny unlucky speech yu may make, and they never wuz kllown to forgit sutch things.

Woman iz a safety-valve. Without her man would busst himself, and all creashun besides or would try hard to do it.

A Wasteful Interest Paid by Farmers.

There is no disputing the fact that any farm implement, be it wagon, plow, harrow, reaper, rake, or what not, if left exposed to sun or rain for ten years, will be practically good for nothing. We might say in five years, but if any choose to cavil at five, we will say ten. This is 10 per cent. per annum. At a cost of less than 1 per cent. these tools can always be kept housed, or under cover of some kind, even if but rough boards, that will shut out sun and rain. Because we do not see the silent, slow, but steady waste, we are apt to forget that it is ever going on. It is unnecessary to suggest the "application" of this short sermon. Nine per cent. interest saved is not to be despised, even if better times are at hand.—Exchange.

A BAD COLD.

How to Avoid It, and How to Treat It When It Is Upon You.

A cold is called in scientific language a catarrh. It consists essentially of inflammation of the mucous membrane of some portion of the air passages. When it is confined to the mucous membrane of the nose, it is spoken of as a mild cold in the head. When it is attended with much watery discharge from the nose, the complaint is called "coryza," and when with much pain over the forehead "gravedo." If the disorder should extend into the lungs, the patient is said to have a "cold in his chest," or, from one of its most prominent symptoms, "a cough," or in other words "a slight attack of bronchitis. "The inflammation often travels from one part of the mucous membrane to another. Beginning for example in the nose, it gradually creeps down into the windpipe and lungs. Sometimes it passes from the throat up toward the ear, and produces deafness, or down the gullet to the stomach, causing qualmish and other uneasy sensations and loss of appetite.

Medically, the best treatment for a cold is aconite, and the earlier it is given the better. A teaspoonful of the aconite mixture should be given every hour or two hours, according to the severity of the symptoms. If there is not much fever, a still smaller dose may be taken. The patient had better go to bed and keep quiet; he should not take much food, but may drink freely of water if thirsty. This treatment may be continued for from six to twelve hours, or even longer. If the skin becomes moist the other symptoms usually quickly disappear, and a few more doses of the medicine will effect a cure. This treatment is very simple, and is usually successful. It is especially useful at the beginning of a cold, and is, in fact, applicable to the commencement of any acute illness. It is, it will be seen, somewhat different from the treatment recommended when speaking of acute bronchitis. The explanation is very simple; there are two different ways of arriving at the same result, and you can adopt which you prefer.

If a person finds himself unavoidably exposed to cold-producing causes, he may often prevent unpleasant consequences by the use of aconite. As there is as yet no fever to subdue, very small doses will suffice. After exposure to cold, and before the appearance of any symptoms, a few doses of the same medicine may serve to ward off an attack. The great thing is to have your aconite bottle handy; if you have to waste an hour or two sending for it the opportunity for its use may be lost.

When the patient has caught cold and is suffering from persistent shivering, camphor is the best remedy. From three to five drops of the essence may be given every quarter of an hour on sugar, or the camphor pilules may be used. As soon as reaction takes place, and warmth is restored, the camphor should be discontinued, and aconite substituted.

When symptoms of inflammation of any special organ have made their appearance, the drug indicated for this complication may be given in alternation with aconite. Thus phosphorus may be given for pneumonia, belladonna for congestion and inflammation of the brain or throat, bryony for rheumatism or lumbago, and so on. As soon as the symptom indicating aconite has disappeared or become subordinate, the administration of that drug may be suspended.

When the cold has settled on the chest, bryony is an admirable remedy. It is indicated when there are heat, pains and soreness behind the breast-bone, and an irritative, shaking cough with scanty expectoration. This kind of cold often occurs in elderly people at the beginning and end of the winter, in conjunction with stuffiness of the nose, running from the eyes, and derangement of the stomach. Bryony may follow aconite, or may be given alone.

Nux vomica is useful for a stuffy cold, and for violent coughs with little or no expectoration. Ipecacuanha is of value where is much sneezing.

There are other remedies which are useful when aconite has not been employed or the more acute symptoms have passed away. Thus small doses of arsenic succeed admirably in some cases. A two-ounce dose of the iodide of potassium mixture, taken every night at bedtime for three or four nights, will often cure a cold in the head, especially when there is much running from the eyes and nose. This is an excellent remedy for deafness arising from cold. It does very little good when the cold has settled on the chest. Inhalations of iodide often do good in coryza. A table-spoonful of the tincture of iodine should be put in a jug of boiling water, and the vapor inhaled. Eight or ten chlorate of potash lozenges a day will sometimes arrest a cold; but this is not one of our best remedies.

A cold in the head may often be speedily cured by the use of a snuff made as follows: Take of hydrochlorate of morphia, two grains; acacia powder, two drachms; subnitrate of bismuth, six drachms. Mix.

Of this powder, from a quarter to a half may be taken as snuff in the course of the twenty-four hours. Its employment should be commenced as soon as the symptoms of coryza show themselves, and it should be used frequently at first, so as to keep the interior of the nostrils constantly well coated. Each time the nose is blown, another pinch should be taken. It may be taken in the ordinary way, from between the thumb and forefinger; but a much more efficacious and less wasteful method is to use a small gutter of paper, or a "snuff-spoon," placing it just within the nostrils and snuffing up forcibly, so as to carry it well within. Some of the powder finds its way into the throat, and may do good if there is any catarrh there. The snuff causes scarcely any perceptible sensation; a slight smarting may occur if the mucous membrane is much irritated and inflamed, but it rapidly disappears. After a few sniffs of the powder, a perceptible amelioration of the symptoms ensues, and, in the course of a few hours, the powder being inhaled from time to time, all the symptoms will have disappeared.

To diminish excessive sensitiveness to cold, out-door exercise is of the first importance. People who coddle themselves in-doors all day long are just the people who catch cold. The morning cold bath should be used by everybody, especially if at all subject to colds. Some people like the shower-bath; but the majority of town-dwellers find the shock too great. A respirator is of essential service in preventing colds. The subjects of asthma, bronchitis and quinsy should always use one on going out into the fog or cold air.

WONDERFUL VITALITY.

An Iron-heater Works with a Part of His Skull in His Pocket.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

On June 28, 1879, F. Marion Davis, a heater in the rolling-mill of the Philadelphia Iron and Steel Company, was struck by an iron clamp weighing about fourteen pounds, which was thrown with terrible force from the shaft of a revolving fly-wheel. The clamp was in the form of the letter "U," made of square iron, and one of the exterior angles of the iron at the curved part of the clamp struck Mr. Davis in the forehead, breaking loose and partly forcing through the skin a crescent-shaped fragment of the frontal bone, measuring three inches in extreme length and seven-eighths of an inch in width in the center or widest part, thus producing not only a compound fracture of the skull, but cutting through the longitudinal sinus or large blood-vessel of the interior of the top of the head, permitting an extrusion and loss of a considerable portion of the brain substance. This form of fracture, known as ecrasement, or "smash," consists not only of a crushing of the bone itself, but also of a separating of the neighboring sutures. Beside the injury to the skull there was a loosening of the teeth, and such injuries of the jaws that the patient was unable to open his mouth for more than three weeks.

Mr. Davis was carried to his home, in the vicinity of the mill, and Dr. I. G. Young, of Kensington, was immediately summoned. On an examination of the wounds they were pronounced necessarily fatal. Dr. D. H. Agnew, Professor of Surgery in the University of Pennsylvania, was called in consultation, and he agreed with Dr. Young that the lesions were of such a nature that there was no hope of saving the man's life, but that while there was life there was something to work for, and everything was done which the feelings of humanity and surgical skill could suggest. On the third day after the accident another consultation was held by Dr. Young and Prof. Agnew, but there were no new developments in the case from which they could gather any hope, and it was not until the expiration of about the fifth week that any encouragement was given. In about nine weeks the wound was closed by soft tissue, and in a few months later about one-half the cavity was closed by a new bony formation, and the remaining part is now covered by soft tissue, through which the pulsations of the brain are plainly visible.

Notwithstanding the great danger impending over Mr. Davis for so many months, he has entirely recovered his physical powers. His mental characteristics, although materially changed, are considered by the physicians wonderfully good when the facts of the case are taken into consideration. The remarkable features of this case can better be understood when the fact is considered that, out of nine similar cases reported in the "Medical and Surgical History of the Late War," all proved fatal, and there is but one well-authenticated case approaching this in apparent hopelessness which resulted in the recovery of the patient—being that of Dr. Harlow, referred to the second volume of "Gross Surgery," in which the patient apparently regained his accustomed mental and physical condition, and lived twelve years after having had a tamping-iron, weighing thirteen pounds, propelled by a prematurely-exploded blast from the base to the top of the skull, completely through the anterior end of the brain. Mr. Davis has preserved the fragment loosened from his skull, and frequently carries it about with him in his pocket.

THIRTY years ago there was but one pottery in this country making white and yellow ware, and not a mill to grind material. All the flint and stone required was imported from Great Britain. Now there are 800 potteries in the United States, representing a total capital of over $6,000,000. The pottery craze of the last two or three years resulted in the erection of thirty new kilns in 1897.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. A. LOWRY } EDITORS.

THE number of men killed by accident in the St. Gothard tunnel, from the commencement of the undertaking to the end, amounted to 120, and the wounded to 400.

WHEN Emperor William's Generals presented their congratulations on his birthday, the old monarch saddened their hearts by informing them that they would not probably have an opportunity very soon of putting their military knowledge in practice.

TWENTY-NINE newspapers are now published in this country exclusively by colored men—twenty-two in the South and seven in the North. When it is considered how illy fitted for either editing or patronizing public journals the colored race was at the close of the war, the progress it has made is most encouraging.

MARY STECK has starved herself to death at Allegheny, Pa. She believed that, in consequence of her sinfulness, God had commanded her not to eat. She was kept alive in a hospital by having food forced down her throat, but on her return home she refused to take any nourishment, and died after six weeks of almost entire abstinence.

OVER 40,000 emigrants have landed at the port of New York since the beginning of this year. This is nearly double the number of a like period last year. The immigration the present year promises to be greatly in excess of any previous year. The hard times and unsettled condition European of affairs make America look like a haven of rest.

IN reply to an inquiry from ex-Senator Doolittle respecting pavements, Gen. Sherman has written a letter stating that, having investigated the matter in this country and Europe, he is satisfied that the only durable pavements are the Belgian and macadam. He admits that they are more expensive than some others, but thinks that in the long run they are economical.

WHEN Houston, Texas, was entertaining Grant, a young fellow made his way to the side of the General's carriage and shouted, "Hurrah for Jeff Davis!" The General's host said, "You see, General, that in a city like ours, with a population of 25,000, we have at least one —— fool." Gen. Grant replied, "Yes; there are fools all over the world."

GOULD'S railroad system now aggregates 8,168 miles of road. Col. Scott controls only 5,400 miles, and Vanderbilt 4,697 miles of railroad, including the Chicago and Northwestern. Gould is reported to be negotiating for four more lines, with 1,622 miles of track. The Ohio and Mississippi road, in particular, he is supposed to have an envious eye on.

LORENZO DOW, the late eccentric and distinguished clergyman, left his jack-knife as a keepsake to his niece, and the knife is now in possession of William J. Latham, of Providence, R. I. The famous itinerant traveled in the backwoods so often that he made for himself a pocket-knife with a fork-blade. The full length of the knife is nine inches. Armed with this the preacher could do good work at the humble boards of the wilderness.

W. H. VANDERBILT is said to be satisfied with his $130,000,000, and anxious to retire from active business. For this reason he will dispose of all his railroads and other productive property as fast as possible without sacrifice, invest the proceeds in Government bonds, and live, like the Astors, on interest and rents. Jay Gould hopes to be able to bring his own career to a successful climax by gaining control of the New York Central and having himself elected its President next year.

SENATOR THURMAN is a great snuff-taker, and his red bandana is saturated with it. While he was making some remarks on the Geneva Award bill, Senator Burnside came over and sat close by him. The Ohio Senator gesticulated with his handkerchief in such a way as to set the Rhode Island Senator sneezing in the most irrepressible and undignified manner, and he was forced to retreat to the lobby, while the hall resounded with his spasmodic explosions.

MR. SEWARD, in a letter to a young man, just published for the first time, says: "I am glad to know that you have got into the country. It is the best place for young men. Allow me to give you a word of advice. Just as soon as you can get out of public employment into some occupation by which you can support yourself, do it, and become an independent man. Salaries exhaust the energies of all men, and very often corrupt them."

THE spring fish story comes from Florida. A Tallahassee paper relates that, while a party of ladies and gentlemen were boating on the Wakulla spring, one of the ladies dropped a ring, and it could be seen sinking in the clear water. A trout darted for it and swallowed it. An ingenious young man present immediately borrowed another ring, fastened it to a hook, and let the line down into the crystal water. At the depth of about ninety feet a trout was seen to approach the shining bait, seize and swallow it. The fish was hauled up, cut open, and there lay in its stomach the lost ring.

MR. RICHMOND is a systematic and scientific base-ball player, and has got the national game down to a very fine point. He is known as the Brown University base-ball player, and will pitch this year for the Worcester professional club. In his pocket last year he carried a note-book, in which he entered the batting peculiarities of all the League batsmen who played against him. This book he has studied carefully, and he is now spending much time in devising various "twists," "drop balls," "Malones" and other peculiarly-delivered balls, by which he expects to baffle the before-mentioned batsmen in the coming contests.

CAPT. WEBB, the famous English swimmer, performed in London his feat of remaining in the water for sixty hours. He was to be allowed an intermission of half an hour, but only took twenty minutes, to change his clothing and stretch his limbs. The performance took place in a sixty-foot tank, six feet deep, and filled with artificial sea-water kept at a temperature of seventy degrees. He ate and drank in the water, and took several short naps floating on his back. At the conclusion of his feat Capt. Webb turned a couple of somersaults in the water, from which he ascended briskly, and apparently none the worse for his immersion.

NOT long since an aged citizen of Morgantown, Va., possessed of a spirit of deviltry and curiosity, went out near his house and cut a large white pine tree, and just as it fell he screamed a few times at the top of his voice, which alarmed his family and neighbors, who in ten minutes' time had assembled at the tree. In the meantime he concealed himself near by and watched the proceedings, and, after the tree had been trimmed up for the purpose of finding the dead body, the old fellow walked up and remarked that he had found out by the operation that his wife, family, and neighbors cared something for him, and that he had made a half day's work by getting the tree trimmed up, besides. He then thanked the neighbors for their attendance with their pain-killer and camphor.

HERR BEBEL, a Socialist, complained in the German Parliament the other day of the manner in which Socialists are treated. His colleague, Herr Fritzsche, is followed everywhere. He went into a tailor shop to order a coat, and a detective entered as soon as he went out and insisted upon the tailor's telling everything that had been said. Herr Hasselmann, another Socialist, walking in the Thier Garten, noticed a man dogging him. He tried for an hour and a half to escape, and then suddenly turned round and confronted the spy, who confessed himself and his business, and showed the document authorizing him to act as he was doing. A boy of 16, the son of a Socialist, was ordered to attend a police office, and then, after being plied with liquor, was closely examined as to his father's conduct. Herr Bebel accused the detectives of even worse offenses. Some of them entered the houses of banished Socialists and insulted their wives and daughters. In one case a woman saved herself by seizing a broom-stick and threatening to use it on the officer if he did not go away at once.

Speeches on Water and Milk.

A Washington correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal causes to be put in print a story of Judge Poland, who for many years was Representative in Congress from Vermont. The Judge is not a strict temperance man, and cannot make as good speeches upon water or milk as he does when offered something stronger. He was invited to make a speech in Maine, where the temperance laws are stringent. The chief committeeman knew that the Judge required a little inspiration, so he placed two mugs, supposed to be filled with milk, on the table behind which the Judge stood to harangue the crowd. Shyly the committeeman intimated to the Judge which mug he should drink from. The hint was understood, and the Judge had not gotten far on his discourse before he became thirsty; he raised the goblet, quaffed it to the bottom, and set it down with the unctuous exclamation, "Ye gods, what a cow!"

The Bravest Man.

Thirteen men were in a Roseville saloon talking about brave men. The question arose as to who was the bravest man in town, when J. Berry, a painter, stepped forward and took that honor to himself. J. Blair, to test his bravery, asked him to step out in the street about forty feet and let him shoot at his hat, it being on his head at the time. No quicker said than done. Berry stepped out forty feet, and Blair, with an old Colt's revolver, fired, making a hole through his hat about one inch from his head. The crowd had no more to say about bravery. They changed the subject.—Sacramento Bee.

GEORGIA will export something over $30,000,000 worth of cotton this year, if she has no bad luck.

FARM NOTES.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

LAYING OUT.—In staking out the ground take care to have the trees in true rows. Put all of the same variety together, and if there are many kinds make a planting chart showing the position of each.

SPRING work comes without hurry to the farmer who is prepared. Much of the mischief laid to unfavorable seasons rightly belongs to a laggard beginning. A well-started crop rarely fails to be satisfactory in spite of weather, and a late one is rarely so.

MACHINERY.—After the winter's rest an overhauling of the machines will be proper. Dust and rust should be cleaned off, and oil and tallow used liberally. It should be understood that there is more wear from rust than from use, with farm machinery.

EARLY PLANTING AND SOWING.—With the soil well prepared, early sowing is most desirable with many crops. Some tender ones make a poor start unless the ground is warmed by the sun and air, and a late frost may do harm. But it is rarely wise to delay because of what may happen, when promptness promises the best results.

THE first crop to be sown is spring wheat, then oats; after these come beets and potatoes. Wherever spring wheat will succeed it is a desirable crop, even when sown in April. Out of its natural district, which is marked out by peculiarity of climate more than any other condition, it is of no use to sow it, unless in a small way to experiment with new varieties of unusual promise.

PREPARING THE TREES.—Everybody wishes to get all he can for the money, and the nurserymen send much larger tops to the trees than the pruned roots in their new positions can support. It is safe to shorten the branches one-third or one-half, but it should be done with judgment and reference to the condition of the roots. At the same time pare smooth any broken or mangled roots.

OATS.—Early-sown oats in our hot climate are, as a rule, better than late-sown. Our climate is not so favorable for oats as the cooler northern and northeastern ones. There oats are heavy and plump, and seed from Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick will produce well for two or three years. By using seed from these northern localities, oats may be grown in the Middle States weighing from thirty-five to forty-five pounds per bushel.

LIVESTOCK.—The coat is now changed, and good brushing or carding helps the shedding of the hair by stimulating the skin. Medicines are to be avoided, as a rule, excepting in extreme cases. "Spring physicing" is an old notion which should rest with our ancestors. If due attention has been given to feeding and general care, stock will come out in good order after their season of dry feeding and confinement.

HORSES.—When hard work commences, dry food will be needed. It hardens the muscles and prevents excessive perspiration. The skin, tender from long rest, is easily chafed and galled. Cold water and veterinary cosmoline will keep galls in check and heal raw spots. Clean, soft harness prevents galls. Shoes that have been long on ought to be removed, and, in paring the hoof, let no knife touch the frog. It will wear away fast enough.

THE condition of the soil is always to be taken into account. Fields that are drained, either naturally or artificially, may be safely sown when a wet soil cannot be. Wet soils are cold. Some deny this, on the ground that the water is as warm as the soil, and has no refrigerating effect. But it is the circulation of air in the soil that warms it, and if it is so filled with water that air cannot enter, it remains cold, until the water has evaporated.

BARLEY.—A fine condition of the soil is indispensable for this crop. Old barley-growers know all about this, but many want to grow barley because it is a profitable crop when successful. It will succeed in any good, well-prepared soil, but a mellow-clay loam which can be brought to good tilth is to be preferred. But good crops of bright grain may be grown on lighter loams if in good heart. It may be made an excellent soiling crop to follow clover, and as a change from oats. We prefer to sow thickly, say two and one-half bushels per acre, but opinions vary in this respect, and from one and one-half to two and one-half bushels is the range.

THE TREES.—It is assumed that trees were ordered some time ago; they should be at hand ready for planting. It is the custom at nurseries to take up and heel-in a large stock of the kind of trees most called for, this retards the growth, and allows them to fill late orders. If there is a nursery near at hand it will pay to make a bargain, if possible, to help dig the trees yourself, and thus secure a larger share of the roots that belong to them. If trees, in a long journey, become dry and shriveled, bury them, root and branch, in mellow earth for a few days, when they become plump again. In unpacking the trees, look to the labels, as some may become detached and would otherwise be lost.

COWS.—Garget and abortion trouble the dairymen. We believe in prevention. The former may surely be prevented by due care. As soon as the udder contains milk, it should be relieved by drawing off a part of it, if there is any tendency to hardness. When a cow's time approaches and the feed is suddenly reduced, disturbance of the system is caused. Circulation becomes irregular, and congestion occurs in the most susceptible organs. The udder is the principal one of these at this period, and an attack of garget is very sure to occur. This may not always be so, but long experience and observation convinces us that it generally is. The remedy is obvious.

TREE PLANTING.—Whoever sets out an orchard of course does it with the expectation of a return in fruit. No one plants corn or potatoes without first considering if the land will give him a crop; if the soil is not in the proper condition he knows that he must make it so, or lose his seed and his labor. Much less than corn and potatoes can fruit trees make a crop on nothing. The trees will struggle along, do the best they can, but such orchards do not pay, and "run out" early. Unless the land is sufficiently fertile for an ordinary farm crop, it should be made so; no soil too wet for such crops will answer for fruit trees, which, to succeed, need well-drained land. The plowing should be as deep as the character of the soil will allow, and the sub-soil plow may generally follow the other with benefit.

FLAX.—It is supposed that flax is a "hard" crop on land. It is true in one sense, but it will not injure a cool, moist soil that holds a fair proportion of vegetable matter. It has been sown with oats and threshed for feeding, and there are few more profitable crops than this mixed one. A large demand is springing up for both seed and fiber. Mills are becoming numerous. But it should not be lost sight of that mills will not come until there is some material to be worked up, and if the farmers of any locality wish for a factory near them they must first grow the needed material. It is fortunate that flax can be grown for feed, and even the straw used for fodder, when mixed with oats, so that a good foundation may be laid for a supply for flax mills. The same is true of sugar beets. After many years of trial and failures the manufacture of beet sugar promises to become successful. It depends wholly on the farmers. To retain in our midst the millions of dollars sent abroad for sugar is desirable. The Portland (Me.) Sugar Factory Company, after several seasons of work, still perseveres in inducing the Maine farmers to produce roots, and is sanguine of success. Beets can be grown profitably if a determined attempt is made. Let but one acre, or less, be planted and well tended, and as soon as that can be grown successfully ten acres may be.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

RICE GRIDDLE-CAKES.—One quart of milk, half a cup of rice, three eggs, one good cupful flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls baking powder.

GRAHAM SCONES.—One pint Graham meal, one large table-spoonful butter, pinch of salt, one cupful cold water, chop together, and bake very thin.

WAFFLES.—One pint milk, one pound flour, four eggs, one cupful yeast, quarter pound butter; let them rise three or four hours before baking.

TO CLEAN JEWELRY.—Wash in soap suds; rinse in diluted alcohol, and lay in a box of dry sawdust to dry. As simple as this seems, it is the very nicest way possible to clean gold chains or ornaments of any kind.

SIMPLE AND DELICIOUS MUFFINS.—One quart flour, one teaspoonful salt, half gill yeast, one pint warmed milk, less two table-spoonfuls; mix at night, and beat until light; in the morning drop the well-risen dough in buttered cups.

CALF'S LIVER LA PROVINCALE.—Heat some butter in the frying-pan, season the slices of liver with salt, pepper, hashed parsley, and a very small piece of mashed garlic. Fry for ten minutes, then add a few spoonfuls of soup stock. Serve very hot.

FLOAT A LA CONSERVE (Dessert).—Take the whites of eight eggs, beat them to a stiff paste, adding as you beat a half pound of sugar. When well beaten, then stir into the mixture, beating briskly, currant jelly or strawberry jam to taste. Serve with rich cream.

DAMP CLOSETS.—For a damp closet or cupboard, which is liable to cause mildew, place in a saucer full of quick-lime, and it will not only absorb all apparent dampness, but sweeten and disinfect the place. Renew the lime once a fortnight, or as often as it becomes slacked.

Death to American Writers.

In a sharp editorial on American literature and its decline the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, after referring to the cheap reprints of the best foreign works, all stolen, concludes as follows: "We have no authors, except those who survive from former times. In poetry we have Longfellow and Whittier and Lowell and Holmes, and others who made their reputations thirty years ago; but where are their successors? Has America any historian younger than the prehistoric Bancroft? any novelist, any popular author who dates from the last twenty years? Bret Harte is glad to take a small Consulship abroad; Howells would starve if he did not get a salary as an editor. Parton says that the first requisite to a literary career in this country is to have a private fortune or to be content with $2,000 a year. John Fiske has his private fortune and his professorship; Hawthorne and Henry James live abroad for copyright sake. There is not a new name in the past ten years, and no promise of a new name in the next twenty in American literature, and the loss of a national literature is a serious question. As between the authors and publishers, it would be better to sacrifice the latter to the former, if it were necessary; it would be better to have our literature printed at home and published abroad than to have this nation merely the printer of other nations' writings. But it is not necessary to sacrifice either. The publishers who are slowly strangling all American authorship are the ones who are the most deeply interested in the maintenance of American authorship, and it could be wished that they might find it out by some less-costly means than the insane competition of a dishonest and suicidal piracy.

A Dog Story.

Dr. Calderwood, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, has, in his work entitled "The Relations of Mind and Brain," the following story of a dog: "A dog belonging to a United Presbyterian minister killed the fowls while the family were at church and buried them in the garden. The bodies were found. The dog was taken to the garden and immediately confessed his guilt. His master took him to his library, and, having shut the door, began a reprimand after this fashion: 'What a wicked thing you have done in murdering the hens! You are a minister's dog, and should have been an example to other dogs instead of doing such as this. Then, this is the Sabbath day, and the deed is all the worse on account of the day on which it has been done.' Thus admonished, the dog was put out of the door and the door shut. Next morning he was found dead. A veterinary surgeon was consulted, and declared that the dog had died of a broken heart!

THERE have been 199,747 interments in Greenwood Cemetery, at New York, all told, 5,132 having been made in 1879.

AS STRANGE AS FICTION.

The Tragic Story of 159 White and Seventeen Black Beans.

[From the Galveston News.]

All old Texans and the student of the history of Texas are familiar with the ill-starred Mier expedition, which left Texas in the fall of 1841 for the purpose of invading Mexico. The expedition started out under command of Gen. Somervill, and on the 19th of December, when in the vicinity of the Rio Grande, was ordered back. After the return of Gen. Somervill and a portion of the command some 300 men who were left determined on hostile demonstrations, and elected William S. Fisher as commander. The expedition then advanced on the town of Mier, in Mexico. A detachment arriving there on the 21st and demanding provisions took the Alcalde of the town with them as a hostage and returned to where the main body was camped to wait the arrival of the articles demanded. While the Texans remained in camp Mier was occupied by Gen. Ampudia, of the Mexican army, with 2,000 men. On the afternoon of the 25th of December the Texas forces started for the town and encountered the forces of Ampudia in its vicinity, and a fight ensued, in which the Mexicans were driven through the town, but still fighting. After several parleys, the representation of the overwhelming numbers opposed to them, and promises of generous terms, the Texans were induced to surrender. The prisoners were then started for the City of Mexico, a number being killed en route, and on arriving at Salado, on the 25th of March, an order was received from Santa Anna, directing that every tenth man be shot. Accordingly, 159 white and seventeen black beans, representing the number of Texans left, were placed in a box and each man drew, the ones drawing the black beans being taken out and shot. In "Thrall's History of Texas" occurs the following paragraph: "First Ampudia and then Santa Anna took a fancy to a mere lad by the name of Hill, and young Hill's father and brother were released, and the young man sent to the best college in Mexico. He adopted the profession of a mining engineer, and is still a citizen of Mexico." Mr. Hill, who has never been to Texas since the time he started on the expedition, left Vera Cruz some days since by the Alexandre line of steamers for New Orleans, at which place he has already arrived, and will be in Galveston on the arrival of the Morgan line steamer this morning. He is a brother-in-law of Gen. W. G. Webb, of Houston, and will be welcomed in Galveston by many old Texans, who remembered his father on his return from Mexico in 1844, when the prisoners were released. The changes wrought in Texas since the departure of Mr. Hill, when a mere lad, thirty-nine year ago, have been of such magnitude that it would require more space than is allotted this paragraph for but the bare enumeration of them.

Remains of Gothic Architecture.

A most interesting discovery of a beautiful vestige of Gothic architecture, in excellent preservation, has been made beneath the house at the southeast corner of Leadenhall, and directly opposite Aldgate pump, in London. The arches and vaults in the basement have hitherto been used as a storehouse for wood and other materials, but the extreme beauty of the architecture, particularly the sculpture and graining, led to an investigation. After the most diligent research, it was ascertained to be the remains of a chapel dedicated to St. Michael, and is designated by old historians as "next Aldgate." It appears to be of very great antiquity, having been built by Norman, prior to St. Katherine, of the Holy Trinity, in the reign of Henry I. and his Queen Mathilda, of Boulogne, about the year 1108, and is now nearly 780 years old. The chapel consists of pillars and arches. Its length from north to south is 48 feet, and its breadth from east to west 16 feet. The walls are constructed with oblong blocks of chalk, similar to those of Rochester Castle. The arches are of stone, the keys of which are beautifully sculptured with knots and other devices, and exhibit at a glance the skillful masonry of our ancestors. The chapel has been filled with soil and rubbish nearly to the capital of the pillars. From the ground to the crown of the arches is 10 feet, and, allowing the shafts to be buried 10 feet, gives a height of 20 feet to the interior of the building. The iron hinges and casements are still attached to the walls, from which circumstance it is conjectured that the structure originally stood on the surface, but that in subsequent years the ground outside was raised gradually until at last the relic of past ages was completely buried. At the southern extremity there is an appearance of an arched passage in the direction of St. Katherine's docks, the site of which the priory of St. Katherine's formerly occupied.

The Stomach Rules the World.

The effects of famine are markedly mental as well as corporeal—famine is often the exciting cause of the most hideous crimes, selfishness and mental disquietude, and the origin of war against all constituted authority. The Parisian Communists, had they been well fed, would not have madly destroyed the Tuileries or the Vendome Column, both of which every Frenchman loves so well. And it is certain that, had the siege of Paris lasted for another week or two, the city would have been one huge lunatic asylum. Florence and Athens have been visited by famine, and one shudders on reading how their inhabitants gave themselves over during the continuance to cruelty, crime and violence. The medical man also attributes to deficient diet the celebrated witchcraft epidemic of the sixteenth century. This had its origin among the nuns of a convent in Flanders, appearing soon after the termination of the fasting season of Lent.

The Communists' Five Francs.

At the French mint are shown now specimens of a coin which will be the blue ribbons of numismatists of the future. These are five-franc pieces struck during the reign of the Commune. At first sight they have all the appearance of coins of like value under the empire; but there is a difference, and it thus occurred: When the Communists began to run short of cash they wanted to coin some new-fashioned money, but were informed that no workmen competent for the task could possibly be got. Consequently they were compelled to go on using Napoleon's dies. Camelinat, however, who was then Master of the Mint, bethought him of a slight innovation. On one side of the five-franc pieces of Napoleon are three emblems, one of which is a bee, representing the sign of the Director of the Mint. Camelinat replaced the bee by a trident. About 1,200,000 francs of these coins were struck, but had hardly been completed when the troops entered Paris, and nearly all these coins were dispatched to be melted and recast.

Light in the Home.

The eminent English writer, Dr. Richardson, produces in one of our contemporaries an article called "Health at Home," which is replete with wisdom. A most important point, and one on which he dwells, is the fact that so many people are afraid of the light. "In a dark and gloomy house you can never see the dirt that pollutes it. Dirt accumulates on dirt, and the mind soon learns to apologize for this condition because the gloom conceals it." Accordingly, when a house is dark and dingy, the air becomes impure, not only on account of the absence of light, but from the impurities which are accumulated. Now, as Dr. Richardson cleverly puts it, we place flowers in our windows that they may have the light. If this be the case, why should we deprive ourselves of the sunshine and expect to gain health and vigor? Light, and plenty of it, is not only a purifier of things inanimate, but it absolutely stimulates our brains. It is in regard to sick-rooms that this excellent authority is particularly impressive. It used to be the habit of physicians in old times to sedulously darken the rooms, and this practice continues to some extent even to-day. In certain acute cases of nervous diseases, where light, the least ray of it, disturbs in over exciting the visual organs, this darkening of the room may be permitted, but ordinarily to keep light out of the room is to deprive the patient of one of the vital forces. Children or old people compelled to live in darkness are pale and wan, exactly like those plants which, deprived of light, grow white. Darkness in the daytime undoubtedly makes the blood flow less strongly and strongly and checks the beating of the heart, and these conditions are precisely such as bring constitutional suffering and disease. The suppression of the light of day actually increases those contagious maladies which feed on uncleanliness. Dr. Richardson states: "I once found by experiment that certain organic poisons, analogous to the poisons which propagate these diseases, are rendered innocuous by exposure to the light."

The Romance of a Portmanteau.

A man presented himself at an inn in Valenciennes, France, and made a request to be admitted, together with a very bulky portmanteau, which he carried on his shoulder. The woman of the house, having allotted to him a second-floor room, offered to help him in carrying up-stairs the burden, which seemed too heavy for his unaided efforts; but he refused, on the ground that it contained articles of a very delicate and fragile nature, and that he could trust it to no one but himself. He, however, requested leave to deposit it in a corner of the tavern until, after resting and refreshing himself, he should be disposed to carry it up-stairs. When the hour arrived for closing the house, the portmanteau remained still below, and the woman, on entering the room to put up the shutters, looked at it, and to her horror perceived that something moved within it. So great was the terror that she sank down speechless and breathless in a chair, and in that position was found by a gen d'arme, who came to protest against the late hour at which the place was kept open. As soon as the cause had been explained to this minion of the law, he forgot the primary object of his visit in his curiosity to explore the mysterious piece of luggage, and, drawing his sword, soon solved all doubts by cutting open the leather. He had no sooner done so than a stout man jumped out, pistol in hand, and fell upon the gen d'arme; but the latter was on his guard, and used his weapon with good effect. The baggage and its owner were both accordingly arrested forthwith, and are now mourning in prison the failure of their ingenious but abortive scheme.

Some Corn in Illinois.

The corn crop of the single [illegible] Illinois for the year 1879 is rep[illegible] be 305,813,377 bushels, and estin[illegible] be worth $97,483,052, or about 31[illegible] per bushel. It is difficult for th[illegible] to take in the full magnitude o[illegible] figures. Here are some calculatio[illegible] will help the conception: Load th[illegible] upon wagons, forty bushels to th[illegible] and start them off on the road [illegible] together that there shall be 100 te[illegible] every mile. The line of wagons c[illegible] this crop of Illinois corn would [illegible] away 76,453 miles, or "more tha[illegible] times around the world!" Again, [illegible] this crop upon railway freight car[illegible] bushels or about eight tons to th[illegible] and make up these cars into a conti[illegible] freight train, allowing thirty feet of [illegible] to each car. The train would ex[illegible] 6,080 miles, or nearly twice across [illegible] continent, from the Atlantic to the [illegible] cific oceans! Again. Suppose we [illegible] this corn into a square bin, twenty feet deep. Let our arithmetical young readers calculate how large this bin would be each way. Also, how many acres it would cover. Also, how many pounds of pork it would make if given to pigs weighing 100 pounds each when they begin feeding upon the corn, and 250 pounds when killed for pork.—Illinois exchange.

Betsy Will Hear the Horn.

The Irishman who applied for a license to go into the saloon business "didn't know any char-ack-ter was needed to sell liquor." The Arkansas ferryman evidently had no idea that education was needed for his work. Here is the hospitable notice which he stuck up on his boat:

"Ef eanybody cums hear arter licker, or to git across the river, they can jes' blow this hear horn, and ef I don't cum when my Betsy up at the hous hears the horn blown, she'll cum down and sell them the licker, or set them across the river when I'm away from hoam. JOHN WILSON. N. B.—Them that can't read will have to go to the House arter Betsy, taint but half a mile there."

MANY CITIZENS.

Greenback Meeting.

The national greenbackers of DeKalb county are requested to meet at Waterloo one week from next Saturday, April 24, 1880, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting delegates to the state convention. By order of

COUNTY COMMITTEE.

* * *

The democrats of Whitley county met in convention last Saturday and nominated the following excellent ticket: Representative, William Carr; treasurer, Joseph Clark; sheriff, Frank P. Allwine; surveyor, Roscoe A. Kaufman; coroner, William Yontz; commissioner, William Tannehill. The delegation to the state convention is understood to be for Gray for governor.

* * *

The constitutional amendments are adopted in the state, providing the constitution does not require all amendments to be ratified by a majority of the electors of the state. If a majority of the electors is necessary, then certainly it must require a majority of the whole number of persons who voted on the 5th inst., which majority the amendments did not receive.

* * *

How natural it is for the republicans of DeKalb county to try to dictate who shall be nominated by the democrats of the county; their labors in that direction heretofore have not been altogether in vain, but in the future the democrats will consider themselves qualified to make their own selections. Mark that.

* * *

The Fort Wayne Sunday Mail says the name of Daniel Shutt, of DeKalb, will be urged at the democratic state convention as a delegate to the Cincinnati convention. The Mail no doubt intended to say Hon. Samuel S. Shutt, whom the democracy of DeKalb would be glad to have honored with the position named.

* * *

—By taking a look at the under-side of the republican slate, it is possible that the following combination for a part of the county ticket might be discovered, viz: For clerk, J. A. Provines, of Spencerville; for auditor, Albert Robbins, of Auburn; for treasurer, Charles Beugnot, of Auburn; for sheriff, A. S. [illegible]eas, of Waterloo.

* * *

[illegible]en. Jas. R. Slack is the democratic [illegible]ince for congress in the 11th dis[illegible]. The general will make it hot for [illegible]idate the opposite party may [illegible].

* * *

The [illegible]mor mentioned in the COURIER last week, concerning the defeat of Capt. [illegible]kens, had no reference to the person [illegible]ho announced his name in the republic[illegible]n caucus.

* * *

Owing to a lack of space this week we are compelled to defer the publication of the official vote at the last election [illegible] a week or two.

* * *

[illegible] county commissioners met on [illegible]y last to settle with the town[illegible]tees and for the transaction of [illegible]portant business.

* * *

[illegible] Whitley county delegates to the [illegible]gressional convention are instructed [illegible]t the vote of that county for Hon. [illegible]. Colerick.

* * *

Hon. R. C. Bell, of Allen county, would like to be a delegate at large from this state to the Cincinnati convention.

* * *

The congressional convention will meet at Auburn, two weeks from today.

* * *

The Louisiana delegation will vote for Hancock in the Cincinnati convention.

* * *

The republican county convention will be held in Auburn, June 19, 1880.

* * *

The democrats of Ohio are instructing for Thurman for president.

* * *

Hendricks first, after him Groesbeck, Jewett, Seymour or English.

* * *

Tilden will not be nominated at Cincinnati.

Possible Effects of Tildenism.

Perhaps it is only a coincidence, but if so it is a very singular one, that the only democratic counties in the state where the democracy met with severe losses are Allen and Floyd, the bailiwicks of the Fort Wayne Sentinel and New Albany Ledger-Standard, respectively. These two papers have labored hard to prove that there is but one democrat capable of filling the presidential chair—Samuel J. Tilden by name. Fort Wayne usually gives 1,800 democratic majority; on Monday the republican majority was over 1,000. In New Albany the change in the same direction was from 700 to 200. The pernicious teaching alluded to above might not have helped to bring about this result, but it did not do much to prevent the defeat.—Wabash Courier.

The pernicious teaching alluded to.—i. e., advocating the imaginary claims of Tilden in direct opposition to public sentiment—has had its effect in more places that those named above. We might mention another county in this congressional district wherein the democratic press has been enthusiastic for Tilden, that went "all wrong" in the last election. The truth is that the rank and file of the democratic party in Indiana is opposed to Tilden, and the papers that have advocated his nomination have lost the confidence of their patrons by so doing. In counties where democratic newspapers have chosen to await the result of the democratic national convention before expressing an opinion on the presidential question, and where the same papers failed to make a bold and aggressive fight against the proposed constitutional amendments, the party made no gains, and in some instances sustained a loss; while in other counties, where the amendments were opposed by the press and where the press was on the side of the people in urging the nomination of Hon. T. A. Hendricks for president, the democrats were alive to the importance of winning in the first political contest of 1880, and in almost every instance they made large gains. We are proud to know that the democrats of DeKalb have set a good example this early in the campaign. They have shown the good that always results from harmony, and we believe there is a fixed determination on the part of all to continue in the good work.

Rest Beyond The Tomb.

Last Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock, the spirit of Miss Celesta A. Cowan, who has lingered for many months as a victim to consumption, took its flight into eternity. While her death has been daily expected, still, it was received with a shock of sadness by those who knew her. For two years and a half she had suffered with the disease, during the last four months of that time having been entirely helpless, and finally frail nature was forced to yield. She was a sister of our townsman, Dr. J. A. Cowan, and died at his house, in the twenty-fourth year of her age.

The remains were conveyed to Decatur for interment, where the funeral services were conducted Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Busy Buzz-Saw.

At D. D. Snyder's hub-and-spoke factory, last Thursday morning, considerable excitement prevailed when it was made known that the merciless buzzsaw had found another victim, in the person of Will. Armstrong, a stepson of Uncle John McClellan. While running one of the aforesaid machines, and at an unguarded moment, Armstrong's glove was caught by the saw and in an instant his right hand was a wreck; the little finger was sawed completely off and has now but one joint, while the others, though badly lacerated, have been saved. The unfortunate young man will carry a deformed hand through life, although it may not be helplessly crippled.

On the same day of last week, while engaged in sawing wood, a twenty-year-old son of Mrs. Esther Frits, who lives about four miles northwest of town, fed the thumb of his left hand to a circular saw, mutilating it so badly that it was amputated next day, Friday. Drs. Cowan & Allyn attended in both cases.

A Bloody Battle.

It is difficult to account for the mania that suddenly struck Auburn last week, unless it was in the atmosphere; at all events, two or three noted characters got overloaded with the idea that they ought to hop up on somebody else's anatomy and dance a war-jig. The most noted of these contests was the terrific struggle between His Imperial Majesty and Royal Highness John Korth, the tailor, and Billy Murphy, the well-known painter. H. I. M. and R. H., above alluded to, imagined he had a distressing grievance for which Murphy was accountable; therefore, Friday morning, at about eight o'clock, the tailor tackled the painter and the trouble begun; for upwards of one consecutive minute the air was thick with hair, whitewash-brushes, infuriated sauer kraut and human gore; then suddenly, as if by magic, the roar of artillery—shot off by mouth—had ceased, and tranquility reigned supreme over the field of carnage. Thus ended one of the fiercest battles in the history of Auburn, and it will be handed down to posterity for generations to come. (This last assertion is made with an utter disregard for truth, but something of the kind was needed to make the thing wind up right).

—Wall paper cheap at Davenport's drug store. 14-tf.

—Go to McQuiston & Ralston's for cheap clothing and carpets. They are selling at old prices. 15-3t.

—When Sam. Weaver takes a notion, and his old nag is wound up, he can get through town quicker and raise more dust and scare more teams than an ordinary tornado.

—There is a little item somewhere in this paper which states that the town needs one of two things—a shower or a sprinkling wagon; but it isn't so, and don't you believe it.

—House, sign, carriage and ornamental painting, kalsomining and paper-hanging done in the very best style at reasonable prices by J. F. Canon. Shop on Eighth street, up stairs.

—Miss Belle Sleppy, daughter of Daywalt Sleppy, who resides between Auburn and Garrett, died last Monday and was buried in the Auburn cemetery yesterday. The deceased was 21 years and 10 month old.

—Frank Hoff's grocery is on the boom; so much so that he has found it necessary to extend his business room through the block. He now has an entrance on both Seventh and Eighth streets.

—Mr. J. F. Canon has just finished the finest job of painting and graining ever done in DeKalb county, the same being done on the woodwork in Abright's store-room. Call and see it if you are an admirer of fine work.

—James McMichael, formerly of the Junction and more recently in the employ of the Wabash company at Toledo, has been spending a few days in Auburn this week; he is real fond of Auburn and comes quite frequently, but what of it? He is a very pleasant young gentleman, and that's the kind of visitors to have.

—There has been some talk, on the part of members of the Neoteric club and others interested, of having a grand final "blow-out" at Ensley hall next week, in the form of a ball for the benefit of Edgerly's orchestra. They should have it, certainly, and it could be made the best of the season, as well as the last. "Partners for a polka."

—S. C. Swineford, proprietor of the popular Swineford house, has fitted up a little hall in his hotel which will be an elegant place to hold private parties or hops. It will amply accommodate four sets for square dances, has a good floor, and is altogether as pleasant and airy a room for such purposes as can be found anywhere in town.

—Some enterprising attorney can secure a job in the north end, just about now, as some of its denizens have been raising h—avoc amongst themselves and enjoying a particular kind of amusement which is against the peace and dignity of the state; in other words, a man of that hitherto peaceful neighborhood was found by his wife Monday evening last, on such terms of intimacy with another man's better half that she "kicked" with all her might, and the result will probably be a divorce.

—The Richland township Sunday-school institute will meet Saturday, April 24, at 9 o'clock a. m. This organization has been in successful operation for the past seven years. We hope to make the coming session the best of all. All Sunday-school workers are invited to be present.

16-2w L. W. TRAUSE, President.

—Frank Copper tells us that No. 5 on the Fort Wayne and Jackson road ran from Ft. Wayne to Auburn, Tuesday evening, a distance of 23 miles, in 35 minutes, including a stop at St. Johns for wood. That being the case, the train must have run the remarkable speed of about four miles a minute, as it ordinarily requires about 30 minutes to "wood up."

—Tuesday night, or early Wednesday morning, thieves broke into the Fort Wayne & Jackson company's ticket-office at Waterloo, smashed up the ticket case and scattered tickets around promiscuously, relieved the drawer of about $2.00 in change, all it contained, and lit out. It is not as yet known whether any tickets are missing, and there is no trace of the prepetrators.

—The new time-card on the Fort Wayne & Jackson road took effect last Sunday. It does not change the time of trains very materially, but a minute, we have observed, often makes a material difference in catching a train; therefore, you may find it money in your pocket to consult the time-card as it will be found corrected in next week's COURIER.

—Wm. Meeks was conveyed to the insane asylum last Monday by Deputy-Sheriff Somers. It will be remembered by the readers of the COURIER that he was confined there some time ago, having abused his family and threatened to murder them, but that he escaped, since which time he has renewed his violent demonstrations to such an extent that it became necessary to replace him at Indianapolis, as above stated.

—Listen to Brother Zimmerman, of the Valparaiso Messenger, who gets off the following in a late issue of that paper:

"The editor of the Messenger is very happy. It is neither a boy nor a girl. It is a clear conscience, an honest purpose to do right, and a paying business. Why shouldn't we be happy? Are our enemies satisfied?"

We should think they would be. "Zim" evidently has the "sand" to hold on to his rights, and we admire the spirit he has manifested in defending himself and his paper from the attacks of a few envious and over-sensitive people in Valparaiso.

—This brief mention appears in the Ft. Wayne Sentinel of April 8: "Dr. Sears has decided to move the Peabody normal school from Nashville to Atlanta." Now, the Sentinel has got to be a trifle more cautious in its rash miscellaneous publications. We asked Dr. Sears about it yesterday, and he says he hasn't decided to do anything of the kind; on the contrary, he is only interested in the town of Auburn and the practice of homœopathy, and says that such trivial affairs as the Peabody normal schools never occupy his attention.

The First Thing to be Done.

[Washington Post.]

We don't know that Bob Ingersoll has addressed his inquiry of "What shall I do to be saved?" to us particularly, but we are inclined to think that the first step in that direction would be to get outside the third-term party.

We are making some extraordinary efforts to do about two-thirds of the

With our increased facilities, and having bought largely before the advance, etc., our belief remains unchanged, and we shall act upon it, that the best time to sell cheap is when others sell dear; and that more fortunes have been made by selling at low than high prices. Sixteen Loving Hearts

That beat as eight, or something like that, is the way the record of marriage licenses shows up for the first ten days of April; and they are beating under the apparel of the following people: Geo. E. Shull and Jennie Feagler; Jno. V. Reyher and Elizabeth E. Rowe; Charles G. Adolph Kresse (good Lord!) and Mary Deems; James H. Mills and Mary A. Apple; Joseph Hartman and Ann Lovina Burr; Chas. E. Bruce and Lydia Smith; Joseph Bell and Nancy Emerson; John C. Reed and Isabelle Haynes.

Lend a Hand.

The almost incessant travel out east Seventh street has rendered some kind of a sidewalk an imperative necessity. With this end in view, a number of enterprising citizens have made contributions and offered their services for the purpose of building one from the corner of Ensley's store out to the Eckhart carriage works, and the work will be commenced Tuesday morning. The material is all on hand, and it is desired that all those interested in our advancement shall be on the spot with the necessary tools to lend a helping hand.

The Waterloo Re-Union.

EDS. COURIER, Dear Sirs:—We learn that a report is in circulation in Auburn and vicinity, that the old soldiers' re-union, to be held here June 10 and 11, 1880, would be held in the fair ground, and that an admission fee to the grounds would be charged. Please say to your readers we do not expect to use the fair ground at all, but if we do there will be no fee charged to any person for admission. It will be an old soldiers' re-union, pure and simple. The latch-string will be out for all, and no politics. Respectfully,

J. W. Patterson, R. Wes McBride, S. J. Locke, L. J. Blair, S. B. Johnston —Committee.

"Good As Wheat."

The above familiar quotation has come into very general use, as applying to any person or thing whose credit is good or whose intrinsic value is equivalent to so much money; but in no place does it fit so consistently as to the bonanza struck a few days ago by Frank Copper and his chief clerk, Elmer Lowry, at the Jackson depot; it wasn't a very enormous find, but still it tended to swell the boys' finances for a few minutes. Elmer discovered, while shooting rats around the elevator, that considerable grain had fallen through the cracks in the hoppers and found lodgment between them and the floor; upon sweeping it up into a pile, the boys were astonished to find that they owned a small farm in the shape of twenty-four bushels of wheat, the accumulation of perhaps six or seven years. The boys bundled it up, took it to market, sold it for $1.10 a bushel, "whacked up," and added just $13 apiece to their bank account.

Growing Old.

One of the cardinal pleasures of old age is to find that you are surrounded still by the friends of other days, but more particularly by a family of children whose gratitude and solicitude are every day made manifest. Such, we imagine, were the thoughts of Mrs. Rebecca Maurer as she saw assembled at her home in Jackson township, last Thursday, April 8, many of the children whose footsteps she had guided from the cradle. The purpose of the pleasant gathering was to commemorate Mrs. Maurer's birthday, of which Thursday was the sixty-fourth anniversary, and there were present ten children and seventeen grandchildren. Following are the names of a portion of those who took part in the festivities: Mr. and Mrs. John Wyatt and son, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Lochner, and Miss Clara Slesser. After an enjoyable social chat, the contribution of presents and a sumptuous dinner, the company dispersed in the best of spirits, hoping for "many happy returns."

That Band.

Finally, at the eleventh hour, a band consisting of twelve members has been organized in Auburn, which is due principally to the exertions of one or two parties who have interested themselves in the matter and gone to work in earnest. Prof. Joe McKay has tendered his services as instructor, and it is said that he is qualified to do the thing up brown. The names of the members, together with the instruments which they have been assigned to manipulate, are as follows: Chris. Balduck, 1st E flat; Dave Cochran, 2nd E flat; Alva Brandon, 3rd E flat; Ora Shaffer, 1st B flat; Johnnie McIntyre, 2nd B flat; John Gossage, 1st alto; Sam. Maxfield, 2nd alto; Frank McDowell, 1st tenor; Ervin Huffman, 2nd tenor; Frank Culbertson, baritone; John Picker, tuba; Conger Little, snare drum.

The organization was effected last Monday, and meetings will be held Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings of each week, in the city hall building. The instruments are fine ones, and all that is needed is thorough practice to make it a success. It is to be hoped that there will be no shirking on the part of members, or no dissension between them, in which event we can soon have a band to be proud of. "Opening chorus by the band."

Taken In.

Elsewhere in this issue of the COURIER appears a brief mention of the robbery of the Jackson ticket office at Waterloo. Later "telegrams" develop the fact that they also tapped another Till, whose first name is Dick, a grocery and saloon keeper. Sheriff Leas got on the trail yesterday afternoon, in company with Marshal Scott, and succeeded in taking in three dukes who give every evidence of being the ones most interested in the Waterloo pilfering. They are now in "the jug" and give their names as Edward B. Konkle, Akron, Ohio, John Cronin, Pittsburgh, Pa., and John Martin, Lancaster, Pa. The result of their examination will be made known in next week's COURIER.

It can almost be asserted that ST. JACOBS OIL works wonders. Shortly before the New Year, when I visited my family at Mitchell, I found my son Edward, a lad little more than ten years old, very sick. He suffered with Rheumatism, and so terribly that he was perfectly stiff in his limbs, could not possibly walk, and had to be carried from place to place. At once I sent for some ST. JACOBS OIL, used it according to directions, and in a few days could see evidence of considerable improvement. On the tenth of this month I again visited my family and was astonished to find him well and hearty. He once more has fresh color in his face and can go to school again. Whenever the old trouble threatens to return, relief is immediately secured by the use of the celebrated ST. JACOBS OIL. From sheer joy over this result I cannot withhold recommending ST. JACOBS OIL to suffering humanity as a true benefactor.

WILLIE.

BY JOHN W. HATTON.

I know 'tis wrong to murmur,
But I cannot, cannot say,
Thy will be done," oh, Father,
Since Willie passed away.

The days are dull and dreary,
The nights are strangely sad;
And when I sleep I'm dreaming,
Still dreaming of the lad.

And the boy comes back from heaven,
More wondrous pure and fair,
And I bathe my longing fingers
Once more in his golden hair.

And I wake with a groan of anguish,
With a feeling of despair!
For alas! his cot is empty,
And my heart is just as bare.

The morning brings no promise,
No hope of better cheer;
It finds me waiting, listening
For sounds I never hear.

For that voice, hushed forever
Upon life's fitful shore,
It wakened me oft from slumber,
But will never wake me more!

What have I done, oh, Heaven!
To merit such a blow?
Why crush my heart forever
And leave me to my woe?

My thoughts go back to boyhood,
When near to death I lay;
Of the anguish of my father,
And the prayer I heard him pray.

He prayed that God might spare me,
Or take him then instead;
And the prayer of the son, oh Father!
Is to sleep beside his dead!

COLUMBIA, Mo.

THE MINISTER'S MISTAKE.

The sunset was painting all the forest paths with gold; the mossy boles of the old trees glowed in the level light, as if they had been carved out of glittering bronze, and the scarlet vines along the stone wall caught new splendor from the last rays, while the silvery-white fringe of wild clematis swung from the dead thorn bushes, and here and there a bird, perched high up against the deep, vivid blue heavens, uttered its shrill, clear vesper note; and Mr. Caryl, walking home through the Westbrook woods, thought what a beautiful world this was that God had made.

Mr. Caryl was only 24, and had been in the Westbrook parish for three months. Not long, but long enough to discern, by the testimony of his own experience, that there were thorns as well as roses in a country pastor's life. It had seemed so beautiful and ideal when he looked at it through the medium of his fancy, standing on the threshold of the Theological Seminary. It was beautiful still; but the ideality had all gone out of it.

His mother met him on the door-step of the parsonage—a brisk, spectacled little dame, in a turned black silk, with frills of neatly-darned lace, and violet ribbons in her cap.

"Well, Charles," she said, cheerily, "here's a whole slateful of calls for you."

Mr. Caryl's countenance rather fell. He had been anticipating an evening by the wood fire, with the last number of Blackwood's Magazine.

"Calls?" he repeated; "what are they? and where are they?"

He went into the little parlor as he spoke—the parlor where the coveted wood fire was leaping and flashing on the bright andirons, and a shaded lamp was already burning on the table among his piled-up books and papers—and took up the little slate.

"The Widow Corsett," he read, adding, sotto voce, "that woman again! She has died once a week regularly ever since I have been in Westbrook."

"Charles!" mildly reproved his mother.

"It's a fact," asserted the young clergyman. "I don't think people ought to confound hypochondria and religion in that blindfold sort of way. She'd a deal better send for the doctor, and leave off scolding that wretched adopted daughter of hers. I won't go—that's settled! What! 'Meet Deacon Daley and old Capt. Hartwick at Fowlersville Four Corners at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow.' Now I wonder why people can't agree about their own boundary lines without calling in the clergyman of the parish as umpire between them."

"Dissension is such a dreadful thing among your flock, Charles," said his mother.

"So is scarlet fever or small-pox," said Mr. Caryl, rather curtly; "but, all the same, I don't see how I can be held responsible for either one or the other. 'Lend the manuscript of your last sermon to old Miss Dadd to read.' But I haven't any manuscript to read—only half a dozen memoranda. I preached entirely extempore last Sunday."

"Couldn't you write it off from memory?" said Mrs. Caryl, piteously. "The poor old lady seems so anxious. She said the sermon impressed her so deeply."

"Really, mother, I think that's a little unreasonable," said the pastor. "Suppose every old lady in the parish were to require me to write out a twelve-page sermon for her especial benefit! 'Give Miss Hitts a list of hymns for next Sunday.' Yes, I'll do that—as well now as any time. 'Speak to Mrs. Prune's Sarah.' Mrs. Prune's Sarah? Who is Mrs. Prune's Sarah? And what am I to speak to her about, I'd like to know?" demanded the young clergyman, in a sort of mild desperation.

"Don't you know?" explained Mrs. Caryl. "It's Mrs. Prune that lives down by the saw-mill, in the big white house with the poplar trees in front of it. And it's her step-daughter that's come home from the third situation, all on account of her ribbons in her hat, and her pride in her own pretty face."

"And I am to speak to her, eh?" said the young pastor.

"Yes; you are to speak to her," said his mother.

"I shall do nothing of the sort," declared Mr. Caryl, with some emphasis.

"But you must, Charles!" pleaded the old lady. "It's in the line of your regular duty."

Mr. Caryl hesitated, and wrinkled his brow in sore perplexity.

"Do you think so?" said he.

"I'm sure of it," declared the old lady.

Conscientiousness was one of the strong points of Mr. Caryl's character. He took up his hat.

"If it's got to be done," said he, desperately, "the sooner the better."

"But you will stop for your tea first, Charles?" urged Mrs. Caryl. "Hot corn-bread and strawberry jam."

"I'll stop for nothing!" said Mr. Caryl. "Don't fret, little mother; it won't take me long to speak to Sarah."

And he disappeared with a laugh.

As it happened, he never before had been called upon to practice this particular branch of his profession, pleading with the rebellious lambs of his flock who thought more of their bright eyes than they did of their hymn-books, and he turned the matter over in his mind as he walked along the frosty woodland path, where the young moon cast a fitful, evanescent light, and the dead leaves sent up a faint odor beneath his feet.

"Speak to Sarah," he muttered to himself, not without a certain perception of the ridiculous side of the matter. "And what am I to say to her, I wonder?"

He knocked softly at the big front door of the Prune mansion. A shuffling, untidy girl of 14 or 15 opened it, hiding behind a shawl and a fringe of curl-papers.

"Is Mrs. Prune at home?" said he.

"No, she ain't," retorted the girl.

Mr. Caryl paused. He scarcely knew what question to ask next.

"Is Sarah at home?" he demanded, after a little.

"Miss Sarah?"

"Well, I suppose it can hardly be 'Mr. Sarah,'" said the young clergyman, half smilingly. "Yes, Miss Sarah, of course."

"She's at home," said the girl, ungraciously opening the door a little wider. "Came this afternoon. Settin' in the parlor. Walk in."

And without further ceremony Caryl found himself ushered into a semi-dark apartment, where a tall, slender young beauty of eighteen summers or so sat before the fire, in a plain black dress, with the simplest of cuffs and collars, and a single blue ribbon fastened into the thick, dark braids of her hair—a person so entirely different from what he expected to see that he stopped short in some perplexity.

"Is this—ahem!—Sarah?" he asked.

"I am Sarah Fielding," she responded.

"I have called—to speak to you," said he, with a desperate rallying of his verbal forces. "Perhaps, Sarah, you may know who I am?"

"No, I don't," said the girl, in some surprise.

"I am Mr. Caryl, the pastor of the parish."

"I am happy to make your acquaintance," said the girl, putting out one slim hand in the easiest possible manner.

The pastor hesitated. This was not what he had looked for at all.

"Of course—of course," said he. "But how does it happen, Sarah, that you are at home again so soon?"

"Do you mean at Westbrook?"

"Where else should I mean?" retorted Mr. Caryl, crustily—for he felt that if he once abandoned his tone of authority he was lost. "Why didn't you stay where you were?"

Sarah colored up to the roots of her hair. He could perceive that, even in the uncertain rise and fall of the fire-light.

"I do not like the position," said she in a low voice.

"But you ought to like it," said Mr. Caryl.

"You are not aware of all the circumstances," pleaded Sarah.

"I am quite aware," said Mr. Caryl, severely, "that vanity is the root of all your evils."

"Vanity?"

The crimson was deeper than ever now on brow and temple as she half rose.

"Yes, vanity!" impressively reiterated the clergyman. "Be silent, if you please, young woman, and hear me out. You have a certain amount of personal attractions, which appear to have turned your head. Remember that beauty is but skin deep. Call to mind frequently the ancient adage that 'handsome is as handsome does.' After all you are neither Mary Queen of Scots, or Cleopatra. Now take my advice, Sarah—"

"But I have not asked for it!" she cried out, in choked accents.

"No matter whether you have or not," said Mr. Caryl, calmly. "It is my business to volunteer good counsel, and yours to receive it. I repeat, Sarah, take my advice, and go back to your last place. Apologize humbly for your shortcomings; tell the woman of the house that you will strive to amend your conduct for the future, and endeavor to deserve her approval. Put away your silly ribbons, bows and brooches"—with a stern glance at the poor little agate breastpin that glistened at the girl's throat—"and leave the vain accessories of dress to your betters, always remembering that the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit—"

But just at this point the young clergyman's oration was abruptly checked by the entrance of Mrs. Prune herself, shawled and bonneted, and breathing fast from the haste she had made. In one hand she held a prodigious brown cotton umbrella; with the other she dragged forward the untidy damsel of the shawl and curl-papers.

"Here she is, Mr. Caryl, here she is!" bawled Mrs. Prune, who did not possess that most excellent thing in a woman, "a low and gentle voice." "A lazy, good-for-nothing, stuck-up, vain minx, as needn't suppose as I'm going to do for her no longer! You needn't hang back, Sarah; it ain't no good! Here she is, Mr. Caryl—here's Sarah!"

The young pastor stared in amazement.

"Is that Sarah?" said he.

"That's Sarah," panted Mrs. Prune.

"And who is this?" he demanded, turning to the slim, dark-eyed girl with the blue ribbon and agate brooch.

"That's my niece, Sally Fielding, as has been governess of a family up in Maine for three years," said Mrs. Prune. "And she's down here on a visit now—come this very afternoon. Hain't you been introduced yet? Mr. Caryl, my niece, Sallie. Sally, this 'ere's—"

But before she could finish the words of her formal introduction the clergyman had made a nervous grasp for his hat.

"I—I have been the victim of a misunderstanding," stammered he. "This young person told me that she was Sarah."

"So she is," said Mrs. Prune. "But she ain't the Sarah as is to be spoken to."

"I beg a thousand apologies," said Mr. Caryl, feeling the cold sweat drip from every pore.

Miss Fielding burst out laughing.

"They are cheerfully granted," said she. "No, don't go away, Mr. Caryl," holding out her hand as he was turning to depart. "I have learned that you possess at least the virtue of frankness. Shall we not be friends?"

And Mr. Caryl looked into the dark-blue eyes and said, "Yes."

He forgot all about the hot corn-bread and strawberry jam at home, and stayed to tea at Mrs. Prune's, while the right Sarah escaped the intended lecture and the wrong Sarah presided in a most gracious and winning manner behind the cups and saucers, and old Mrs. Caryl laughed heartily when her son explained the curious rencontre to her later in the evening.

"But why did she leave her situation—the wrong Sarah, I mean?" said she.

"Because the young heir of the house made love to her," said Mr. Caryl; "and I don't wonder at it. She's the prettiest little creature I ever saw in my life."

"Perhaps, then," said Mrs. Caryl, doubtfully, "your advice wasn't so very much amiss, after all."

"Certainly it was," said Mr. Caryl, with spirit.

The old lady looked sharply at him.

"Charles," said she, "I do believe you're struck with her."

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Caryl, turning red.

But just three months later, when the moon was at the full, and sleighing parties the rage, Mr. Caryl brought Miss Fielding home from a singing-school in his new cutter, and told her a secret on the way—that he loved her.

And so the wrong Sarah was the right Sarah, after all.

Gough's Ruse.

Most lecturers who have been introduced to their audiences have suffered from the high eulogiums passed upon them beforehand by their misjudging introducers. The natural effect is to arouse expectation that cannot be met, and to produce marked disappointment. John B. Gough relates how he once managed, before a London assembly, to avoid such a result. His introducer had pronounced him the greatest orator who had ever lived, and ended a long and fulsome eulogy by telling the people to prepare themselves for such a burst of eloquence as they had never listened to. Gough, knowing that the best effort he had ever made would, under such circumstances, fall far short of anticipation, determined to practice a ruse, and the ruse was to affect stupidity. He opened by stammering and hesitating, beginning his sentences and leaving them unfinished, until, as he said, the worst speaker in England could not have done worse. He soon overheard those on the platform whispering their disapprobation and censure, one man saying: "O, this will never do here, you know. It may be all very well in America, you know; but in England, you know, it is quite a different thing." He still continued in his dull, disconnected way until he had seen that he had a background for his verbal pictures. Then he gradually adopted his natural manner, and, as sentence after sentence rolled out vivid and resonant from his lips, his audience grew enthusiastic, and fairly roared with applause. He had never been more rapturously greeted than he was then and there. Those who heard him declared that they had never known a man to change so after he had once warmed up.

The Source of Disease.

"The Way It Is Done," is the title of an interesting little book by Mrs. Warren, the well-known writer of several valuable books on domestic economy. Here is an extract which might be read with interest by sufferers from rheumatism:

"I can't get up stairs, I be so crippled."

"Just try it a step at a time and rest. And what do you sleep in, sheets or blankets?"

"Sheets, of course; what else? I have got blankets over me, and a good thick counterpane over that."

"I thought so; put away the sheets and the counterpane, and sleep in blankets, under and over, and no counterpane at all. The sheets and the counterpane do a great deal of mischief."

"Well, now, how can that be?"

"The cotton keeps the sour heat and perspiration from the body in the bed, and so you breathe the poisoned air all night, summer and winter, and that poisoned air makes your rheumatism ten times worse. If you were in blankets, they would not absorb the perspiration; it would pass through from one to the other, but in cotton, if it absorbs it—I had better say soaks into it—there it remains cold or hot, or clammy."

"That may be right, sure enough, for I do perspire so with pain that one might wring the sheets sometimes."

Overheated Rooms.

The great tendency in winter is to keep rooms too warm. The foundation of pneumonia, pleurisy, and pulmonary consumption is frequently laid in overheated, ill-ventilated apartments. The inmates become accustomed to breathing hot, close air, the system is toned down and relaxed, and a slight exposure to cold and wet results in serious illness. A uniform heat of seventy degrees is adequate, from a sanitary point of view, in any weather. If that temperature is not sufficient to give warmth, it is an indication that the person does not take sufficient exercise, and the cure for it is more miles than flannel. In the coldest weather, when the ground is like stone under the feet, when there is no drip from the eaves, and when snow lies on roofs, rooms should be ventilated. Pure air should be admitted through open doors and windows, so that the oxygen consumed by flame and by respiration may be replaced, and the effete and poisonous matter thrown off by the body thoroughly driven away.

Good Enough.

If Mrs. Bakewell was proud of anything, that thing was her cooking, especially her cake. Therefore you can in a measure fancy her feelings when Mrs. Homespun, who had been helped to a slice of Mrs. B.'s richest loaf, remarked: "There, that's just the kind o' cake that suits me. I've told Mrs. Talkwell time and time agin that them that wants rich cake can have it for all o' me. Just give me a piece of common, cheap stuff; it's good enough for anybody, I say!"—Boston Transcript.

THURLOW WEED.

His Return to the Sanctum—Views and Habits of Life.

[From the New York Herald.]

The veteran founder of the Albany Evening Journal entered the office at 10 o'clock, on Monday morning last, and was escorted to the old editorial chair by Mr. Dawson, now the editor, once Mr. Weed's apprentice, next a journeyman, with the reputation of being the swiftest compositor in the country, and then foreman, partner and editor under Mr. Weed, and always his devoted and truest friend. As soon as Mr. Weed had been made comfortable in his old chair, Mr. Dawson ceded the editorialship of the Journal to him for the day, and placed the entire literary staff of the institution under his command. This done the editors and reporters went to their duties, and Mr. Weed fell to and finished a two-column leader for the day that he had already outlined, denying himself to the many friends who called until he had given out the last sheet of that editorial article. Then he announced his readiness to receive his friends and to supply copy at the instigation of the "printer's devil." But there were such troops of old and young friends pouring in from that hour forward that at the time when he vacated the editorial chair (half-past 2 o'clock, when the first edition of the Journal went to press), he had been able to give the "printer's devil" only two short articles in addition to the leader. "Fifty years ago," Mr. Weed said, in continuing the story of his sensations in resuming his old chair for a day, "we got news from New York by steamboat in twelve hours, but while I sat in the editor's chair in the Journal office on Monday the news was flashed to us from all parts of the world, and from the Eastern hemisphere ahead of time."

Mr. Weed went to his stateroom in a North river steamboat on Monday night at his usual hour for retiring, but not to sleep as though he had been at home. It was not the jarring machinery that kept him awake, but the memories of the villages and cities he was passing. "Although I could not see them," he said, "I knew them by the time. I remembered them as they were when I was employed as a cabin boy in a North river sloop in 1806 or 1807, and when we required from three days to a week to make the trip. Then the city of Hudson was engaged in whaling. I have seen three or four whale-ships at Hudson's wharves simultaneously. Think of whalers sailing up to Hudson now! Then there is the flourishing village of Athens, in those times the mere hamlet of Lunenberg, and now we passed East and West Camp, Emboch and other towns with primitive names, that are now Bristol, Tivoli, Barrytown, etc. I got only three hours' sleep, my brain was so busy with the scenes that the boat was passing—a boat that frightened nobody now. You have not read that everybody north of Spuyten Duyvil creek was frightened when Robert Fulton's Clermont plowed her way up the Hudson, vomiting the smoke and fire, and with uncovered paddle-wheels moved by no visible agency. I recalled it while I lay in my state-room on Monday night. Poor Fulton! It is a disgrace to the country that his remains should lie in a private tomb down town with not so much as the word 'Fulton' to mark his last resting-place. I awoke at my usual hour, as much refreshed as though I had slept at home."

"Your visit to Albany was a temporary relief from the importunities of office-seekers and of others who almost clamor for assistance at your hands?" was the next question.

Mr. Weed hesitated momentarily, and then answered frankly, "Well, I must confess it was."

"You live very methodically, I have been told. Are you conscious of any symptoms of indigestion and its inevitable derangement of the system after a journey in which you must change your diet?"

"I ate nothing on the steamboat, and my daughter in Albany, whose house is my home when I go up the river twice a year, knows my regimen so accurately that when I sat down at her table everything was as I have it in New York. I fancy that my regularity has prolonged my life."

"Do you use intoxicating liquors?"

"In my early life as an editor I drank sparingly of champagne at dinners now and then, but only occasionally and socially, and when, in 1845, I went to the West Indies for my daughter's health, I acquired a taste for the fine old Santa Cruz rum that the planters brewed for home use. It is not sold over the bars. I have some of it on hand, and every night before going to bed I drink a little of it mixed with Vichy. I think it does me good. I drink no intoxicating liquors at any other time, although I have a cellar full of wine. I used to go out a great deal, but since I had a sunstroke, about twelve years ago, I have declined all dinners and evening receptions. I smoked tobacco—the best mild Havana cigars—for more than fifty years, but I used the weed in no other form. Thirteen years ago my physician warned me that tobacco was affecting my nervous system, and thereupon I burned my cigar boxes. I used no substitute, and a fortnight later I forgot my smoking. From that time I wrote with great facility."

The well-preserved old gentleman readily complied when requested to recite the routine of a man who, having lived to be 82, knows how to live. "Before my morning meal, at 8 o'clock," he said, "I eat either one-half of a large apple or an orange from my daughter's orange grove in Florida, rejecting the pulp. At present I have oatmeal, the yelk of hard-boiled eggs, a piece of toast, the best kind of English breakfast tea and certain kinds of fish in season, such as Spanish mackerel, which I esteem a delicacy, and porgies. Sometimes I have cold roast beef or a saddle of mutton, and at least once a week—for breakfast on Sunday usually—corned beef hash. A light luncheon is served at 1 o'clock, and sometimes I eat a slice of cold corned beef or cold mutton, but always bread, about the equivalent of corn bread—we call them buttered gems—and sometimes at this luncheon we have sardines. Cold water is the only liquid on the table at that hour. At 6 o'clock I always have fish, of whatever kind may be in season. For fifteen years I have eaten no dessert of any kind, except a little fruit."

Mr. Weed is out of bed at 7 every morning, and after breakfast he enters upon his literary labors. In the afternoon he sits in his well-stocked library and chats with friends until tea-time, and then he chats with friends until 10 o'clock. Then he goes to his room, and either his daughter or another member of the family reads Dickens, Thackeray or Scott, or some other author, for an hour and a quarter; then prayer from the Rev. Ashton Oxenden's "Prayers for Private Use," and at a quarter past 11 the veteran drinks a glass of Santa Cruz rum and Vichy and goes to bed. His sleep is almost uniformly refreshing.

In relation to his interest in the temperance cause Mr. Weed said, "I am with those who seek to mitigate the evils of intemperance; for, while human nature is what it is, all prohibitory laws must fail. A like vigor of effort in another direction would yield good results. If I were a younger man I would labor to make ours a great grape-growing country, so that wine might be as cheap as cider, and I would impose an almost prohibitive tariff upon imported and distilled liquors. I would strive to make our country what France is—a sober country."

Some Hints On Right Reading.

W. E. Foster's admirable lecture on Right Reading," reported by the Providence Journal, is summed up by C. A. Cutter, in the Library Journal, as follows:

A. The right selection of books. Personal adaptation should guide us. Our reading should have a tendency toward symmetrical development; it should not be exclusively technical, nor exclusively general. We should begin where we are interested. An investigation of a subject will lead from that into other fields. It may be objected that this requires a suggestive habit of mind. But a suggestive habit of mind is not born in any man [?], and it may be acquired by any man. Let once a beginning be made, and the further we go, the surer we are of recognizing some familiar event or topic; the dread of unfamiliarity vanishes after we have taken the first few steps. There must be discrimination in our reading; aimlessness is one of the worst evils. B. Right methods of reading. Definiteness of purpose is as necessary here as in the selection. We must have a clear idea of just what we wish to get out of each book. System, a scientific adjustment of means to ends. We must read in a comparative way. It is not safe to judge any question apart from its relations. The reader must take a survey of the whole field before beginning at any one point. In using reference lists, such as are issued by the Providence Library, it is not necessary to read every book and every chapter referred to. We must select what on the whole would best serve our purpose. We are not to ignore our interests, however some one book might particularly attract the attention of some one reader. The plan of reading by a reference list does not apply to all books. Imagine a man going through "Shakspeare" or "Paradise Lost" in this ruthless manner! The plan applies to the works of the "Literature of Knowledge." "The literature of power" needs a different treatment. Books which have an organic unity, following out one central subject or thought, must be read as a whole. We should review our reading at times.

Articulation.

A recent writer says: "As regards articulation, the Americans, we think, have a natural advantage over the English in a superior delicacy of structure of the vocal organs. Very many Englishmen, apparently, have to contend with a thick and unmanageable conformation of the organs of speech, which occasions the splutterings and mouthings in their public speaking. That the Americans have great natural facility for clear and fine articulation is shown by the readiness with which they acquire the pronunciation of foreign tongues, and by the fact that, with proper early training and care, they do attain to remarkable grace of utterance. It still remains true that very much more importance is attached to articulation in England than here; that more pains is taken in training the young to habits of clear utterance, and that, on the whole, the English is more conscientiously articulated by educated persons in England than by the same class in this country. We mean by this to say that the consonants are more distinctly and duly uttered; that, for instance, 'shrink' and 'shrine' would not, as with us, be softened into srink and srine, 'suggest' into sudjest, 'arms' into alms. On the other hand, there is a tendency in this country to more distinct syllabification and more marked secondary accent in long words. The English say 'int'r'sting,' 'circ'mst'nce,' 'diction'ry,' tripping lightly over all the syllables after the accent, articulating plainly all the consonants, but almost eliminating the vowels, while we put a secondary accent on the penultimate syllable of long words, and give to the others as much stress as to unaccented syllables in short words. It is this peculiarity which brings upon Americans the charge of drawling, and which occasions the remark of foreigners that they can understand an American more easily than an Englishman."

The Climax of Invention.

The Bridgeport (Ct.) News very cleverly describes an invention, credited to a Bridgeport Yankee, to prevent market-men from palming off old eggs for fresh ones. The inventor proposes to arrange a rubber stamp in the nest of every hen, with a movable date. This stamp is arranged with a pad that is saturated in indelible ink. When the hen lays an egg, as is well known, she kicks slightly with her hind leg. An electric disk is arranged so that her foot touches it, and the stamp turns over on the ink pad, and then revolves, stamping the date on the egg. The hen then goes off about her business, the farmer's hired girl removes the egg and replaces the stamp, which is then ready for another. On each evening, after the hens have retired to their downy roost, with the roosters, the date of the stamp is altered for the next day, and the work goes on. In this way there can be no cheating. You may go to the grocery and ask for fresh eggs, and the grocery man tells you he has some eggs of the vintage of Jan. 29, 1880, for instance. You look at them, and there are the figures, which cannot lie.

THE RENT WITHIN THE CLOUD.

BY [illegible]

In our darkest hour of trouble,
When the sky is clouded o'er,
And the deepest waves of anguish
Beat loud upon the shore,
Oh, what would be our solace
When to earth, with grief, we're bowed
If we could not see so surely
The rent within the cloud?

When our friend we loved so dearly
Proves as false as traitors old;
When all joy seems but a mockery,
And that proves dross which we thought gold,
Before we pause to fret or murmur
At adverse billows surging loud,
We should cast our eyes to heaven
And see the rent within the cloud.

For 'tis always there, my readers,
Though a film may it o'ercast;
Yet one transient gleam of sunlight
Makes the whole seem bright at last,
Showing through the frowning darkness
The silver lining of the cloud;
Therefore never pine nor languish,
There's a rent within the cloud.

A FAMOUS Judge came late to court
One day in busy season;
Whereat his clerk, in great surprise,
Inquired of him the reason.

"And I'm the happy sire."
"An infant Judge?" "Oh, no," said he,

WHEN a child in a small Bavarian village was being catechised by a priest, and asked how many things are necessary in a service of baptism, he promptly replied: "Three, father." "Ah, you stupid," replied the holy man, "I thought everybody knew that two were absolutely necessary; first, water, and second, the Bible. Now, young sir, won't you tell me what are the three?" The boy looked up with a bland smile, and answered: "My father, the three are, first, water; second, the Bible; and third, a baby."

PERKINGTON is a man of decision. The other evening upon reaching home he was met by his dearest Maria with the harrowing tale of Bridget, the cook's, kerosene disaster. "Oh, John!" she began, "we've had such a dreadful time! Bridget tried to hurry up the fire—poured kerosene on it—blew up—burnt her to death—oh! oh! oh!" Perkington is a wonderful man, a man for an emergency. He replied, as a man who is not used to being thwarted in his purposes: "Discharge her immediately, Maria; discharge her immediately. I won't have such a woman in the house!"

The Better Spelling.

The new fashion in spelling, says Prof. David Swing, of Chicago, seems at first glance like a cruel slaughter of shade trees, and pet birds, and the family dog, but, if one will look at the matter calmly, he will see that it is no destruction at all, but is really an improvement of the old house, a trimming of the hedge, a mending of all the old fences, a making of a turnpike where there has been too long a mud-road, and the hanging of a neat gate where our fathers were wont to let down heavy bars. We ought to make a distinction between mere feelings and reasonable feelings; for, if we have permitted ourself to become so attached to an old wooden plow that we would not exchange it for the best steel one, we are not persons of deep feeling, but rather of deep babyhood and stupidity. The human race that will from deliberate choice spell the word program, programme, and tisik, phthisic, and which, when its folly is pointed to, will proceed to affirm that it prefers the longest way of spelling a word, should be compelled to go back to canal-boats and pack-horses, and to dipped candles, and to sermons two hours long. Progress is a universal movement of all things. If our fathers had a poor plow, and a poor wagon, and a poor reaping tool, so they had a poor way of spelling a sound, and must necessarily have written as they acted and thought in other particulars. They had poor paper, poor light, poor pens, poor ink, and a poor spell.

SABBATH READING.

Dickens at Prayer.

"Never abandon the wholesome practice of saying your own private prayers, night and morning. I have never abandoned it myself, and I know the comfort of it."—Charles Dickens to his son, E. B. L. Dickens.

When time the master puts away
The busy labors of the day
And buries all the thronging train,
The bright creations of his brain,
Ere yet, on bosom dark and deep,
The kind night hushes him to sleep,
In truth's own words of trust and love,
The master's prayer is borne above.

How many a friend's familiar face
Melts into night's unconscious space!
How many a child's dear voice is stilled
When sleep the staggering sense hath filled,
And all the canvas, wondrous bright
With gleaming figures, dies from sight!
Well may the master pause and pray,
Ere the cherished pictures fade away!

For sleep, with all its teeming train,
Scarce fills the chambers of his brain
With fancy figures, wild and bright,
And chasing forms of shade and light,
More rapid than the bustling throng
That moves his peopled stage along,
And thrills the world's responsive heart
With the deep pathos of his art!

How bright the line of living forms,
The touch of genius wakes and warms!
How dwells the master, fond and fraught,
On these fair children of his thought,
As memory glides, on noiseless wings,
Where sleep's wide ocean sways and swings,
And dreams, with glancing flags unfurled,
Rule the tired brain and weary world!

And so, as sense grows dumb and blind,
And darkness falls on eye and mind,
And death's twin brother silent waits
To guard the mystic slumber gates,
The master puts the throng aside,
The children of his love and pride,
And kneeling down, a little space,
Prays to the Savior, face to face.

Kneel, genius, at the feet of love!
So shall thy soul new pathos prove,
And so thy heart fresh influence draw
To move mankind to mercy's law;
So shall thy hand more deftly twine
The sighs that swell, the smiles that shine,
And so, by paths thyself hath trod,
Thy power lead on to good and God!

The King in His Beauty.

There was a celebrated painter once, who was making a picture of Jesus in the midst of his twelve apostles. In arranging the picture he concluded to paint the apostles first, and not begin with their Master till he had finished them. As he went on with the picture he tried to do the very best he could with each of the apostles. He took the greatest pains with their figures, their positions, their dress, and their faces. As he went on with his work he was very well pleased with it. After finishing the apostles he began with the person of Jesus. He got on very well with this till he came to the head and face of the blessed Lord. Then he laid down his brush and paused. He felt that the face of Jesus ought to be made to appear as much more beautiful than His disciples as the sun is more glorious than the stars. But how could he do this? He had tried so hard to make the disciples look well that he felt he had no power left to make their Master appear as much superior to them as He ought to appear. And so he finished the person of Jesus all but the head, and then painted Him with a white mantle thrown over His head. He thought that when persons came to look at his painting they would imagine what the face of Jesus ought to be better than he could represent it by painting. And I feel very much as that painter did, when I come to speak about the person and presence of Jesus in heaven. All who love Jesus here on earth agree in saying that from what they know of Him now He is "the Chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely." Then how will He appear when our eyes come to "see the King in His beauty," in heaven?—Richard Newton, D. D.

A Pauper and a Millionaire.

Before the outbreak of our cruel war I was accustomed for several years to spend the month of August at Saratoga, and to meet there many friends from the planting States of the South.

On one occasion, I was introduced to a new-comer, a wealthy planter, about 50 years of age, of whom I had heard it said by a clergyman, "He is a grand character."

His address and manners suggested the cultured Christian gentleman, who had inherited a good deal from his parentage. Hence, the whispered remark of a lady, a near relative, was to me a great surprise: "He has lived a worldly life, and, as a religious man, is only 2 years old."

"You amaze me," I replied; "tell me more of him. Was he led to a religious life under the ministry of your brother?"

"Oh, no," she answered, laughing at my mistake; "no great sermon could touch him! He could argue down any educated preacher, to his own satisfaction, at any rate. All the eloquence that ever moved him was in the prayer of a slave, overheard at night."

Reading in my eyes my entreaty for the facts of the case, my informant proceeded:

"A companion of Mr. Allen's school days, from New England, was his guest at the plantation-home. One evening, at the tea-table, the talk turned upon the negro melodies, and the Northerner expressed a wish to hear them at some one of the religious gatherings on the plantation.

"'I can gratify you to-night,' said the planter; and then within an hour the guest was asked to 'come with me.' Ere long the two men silently approached the cabin-meeting, unnoticed. The lively song fell upon their ears at a distance. As they reached the rear of the cabin it ceased, and they listened to the prayer of the leader. Mrs. Stowe's 'Uncle Tom' could never have improved upon that prayer, so unstudied and apt.

"After thanking God for His loving care the old servant gave special thanks for the gift of so good a master. Then came a sudden turn and change of tone, thus:

"'But now, O Lord, why bless us, poor people, so much with the riches of grace, and fill our hearts so chock-full all the time, singing day and night, and not give master a double portion to make him happy, like old King David, when he sang his new song, and wanted all the people to sing along with him? O Savior, show him Thy great salvation!'

"That prayer was a wonder; no one on there could have prayed just so except this very 'Old Tom.' It flashed a new truth into the planter's soul. He talked to himself:

"'Yes; old Tom is rich, a millionaire! I am a pauper. What a wasted life!'

"It seemed as if the change were already begun, the prayer answered on the spot; so that, having had power in heaven, it had become a power on earth."

A Millionaire's Career.

Millionaire Borland landed in this country from Ireland when a boy and worked on a farm on the Hudson for $10 a month. In 1852 he went to San Francisco and soon after began to work in the mines for $4 a day. Since that time he has made and lost fortunes. He is represented by the Daily Mining News as saying: "In 1872 I bought 500 shares of Central for less than $5,000. This mine was soon afterward cut up and put into California, and the redistribution gave me 1,250 shares. I never paid an assessment on it, for none was ever called for, and in no time the stock went up to $740 a share, when I sold. That paid pretty well. Let me see; I paid $5,000 and sold for $925,000. That left me a profit of $920,000. That was one of my best speculations, but not quite as good as another one that I was in almost at the same time. I bought 500 shares of Consolidated Virginia for $50 a share and paid two assessments on it, which brought the price up to $56 a share. This mine was also 'cut up' just about this time, and my 500 shares spread out into 2,750 shares. I held this stock for two years, when it went up like a flash. I sold out in 1874 for $750 a share. It cost me $28,000 for my stock, and I sold it for $2,062,500. That was pretty good interest on the money. One Saturday the stock was selling for $350 a share, but I held on. The following Monday it was $500. I tell you, it took a pretty strong head to stand that. I was getting rich, not at the rate of $1,000,000 a minute, as they say, but $100,000 a day or so; but that was fast enough. Nobody ever knew anything about this till it was all over. I never told my wife and family any of my business affairs, and never kept any books. The only book that I kept was a little pass-book that I carried in my inside coat pocket, with a record of all that I bought and sold, and the price. I never let any one see this, and never brought it out except sometimes on a Sunday afternoon, or when I was alone. My heavy losses in 1878 were on Sierra Nevada and Union. I lost $1,400,000 then inside of ten days—shrunk that much in depreciation of stock. The veins were not so wide as was expected."

Sleep-Walking.

The most remarkable instances of somnambulism are those in which the somnambulist works or writes with intelligence and method.

A young French ecclesiastic frequently rose in the middle of the night, went to a table, took pen and ink and wrote portions of sermons. It was not mere mechanical work—he would make frequent corrections to improve the grammar and syntax of his composition. An opaque screen was placed between his eyes and the paper, but he wrote just the same.

In another case a young poet, not having finished some stanzas before he went to bed, rose in the night, went to his table, and finished them so much to his satisfaction that he applauded his own genius and taste; in the morning he remembered nothing of the matter.

Dr. Carpenter mentions the instance of a man who wrote accurately in his sleep, placing his words at good distances apart, dotting every i and crossing every t.

A young collegian got out of bed asleep, lit a candle, sat down to a table, took pen and paper, wrote out some geometrical and algebraic problems, extinguished the light and went to bed again—his eyes closed all the time.

A learned professor set his pupils to work on a very intricate calculation. One of them went to bed with his mind full of the subject, and in the morning was not a little surprised to find his table covered with sheets of paper on which the calculation was fully and satisfactorily developed. The writing was in his own hand; he had risen in the night and done it while asleep.

A Consideration of Suicide.

Nicholas Ridley and Hugh Latimer stood at the stake to be burned for heresy. Fastened to the body of each was a bag of powder, placed there by friends with the intention of bringing the sufferings of the victim to a speedy termination. Latimer died first. The flames, rising rapidly, touched the powder, and the torture for him was at an end. Ridley was not so fortunate. The wood prepared for his execution being green and tightly packed, the fire smoldered, and he was long in agony, crying out that he could not burn; until, one of the spectators having loosened the faggots and admitted air, the flames swept up to the powder and brought death.

It is certain that the use of powder was not included in the sentence of death. It was permitted, not authorized. Death being sure, the persecutors were magnanimous enough, at the last, to allow it to come quickly. As the Athenian tribunal granted the privilege of hemlock to Socrates; as the English executioners failed to carry out, literally, the horrible sentence of hanging, drawing, and quartering; so the Marian officials did not insist on the extreme rigor of the sentence. But was this hastening of death, in a way unauthorized by law, either murder on the part of the friends of Ridley and Latimer, or suicide on their own part?

Under the old, stern common law, literally construed, the martyrs who used and the friends who furnished the powder were guilty, the former of suicide and the latter of murder.—Popular Science Monthly.

Italian Treatment of Shingles.

A case of herpeszoster or "shingles" is reported by Dr. Lamberti, in the Revista Clinica di Bologna, as having been cured by him in a single day by means of carbolic acid. He painted carefully the vesicles with the liquid acid, using a camel-hair brush, and then covered the whole part with a thick layer of cotton. It caused severe burning pain at first for two hours, after which ease was obtained, and the patient, having received a dose of chloral hydrate, fell asleep and awoke the next day feeling quite well. On the removal of the wool after three days the vesicles were all dried up, the crusts adhering to the cotton, and the spots that remained were not in the least tender.

LET US HAVE PEACE.

The Spirit of Sectional Hate Soundly Rebuked—Speech of Congressman McMahon, of Ohio.

The Deficiency Appropriation bill being under discussion in the House of Representatives, Mr. McMahon, of Ohio, spoke as follows in reply to Mr. Garfield:

I wish in all good faith to ask my colleague from Ohio, who has read us all, and me particularly, a lecture, why it is that on every political proposition upon which he undertakes to alarm the country and lecture the Democratic party we find that in the past he advocated the very propositions we now make, and pursued the very course which he now pretends so much to reprobate? Why is it? Will my colleague look to the history of the Republican party in the country, and particularly in the State of Ohio, with its long record of nullification on the question of the Dred Scott decision and the Fugitive Slave law? Gentlemen on the other side are amused. Why? Do they object to my reference to those days? Is it because the Republican party was then only in its infancy and that it pleads minority for what it did then? In those days actual resistance to the enforcement of the law was one of the cardinal points of the majority of the Republican party, a policy we have never advocated nor practiced nor indorsed.

Or, do gentlemen claim that the great public men of their party in that day were unsound statesmen, dangerous to the country and enemies to the Government? The judgment of an impartial public would be to-day in favor of the Republican leaders of twenty years ago in preference to those of to-day.

When the record of gentlemen has been so different in the past from their present position, on the questions of the effect of decisions of the Supreme Court, the supremacy of Federal law, and riders to appropriation bills, are we to look upon them as reformed statesmen? Does my colleague desire to appear in that role? Has my colleague seen the error of his ways? Has he become convinced that in those days he and his party was wrong? Are you willing, gentlemen, to admit that to the country now? Or are we to draw the proper conclusion that you can change your side as the necessities and emergencies of party demand? In 1860 the Republican party was as powerful, as strong, as brainy, as full of leaders, and as intent upon great purposes as it ever was in the history of this country; indeed, more so; for it had not then been debauched as it has been since by the unlimited possession of power; it had not been corrupted by the handling of millions or rather of thousands of millions of the public money without accountability except to itself. It was then a party for the equal rights of men; a party which a man might well respect although he might not agree with it in its aims and purposes. In those days one of the corner-stones of the party was placed in the Chicago platform of 1860.

> That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of powers on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends; and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed force of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes.

A similar enunciation of doctrine today by any Democrat would be denounced as hatred of the Federal Union and hostility to the Federal Government. Will you admit that in 1860 you were for the rights of the States because you possessed a majority of the State Governments, and were not in possession of the Federal Government? Do you admit that you were wrong then, but right now? I leave gentlemen to decide that before the American people. A party which can maintain both sides of the same important question, with equal vigor, depending only upon where its party interests may temporarily lie, is not well qualified for the position of monitor to any other party, nor are its teachings deserving of the attention of a serious people.

Mr. Chairman, the ingenuity with which our friends on the other side evade the discussion of all economical questions that look to the real interests of the people is remarkable. When the Belknap investigation was first ordered the cry went all over the country that the "Rebel Brigadiers" were assailing an honest Union soldier who had helped to put the Rebellion down; and, although he was proven to have been guilty beyond all controversy, Republicans did all in their power to protect him. This is only one instance in the past. When we have now under discussion the question of how much money shall be appropriated for the printing-office—because the Public Printer has violated the law in using up in eight months an appropriation intended for the whole fiscal year—when we discover that the appropriations for that department, if voted as the demands of the office now require, will make an increased expenditure of $400,000 over former years, when charges of extravagance, inattention to public interests, squandering of the people's money are made, how are we met? Why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] rises, and, in his dilettant way, says that he will not waste any time on the discussion of the Printing Office. That seems to him to be only a matter of a few hundred thousand dollars to the American people! I suppose, in view of the history of his party, he considers such a deficiency a very small matter. Perhaps it is. But it is the mission of the Democratic party at this time—and for that reason it has been kept in power—to look into the expenditure of the money of the people, no matter how small, and save wherever we can, no matter how small the sum may be.

This purpose of the Democratic party to economize expenditures and expose the extravagance of the administration cannot be evaded by side issues. It does gentlemen no good at this late day to flaunt the bloody shirt before the American people. It might do, Mr. Chairman, in the days when our people were distressed, when men were out of employment, when there was no work to do, when our manufacturing establishments were stopped, when every interest and industry in the country were paralyzed, as the result of the policy of the party of the gentlemen on the other side. But now if men are out of employment it is simply because the exigency of the occasion authorizes them to demand 10 or 20 per cent. over the wages of hard times. I say to gentlemen on the other side, when they come before the American people with that same worn-out, tattered, faded, bloody shirt, they mistake the temper of the American people. They will find that the people will put the seal of condemnation on that party which inaugurates these sectional discussions, tending to disturb the business of the country and to increase discord between the two sections.

The business of the country demands quiet, and the people will have peace. Who teach the rising generation that they should hate their fellow-countrymen? If you put into the hands of the boys of our day the speeches of Republican politicians, they are taught that their natural enemies lie in the South, and the seeds of future civil wars are planted by designing politicians for a mere temporary party advantage. Is this statesman-like? Is this taking a broad view of the present needs of our country? Is it patriotic to foment divisions at home, to perpetuate sectional hatred, to weaken our country by intestine quarrels?

Oh, I wish there was a statesman upon the other side. I hope gentlemen will permit me to finish my sentence. I know that we are all apt to imagine ourselves to be statesmen, and therefore gentlemen rebel when I seem to take away the right from any of them. I was going to qualify my statement, if the gentlemen had given me time. There are statesmen on the other side of the House. I am not disputing that proposition, either as to my friend from Maine or my colleague from Ohio. I was about to say to you what kind of statesmen I wish you had on the Republican side. I wish you had a statesman who was able to rise above fomenting all this petty political strife between the North and South. I wish you had a statesman who would wave the banner of peace, as the President did, for a while, until resistance in his own party became too powerful. I wish there was one who could overlook the past and let this country prepare itself for the great difficulties through which it may have to pass in the next few years. They are difficulties growing out of our increasing greatness.

There are gentlemen on both sides of the House exceedingly anxious to pass decided resolutions on the subject of the interoceanic canal. It is proposed that we shall lay down on that subject a doctrine which may involve this country in an unequivocal assertion of its rights, and lead us no man can tell where. It is proper for us to consider the situation. Are we preparing ourselves, in fomenting civil discord at home, to proclaim the act of any foreign nation setting foot on any portion of the soil of this continent as a declaration of war?

What must the people and the rulers of other countries think when they see our so-called leaders, or those who claim to be such, endeavoring to keep alive sectional hate? If the people of this country want to learn any lesson rapidly it is that we are becoming not only the great power on this continent but a standing menace to the world. The success of our free institutions is a constant argument against the despotism of the Old World. Our products, our commerce and our manufactures have almost brought Great Britain to her knees. Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that this can long be the case without forcing some combination against us? And is our country to be benefited by the appearance of division at home? Are we likely to have continued peace if we proclaim to foreign nations that we are divided; that one-half of our people are against the Government; that there is no peace between the North and the South, even though the war has been over for fifteen years?

A party that foments and proclaims these internal divisions and troubles, and asserts that one-half of this country means to overthrow this Government, only invites an attack which some day sooner or later will come from the combined forces of foreign governments. In what position will we then be? Read the reports of your Government officers, and they will tell you that in the Boston harbor there is not a single gun which can keep out the iron-clads of Europe; that the harbor of New York is in the same condition; that there is not a harbor in the United States into which the iron-clads of Great Britain, of France, and of Spain cannot go and take possession of your cities.

In the midst of these possible dangers, in the midst of the prosperity of our country, in the midst of the increase of business, in the midst of a desire on the part of the people to bury all sectional issues, when we ought to be shouting peans for our prosperity, and uniting in common energy that nothing shall retard it, the Republican politician comes to the front with his shouts of hatred to the South, his denunciation of the Democratic party as an enemy to the country, as intending to seize the Government by force, if not duly elected by the people; and, as proof of his assertion and the propriety of his hate, he points to the remarkable fact that his pet special Deputy Marshals of Elections who controlled the polls in San Francisco are not to be paid the $7,600 which is said to be due them.

The attempt to unsettle the confidence of the people is atrocious. If successful it would paralyze business everywhere. And the pretense that the Democratic party intends to seize upon the Government under all circumstances comes with bad grace from a party which robbed us once of our rights and seems disposed to do so again. Our submission to law is proven by the peaceful inauguration as President of one who was not actually chosen by the people.

The Oldest Triplets.

Kentucky must yield to Massachusetts in the matter of triplets. Nantucket is the birthplace of James and Francis Lawrence, and Mary, their sister, the widow of the late Edward Paddock, triplets, all living, and now more than 70 years old. Their father, just before their birth, sailed for Virginia, and was never afterward heard from.—New York Evening Post.

The Hospital for the Insane.

The thirty-first annual report of the Indiana Hospital for the Insane has just been filed. The following is an abstract of the report: Inventory of property, $1,391,462.96, of which $88,451.96 is personal; receipts for the year, $195,559.81; expenditures, $161,658.28; of the balance, $30,455.55 was covered into the State treasury. The disbursement for improvement and repairs were $20,011.08. Patients admitted during the year, 615; discharged, 582; deaths, 69; number remaining, 629; cost of maintenance, per capita, $191. In a medical point of view the results attained were highly satisfactory. Of the 1,229 patients treated, 23.6 per cent. recovered, and 5.6 per cent died. There are about 2,200 insane persons in the State, of whom 1,500 are in jails, county asylums and private domiciles. These figures show the urgent necessity for additional facilities to care for this class of unfortunates. During the year but one case of failure of self-control on the part of an attendant was brought to the notice of the Trustees, which was followed by prompt discharge. A comparison of expenditures for the past two years is favorable to the new management. During the year ending Oct. 31, 1878, the average monthly expenditure was $12,082.82; during the same period for 1879, $8,211.88. This reduction was not made in food supply, which was 14 per cent. greater in cost than for 1878. No mention is of course made of the recent charges of cruelty in the institution, as they occurred this year.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS!

The consumption of TEAS the last six months has been double to what it has been since the panic; this, coupled with the short tea crop, created a great speculation in them, so much so that some grades have advanced 20 to 30 cents per pound, but our method of purchasing is direct of the importers, thereby saving the profits of the speculator and jobber, and enables us to still continue to sell to our customers at the same low prices as last year.

A Great Paper.

How many of the Kentucky editors that copy the excellent matter from the Little Rock Gazette know that the author is the same determined individual who a few years ago edited the Scottville Argus—a paper that looked as if it were set up in shingle-nails and printed on a cheese-press.—Franklin (Ky.) Local.

The Scottville Argus! The name brings up a sigh suggestive of a split bellows. How that paper was reverenced; how the boys on the street persisted in calling it Hotville Scargus. It was unnecessary to read the proof, for no one could ever discover a typographical error. One day the individual referred to in the above clipping went into the office and found Warner, the proprietor, in deep distress. "What's the matter?"

"We can't get out a paper this week."

"Why?"

"I lost a type just now."

"Which one?"

"An m, I believe."

Then he took the office out of the oyster can ran over the alphabet and remarked:

"Yes, we've lost our m."

"What shall we do?"

"Don't know unless I go to the blacksmith shop and get a horse-shoe nail."

That was an excellent idea, and he secured the nail. Next day, four other types were missing, and Warner got more nails. The day following somebody stole the office and threw the can into the street. Warner got enough nails to set the paper up, and after it was issued, the leading man in the place (he worked at a livery-stable) came around and complimented us upon the improved appearance of our journal.—Little Rock Gazette.

Teaching a Smart Drummer the Good Old English Language.

As a newly-engaged commercial traveler was about starting on a commercial trip from his place in Chicago, the other day, he suddenly turned to his employer, a grave old merchant, and inquired:

"I say, boss, what shall I do when I get out of soap?"

"Soap?" said the old man, "why, save your samples, and you won't get out."

"But I mean what shall I do when I get out of grease?" continued the young man.

"Grease? grease?" pondered the old man, "why you don't need any grease—you are not working for a lubricating estab——"

"Oh, but you don't understand me," chimed in the youthful employe, rather embarrassed. "I mean what shall I do if I run out of spondulix—stamps—wealth?"

"Spondulix? stamps? wealth?" echoed the mystified merchant, looking at the young fellow over his glasses, to see if he had gone crazy.

"Yes, currency—greenbacks," exclaimed the drummer, "cash, money, you know."

A light seemed to dawn on the old getleman's mind at this moment, for gazing upon the creature before him with a look of contempt and pity, he broke forth: "Young man, what are you giving us? I rather guess you needn't go out, for I don't believe your class of customers could get along very well with you—they all speak English. Pull down your vest, step up to the cashier's desk and get your sugar. Now cheese it, cully, you're bounced."

And that is the way the high-toned kid got bounced—all through the pernicious habit of slinging slang.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

His Happiness was Soured.

[New Haven Register.]

"Such a morning! Hannah," enthused Mr. Smiley, as he tucked his napkin under his chin, "such a morning! Why I've walked around three blocks, and tetered on my heels and toes taking a bath of glory in the sunshine. And it has given me an appetite, Hannah, such as I haven't had since childhood's happy hour. Coffee; ah! Thanks. A little sugar and the cream, ah, don't never forget the cream, Hannah," and he fairly beamed with good nature. "I declare, what is this you've got for drink? Bah, Mrs. Smiley, it is outrageous——"

"Don't you like it, Ichabod?" inquired the dame anxiously. "It is a new idea for settling coffee, that's all. Sister Maria said a little codfish skin would make it pour clear——"

"A little codfish skin. How much, I should like to know?"

"Why, just a piece about as big—as—my hand—and—I——"

"Oh, the stupidity of womankind. Why didn't you dump in a whole fishing fleet into your coffee, madam, and a grocery store, or a sectin of the banks of Newfoundland—or—or." At this point his flow of English gave out, and leaving the table with a suddenness that shook the stopples out of the castor cruets, he strode out of the house, down town, a breakfastless and hopeless wreck.

MAUD MULLER.

Maud Muller on a fair June day
Went to the field to turn the hay.

Beneath her hat her hair was "banged,"
And from its brim no ribbon hanged.

The hay she pitched on an old ox-cart
Until her hands did bleed and smart;

And when she raked into a bumble's nest
Of all fast time Maud made the best.

She tossed and moaned the livelong night,
For her left optic was banged up tight.

Now when her dad a farm hand lacks
Maud stays at home and fries slap-jacks—
And tells him to hire a tramp.

Value of a Scientific Wife.

[New York Tribune.]

A farmer away down in Maine married a love of a school-girl, who didn't know the first thing about housekeeping or farming. When he took her home she neglected her household duties and went ranging about the farm "botanizing" and studying geology. The neighbors wives did not like her, but before they knew it, she had discovered on her husband's land a mine worth $40,000.

A Little More Light and Less Noise.

One of the members of the bar in Saratoga, N. Y., who thoroughly enjoys a good joke, relates the following, and applies the moral to himself: Not long since he was counsel in a case before Judge Pratt, referee, and during the progress of the trial became a little bit noisy, as he sometimes does, when the judge looked up and said to him: "Mr. —, did you ever hear of the man who was lost in the woods during a thunder storm?" On being answered in the negative, the judge continued: "A man, in attempting to pass through a piece of woods, lost his way, and while he was in that predicament a fearful thunder storm came up. The woods grew awfully dark. The roaring of the wind and the crashing of the thunder were terrific. The man was frightened and started to pray, but not being used to that business, said: 'O Lord, give us a little more light and a little less noise!' I don't mean you, Mr. —," added the judge. The counsel says that the audience supposed all the time the judge did mean him, and now that he thinks of it himself he inclines to that opinion also.

A Monkey Pulls a Tooth.

[Galt (Ont.) Reformer.]

We invite the attention of Mr. Darwin to the following very singular anecdote regarding the monkey "Dot," belonging to James Wardlaw, of this town, as so peculiar an illustration of the ingenuity of the monkey has rarely, if ever, been recorded. The monkey was brought to Galt from Deccan, India, in the fall of 1878, by Mr. Wardlaw, who had been residing in Hyderabad for several years. It fairly eclipsed itself on Sunday before last. The little creature had been suffering from toothache for several days, and evidently suffered severely. On Sunday the pain was more than ordinarily severe, and the monkey, like its human type, resolved to undergo a dental operation. But the dentist, strange to say, was itself. Dot found a string, fastened it around the aching tooth, seized the end of the string with its fore feet, drew up one of its hind legs between its fore feet, and gave a sudden shove which jerked the tooth out and sent it flying half way across the room. This having been accomplished, the monkey was at ease and resumed its natural cheerfulness and amiability.

St. Joe.

—Spring cometh.

—Young wheat looks splendid.

—Wm. VanZile now occupies his old home.

—A goodly number of fishermen, but mighty few fish.

—The concert last Friday evening was a grand fizzle.

—A good boot-and-shoe maker would do well to open a shop at St. Joe.

—The church contractor has been putting the finishing touch on the belfry the past week.

—The bottom has again fallen out of the grain market, and wheat is down to $1.10 per bushel.

—A millinery establishment at St. Joe would be a nice thing for the ladies. Don't all come at once.

—John Somerlot has the foundation for his residence completed, and will have the frame up in a few days.

—A Mr. Evans will move into the house lately occupied by M. T. Bishop. We understand that Mr. Evans is a brick-mason and plasterer by trade.

—M. E. Olds, Dr. Mitchell and Will. Volmer have their lots fenced in, which changes the appearance of things in that vicinity. Mort has his cabbage already raised—in his mind's eye.

—Vene Strong is strong, stronger, strongest—its a bouncer, of the male persuasion, and will add one to the greenback vote of Concord township.

—A few of the young folks of St. Joe and some country lads, under the supervision of Prof. Meeks, have organized a dramatic company, and in a few weeks will put upon the stage the interesting play entitled, "Kathleen Mavourneen." The play will run as long as the crowd holds out. We expect twenty the first night and a full house thereafter.

The Dead Child and the Bird.

[Jacksonville (Florida) Breese.]

A little child in Jacksonville was in the habit of playing upon the piazza of her father's house. Near by a mockingbird had its nest in the orange trees, and sang most beautifully, and the little child would throw crumbs to the bird daily. Ere long the child was taken sick, and the bird was forgotten in the anxiety for the sick one, and notwithstanding all was done that could be done, the child died. While the child's body was lying in the coffin the bird was seen to perch upon the slat of the window blind, pour forth one of its most thrilling songs, and then flit away. Some hours after this the body of the little bird was found dead upon the floor of the piazza, and was placed upon the coffin of its little friend and interred with it in the same grave.

THE BOSS GUN.

An Improved Patent by Dr. Gatling Which Does the Work of 800 Riflemen.

Dr. R. J. Gatling, an old Indianapolis resident, has made a great improvement on his patent repeating gun. The following complimentary in regard to the same is taken from the New York Times:

According to the London papers, all the most terrible and deadly weapons of war hitherto introduced appeared to have been thrown into the shade by an improved Gatling gun which was exhibited recently by Dr. R. J. Gatling to a number of experts, at the office of Sir William Armstrong & Co. This weapon is capable of firing 1,000 shots per minute, and killing a man or a horse at a mile range. The gun has a compact appearance, can be taken to pieces and easily carried about, can be applied to military or naval use, and the mechanism of it is simplicity itself. The revolving barrel has ten compartments, into which, as they whirl round, metal cartridges drop from a tall oblong case fixed over the center of the barrel. At each turn of the handle ten shots are fired [illegible] is accomplished by a sliding apparatus. The size of shot in different caliber guns of this class ranges from musket balls to half pounders. By the use of this implement three men can do the work of 800 riflemen. A quarter of a million dollars are said to have been spent on experiments necessary to perfect the gun, which is now regarded by military experts as a complete success.

Stolen Squibs.

It is just as safe, says Professor Huxley, to marry on a three-week courtship as to wait longer.

Not the income but the outcome causes the racket in married life, says the New Orleans Picayune.

There are 3,000,000 single men in this country, and there is no telling how many married men wish they were of the number.

Fifteen Wisconsin editors have been united in the holy bonds of matrimony since January 1; and twelve of their newspapers have been suspended in consequence.

A married man bought a spring chicken in the market the other morning, and now he thinks the reason it was called spring chicken is because it will take him until next spring to carve it, unless he uses nitro glycerine.

A newspaper writer, who died in a hospital at Cincinnati recently, willed his body to a doctor for the benefit of science. It was a superfluous precaution, however. As he died in Ohio, science or some other medical college would have got his body, anyhow.

Young men and maidens who are holding back from getting married until they are rich should remember that Adam and Eve had no such squeamish notions.—Buffalo Express. What ignorance! Why, they were the undisputed owners of the whole world.

GLEANINGS.

It was reported that Mademoiselle Sarah Bernhardt—who has given such hardt-burns to some of her rival comediennes—was to receive $400,000 for a twelve months' engagement in America. Mr. Smalley says that, though not strictly accurate, it is somewhat near the proposition made to her, which was that she should receive $600 for each representation, and $20 a day in addition for expenses.

Sheffield, England, has sent to Bridgeport, Ct., 100 cutlers, who will hereafter make knives on American soil. At home these men have been earning from $5 to $8 per week, and at Bridgeport they will receive from $9 to $15, working by the piece. These cutlers say that their reasons for coming to America are to get where a man can save something, and have a chance to rise in the world.

The internal revenue returns for the last fiscal year show that the consumption of beer has risen to 10,000,000 barrels, an increase of 25 per cent. in the five years of dull times. Since the German immigration began to set into this country no article of popular consumption has shown more steady increase. In the last thirty years its annual production has doubled six times, and bids fair to go on increasing now that its sale is [illegible] the South. Unknown before the war, it is now steadily superseding whisky there.

At the close of a prayer meeting in a Methodist church at Acton, Ind., Brother Hamlin, superintendent of the Sunday-school, announced that the services on the following Sunday would be held in a grove near by. This was really the result of a division in the congregation. Pastor Weaver said that, on the contrary, the usual services would take place in the church, and at once pronounced the benediction. The two then met in the aisle, quarreled fiercely, and then had a fight, in which the clergyman whipped the superintendent.

Late advices from the southern provinces of Egypt represent the slave-traders in [illegible] territories as not yet willing to accept the situation. Col. Gordon, in command of the Egyptian forces, had some desperate fighting with the slave-stealing [illegible] and punished them severely; but the chief of these wretches has mustered [illegible] followers and expects large reinforcements at Darfour from among the hordes whose business has been destroyed by the vigorous policy of Gordon. The latter, at last accounts, had gone [illegible] the insurgents at Darfour.

Nebraska is one of [illegible] of the new Western [illegible] increase in its population [illegible] the last decade, been something wonderful. In 1855 the population of Nebraska was 4,494; in 1860 it multiplied over six-fold, being 28,841; in the ten years ending 1870 the increase was four-fold, the population then being 122,993; in the following six years it more than doubled, [illegible] 1877 the population was 271,561; in 1878, 313,784, and by census taken for the year [illegible] the population to be 386,410, or an increase of 316 per cent. in nine years. The corn crop of the State this year is fully equal in quantity and quality to that of last year, which was the finest and largest ever grown. There is an increased acreage [illegible] the present year over last year of about 20 per cent., and the quality of the cereal is claimed to be from 25 to 30 per cent. above that of last year. The gross yield of all grains last year was about 70,000,000 bushels. This year it is estimated that it will exceed 95,000,000 bushels. A land of promise—and fulfillment—truly.

The latest statement of the Bank of France is the most remarkable ever issued. It makes the note issue of the institution $457,400,000; the coin on hand, $420,000,000. This exhibits a coin reserve of more than 90 per cent. as against the circulation of paper. Besides, the actual amount of money on hand has never been reached by any other institution in the world, and rarely or never by the Bank of France. It is almost thrice as much as the Bank of England reported as held by it at the same time. The coin reserve of the Bank of England is nearly all in gold, while that of the Bank of France is largely in silver.

Some workmen engaged in excavating a cellar in Chicago found buried in the ground about a half bushel of counterfeit half dollars, quarters, twenties and 10-cent silver coins, and [illegible]. Most of the [illegible] was [illegible] of the coin found its way into the pockets of the workmen and those who happened to be standing about when the plant was discovered. The counterfeit coin were extremely well executed. It [illegible] buried some time ago by some one who was desirous that it should be hidden forever. [illegible] were also buried in the vicinity a ladle, some of the molds, and some other tools used by counterfeiters.

TRAVELING STONES.

Many of our readers have doubtless heard of the famous traveling stones of Australia. Similar curiosities have recently been found in Nevada, which are described as almost perfectly round, the majority of them as large as a walnut, and of an irony nature. When distributed about upon the floor, table, or other level surface, within two or three feet of each other, they immediately began traveling toward a common center, and lie there huddled up in a bunch like [illegible]. A single stone, removed to a distance of three and a half feet, upon being released, at once started off with a wonderful and somewhat comical celerity, to join its fellows; taken away four or five feet it remained motionless. They are found in a region that is comparatively level, and is nothing but bare rock. Scattered over this barren region are little basins, from a few feet to a rod or two in diameter, and it is in the bottom of these that the rolling stones are found, [illegible] the size of a pea to five or six inches in diameter. The cause of these stones rolling together is doubtless to be found in the material of which they are composed, which appears to be lodestone or magnetic iron ore.

[illegible] climbed a tree to a height of seventy feet at [illegible], England, and drew a crowd of spectators, among whom was his wife and daughter, by [illegible] took a rope from his pocket and said: "Good-by; I have made a nice noose, and now I am going to tie the knot. Marwood says that a drop of six feet is necessary but I am only going to give myself three I have tied the knot and I am going to jump." Then he hanged himself.

PESTILENCE IN THE PAST.

BY [illegible]

Those who are acquainted with the history of the fourteenth century and the terrible plague that literally decimated the world at that time, can easily understand how a comparatively insignificant matter, such as led to the depopulation of Memphis, is magnified into frightful pestilence in the present day.

The dreadful pestilence of the fourteenth century made its original appearance in the East. About the year 1345 it spread through China, Tartary, India and Egypt. Some distinguished writers of the time, such as Mezeray and Villani, attributed the pestilence to the terrible vitiation of the atmosphere, caused, in a great measure, by the putrid exhalations of countless millions of serpents and venomous insects and immense quantities of huge and hideous vermin which suddenly made their appearance. So terrific in its character was the pestilence that the people imagined that the sulphurous vapors and pestiferous stench of the infernal regions had broken upon the entire world.

The ignorance, credulity and superstition of the zealous Christian writers of the time was truly sublime. They blamed poor old Mohammed for the whole thing, and said that it was traceable to him, for at Mecca it rained snakes and blood from heaven for three consecutive days and nights, that a terrible tempest had swept the temple of Mohammed and torn his sepulcher to pieces; that the stench of the snakes and blood and the sulphurous vapors arose in the air to the middle region, and the corrupting, infectious matter spread all over the entire world.

This singular meteorological phenomena was due undoubtedly to natural causes, for great inundations are recorded to have taken place at the time, and the vast accumulation of stagnant water created thereby contributed undoubtedly to the poisoning of the atmosphere. But terrible, indeed, must have been the condition of things at that time, for, according to very respectable historians, the whole face of nature was in a general convulsion; earthquakes and hurricanes of frightful force continued for weeks without any abatement scarcely. The houses, steeples and churches of Rome were knocked into a "cocked hat." At Naples whole congregations were swallowed up in an instant by the sudden opening of the earth; multitudes were buried in the ruins of their habitations, and the citizens stood terrified in the market-places and fields. Not even Germany escaped the ire of the infuriated elements, as many towns and villages were destroyed.

Lampadius vouches for the truth of the fact that it rained blood in Germany, and [illegible] were frequently seen.

A plague of no small magnitude would certainly be incident to such a condition of nature.

The plague had its origin in India, [illegible] there over the western parts of Asia into Egypt; from thence to Northern Africa, ravaging [illegible] Minor [illegible] islands in the A[illegible] completely depop[illegible] that were left, [illegible] were driven by despair [illegible] to devour one another [illegible] described minutely [illegible] Swellings appeared [illegible] or in the groin which broke into frightful sores, then a racking fever, with vomiting of blood. Frequently the party afflicted died in a few hours, generally within a day, and many fell into a deep sleep, from which they never awoke.

One hundred thousand Venetians were carried away. It then proceeded to Italy and France. At Florence it killed 60,000 people, and slowly wended its way north, destroying from 500 to 1,500 per day till it reached Paris, where it claimed 5,000 souls. It then turned in the direction of Germany, and according to contemporary annalists it ravaged that unfortunate country of 12,460,000 souls.

Finally the terrible scourge reached "Merry England," and stayed there till it devoured over 2,000,000 of the Saxon family. An idea of its magnitude may now be formed, and language cannot express, nor the imagination cannot conceive, the terrors of that dreadful time. One historian attempted to describe it, but his strongest assertion is that "people died bleeding at the nose and mouth; so that rivers ran red with blood, and streams of putrid gore issued from the graves and sepulchers of the dead." Horrible beyond imagination must have been the suffering at the time.

Large fields were used as burial places, where the dead were thrown into pits by the hundred. Imagine carloads of human carnage dumped into one pit! And the driver of the cart would frequently have arrived only at the pit with his load of reeking dead, when himself would drop to the ground and be heaved in with his load.

It is said that the disease was so contagious that it infected by touch and smell, so that the mother forsook her child, the husband his wife, nor would the priest or physician approach the bedside of a patient. Death raged out and inside doors, and sorrow was a commodity not known. Many fled to the woods and hired vessels and boats to take them away, but an expeditious death overtook them with a vengeance, as if indignant at their flight.

The plague did not completely die out till 1362 in England, which commenced there in 1349, and though we have read a volume of scientific dissertations upon the causes of plagues and epidemics generally, many of the writers assuming to know all about the matters, we confess to the belief that the medical and scientific world is wholly at sea upon the subject, and that all their theories are untenable.

MONEY WILL NOT DO ALL.

The making of a fortune enables man to cross the chasm which separates too widely the gentle from the handicraft classes. His money just does this, and no more. But the newly enriched man stores the future with mortifications for himself who fancies his mere wealth will gain him distinction in the circles of gentlemen. The tone of good society is [illegible]. Birth, wealth, beauty, talents, may constitute eligibility for society; but to be distinguished in it persons must be admired for admirable, and liked for agreeable qualities.

[illegible] of Sarah, a negro re[illegible] society of Amherst, Va., engaged Mr. Hall to preach the funeral [illegible] a deceased member, and the [illegible] of the dead chose the Rev [illegible] for the same service. The two clergymen met angrily in the church, and each insisted upon preaching. A compromise, on the basis of [illegible] sermons, fell through, because the question of precedence could not be settled. A fierce fight ensued between the factions, and the relatives finally drove the Sisters of Sarah out of the church.

ROBBING THE DEAD.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's Sermon to Young Men, Delivered in the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

During the announcements Dr. Talmage said: "I thank the contributors from every state in the Union for their donations toward the payment of the Tabernacle debt. If my call for $1 from each of my friends the world over does not finally succeed it will be through their procrastination. As near as I can tell there are fifty thousand people who, some time or other, will contribute a dollar." He also announced that on the following Sabbath, the 18th, he will preach a national sermon on his recent southern observations.

SUBJECT: "ROBBING THE DEAD."

Text. 1 Samuel, xxxi., 8: "And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his three sons fallen in Mount Gilboa."

Some of you were at South Mountain, or Shiloh, or Ball's Bluff, or Gettysburg, and I ask you if there is any sadder sight than a battle-field after the guns have stopped firing? I walked across the field of Antietam just after the conflict. The scene was so sickening I shall not describe it. Every valuable thing had been taken from the bodies of the dead, for there are always vultures hovering over and round about an army, and they pick up the watches, and the memorandum books, and the letters, and the daguerreotypes, and the hats, and the coats, applying them to their own uses. The dead make no resistance. So there are always camp-followers going on after an army, as when Scott went down into Mexico, as when Napoleon marched up toward Moscow, as when Von Moltke went to Sedan. There is a similar scene in my text. Saul and his army had been horribly cut to pieces. Mount Gilboa was ghastly with the dead. On the morrow the stragglers came on to the field, and they lifted the latchet of the helmet from under the chin of the dead, and they picked up the swords and bent them on their knees to test the temper of the metal, and they opened the wallets and counted the coin. Saul lay dead along the ground, eight or nine feet in length, and I suppose the cowardly Philistines, to show their bravery, leaped upon the trunk of his carcass, and jeered at the fallen slain, and whistled through the mouth of the helmet. Before night those cormorants had taken everything valuable from the field. "And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his three sons fallen in Mount Gilboa."

Before I get through to-night I will show you that the same process is going on all the world over and every day, and that when men have fallen, Satan and the world, so far from pitying them or helping them, go to work remorselessly to take what little is left—thus robbing the dead.

There are tens of thousands of young men every year coming from the country to our great cities. They come with brave hearts and grand expectations. They think they will be Rufus Choates in the law, Drapers in chemistry, or A. T. Stewarts in merchandise. The country lads sit down in the village grocery, with their feet on the iron rod round the red-hot stove, in the evening, talking over the prospects of a young man who has gone off to the city. Two or three of them think that perhaps he may get along very well and succeed, but the most of them prophesy failure; for it is very hard to think that those whom we knew in boyhood will ever make any stir in the world. But our young man has a fine position in a dry-goods store. The month is over. He gets his wages. He is not accustomed to have so much money of his own. He is a little excited, and does not exactly know what to do with it, and he spends it in some place where he ought not. Soon there come up new companions and acquaintances from the bar-rooms and saloons of the city. Soon that young man begins to waver in the battle of temptation, and soon his soul goes down. In a few months or a few years he has fallen. He is morally dead. He is a mere corpse of what he once was. The harpies of sin snuff up the taint and come on the field. His garments gradually give out. He has pawned his watch. His health is failing him. His credit perishes. He is too poor to stay in the city, and he is too poor to pay his way home to the country. Down! Down! Why do the low fellows of the city stick to him so closely? Is it to help him back to a moral and spiritual life? Oh, no. I will tell you why they stay; they are the Philistines stripping the slain.

Do not look where I point, but yonder stands a man who once had a beautiful home in this city. His home had elegant furniture, his children were beautifully clad. His name was synonymous with honor and usefulness: but evil habit knocked at his front door, knocked at his back door, knocked at his parlor door, knocked at his bedroom door. Where is the piano? Sold to pay the rent. Where is the hat-rack? Sold to meet the butcher's bill. Where are the carpets? Sold to get bread. Where is the wardrobe? Sold to get rum. Where are the daughters? Working their fingers off in trying to keep the family together. Worse and worse, until everything is gone. Who is that going up the front steps of that house? That is a creditor, hoping to find a chair or bed that has not been levied-upon. Who are these two gentlemen now going up the front steps? The one is a constable, the other is the sheriff. Why do they go there? The unfortunate is morally dead, socially dead, financially dead. Why do they go there? I will tell you why the creditors, and the constables, and the sheriffs go there. They are, some on their own account and some on account of the law, stripping the slain.

An ex-member of congress, one of the most eloquent men that ever stood in the house of representatives, said in his last moments: "This is the end. I am dying—dying on a borrowed bed, covered by a borrowed sheet, in a house built by public charity. Bury me under that tree in the middle of the field, where I shall not be crowded, for I have been crowded all my life." Where were the jolly politicians and the dissipating comrades who had been with him, laughing at his jokes, applauding his eloquence and plunging him into sin? They have left. Why? His money is gone, his reputation is gone, his wit is gone, his clothes are gone, everything is gone. Why should they stay any longer? They have completed their work. They have stripped the slain.

There is another way, however, of doing that same work. Here is a man who, through his sin, is prostrate. He acknowledges that he has done wrong. Now is the time for you to go to that man and say: "Thousands of people have been as far astray as you are, and got back." Now is the time for you to go to that man and tell him of the omnipotent grace of God that is sufficient for any poor soul. Now is the time to go to tell him how swearing John Bunyan, through the grace of God, afterward came to the Celestial City. Now is the time to go to that man and tell him how profligate Newton came, through conversion, to be a world-renowned preacher of righteousness. Now is the time to tell that man that multitudes who have been pounded with all the flails of sin, and dragged through all the sewers of pollution, at last have risen to positive dominion and moral power. You do not tell him that, do you? No. You say to him: "Loan you money! No. You are down; you will have to go to the dogs. Lend you a shilling! I would not lend you two cents to keep you from the gallows. You are debauched. Get out of my sight now! Down; you will have to stay down." And thus these bruised and battered men are sometimes accosted by those who ought to lift them up. Thus the last vestige of hope is taken from them. Thus those who ought to go and lift and save them are guilty of stripping the slain.

The point I want to make is this: Sin is hard, cruel and merciless. Instead of helping a man up, it helps him down; and when, like Saul and his comrades, you lie on the field, it will come and steal your sword and helmet and shield, leaving you to the jackal and the crow.

But the world and Satan do all their work with the outcast and abandoned. A respectable, impenitent man comes to die. He is flat on his back. He could not get up if the house were on fire. Adroit medical skill and gentle nursing have been a failure. He has come to his last hour. What does Satan do for such a man? Why, he fetches up the inapt, disagreeable and harrowing things in his life. He says: "Do you remember those chances you had for heaven, and missed them? Do you remember all those lapses in conduct? Do you remember all those opprobrious words and thoughts and actions? Don't remember them, eh? I'll make you remember them!" Then he takes all the past and empties it on that death-bed, as the mail-bags are emptied on the postoffice floor. The man is sick; he cannot get away from them. Then the man says to Satan: "You have deceived me. You told me that all would be well. You said there would be no trouble at the last. You told me if I did so and so you would do so and so. Now you corner me, and hedge me up, and submerge me in everything evil." "Ha, ha!" says Satan, "I was only fooling you. It is mirth for me to see you suffer. I have been for thirty years plotting to get you just where you are. It is hard for you now—it will be worse for you after a while. It pleases me. Lie still, sir. Don't flinch or shudder. Come, now, I will tear off from you the last rag of expectation. I will rend away from your soul the last hope. I will leave you bear for the beating of the storm. It is my business to strip the slain."

While men are in robust health, and their digestion is good, and their nerves are strong, they think their physical strength will get them safely through the last exigency. They say it is only cowardly women who are afraid at the last, and cry out for God. "Wait till I come to die. I will show you. You won't hear me pray, nor call for a minister, nor want a chapter read from the Bible." But after the man has been three weeks in a sick room his nerves are not so steady, and his worldly companions are not anywhere near to cheer him up, and he is persuaded that he must quit life. His physical covering is all gone. He jumps at the fall of a teaspoon in a saucer. He shivers at the idea of going away. He says, "Wife, I don't think my infidelity is going to take me through. For God's sake don't bring up the children to do as I have done! If you feel like it, I wish you would read a verse or two out of Fanny's Sabbath-school hymn-book or New Testament." But Satan breaks in and says, "You have always thought religion trash and a lie. Don't give up at the last. Besides that, you cannot in the hour you have to live get off on that track. Die as you lived. With my great black wings I shut out that light. Die in darkness. I rend away from you that last vestige of hope. It is my business to strip the slain."

A man who had rejected christianity and thought it all trash came to die. He was in the sweat of a great agony, and his wife said, "We had better have some prayers." "Mary, not a breath of that!" he said. "The lightest word of prayer would roll back on me like rocks on a drowning man. I have come to the hour of test. I had a chance and I forfeited it. I believed in a liar, and he has left me in the lurch. Mary, bring me Tom Payne, the book that I swore by, and lived by, and pitch it into the fire, and let it burn and burn, as I myself shall soon burn." And then, with the foam on his lip, and his hands tossing wildly in the air, he cried out: "Blackness of despair! Oh, my God, too late!" The spirits of darkness whisked up from the death and wheeled around and around, stripping the slain.

Sin is a luxury now; it is exhilaration now; it is victory now. But after a while it is collision; it is defeat; it is extermination; it is jackalism; it is robbing the dead; it is stripping the slain. Give it up to-night; give it up! Oh, how you have cheated on, my brother, from one thing to another! All these years you have been under an evil mastery that you understood not. What have your companions done for you? What have they done for your health? Nearly ruined it by carousal. What have they done for your fortune? Almost scattered it by spendthrift behavior. What have they done for your reputation? Almost ruined it with good men. What have they done for your immortal soul? Almost insured its overthrow. You are hastening on toward the consummation of all that is sad. To-night you stop and think, but it is only for a moment, and then you will tramp on, and at the close of this service you will go out, and the question will be, "How did you like the sermon?" And one man will say, "I liked it very well;" and another man will say, "I didn't like it at all;" but neither of the answers will touch the tremendous fact that, if impenitent, you are going at eighteen knots an hour toward shipwreck! Yes, you are in a battle where you will fall; and, while your surviving relatives will take your remaining estate, and Greenwood your body, the messengers of darkness will take your soul, and come and go about you for the next ten million years stripping the slain.

Many are crying out, "I admit I am slain, I admit it." On what battle-field, my brothers? By what weapon? "Polluted imagination," says one man. "Intoxicating liquor," say another man. "My own hard heart," says another man. Do you realize this? Then I come to tell you that the omnipotent Christ is ready to walk across this battle-field, and revive and resuscitate and resurrect your dead soul. Let Him take your hand, and rub away the numbness; your head, and bathe off the aching; your heart, and stop its wild throb. He brought Lazarus to life; He brought Jairus' daughter to life; He brought the young man of Nain to life; and these are three proofs any-how that He can bring you to life.

When the Philistines came down on the field they stepped between the corpses, and they rolled over the dead, and they took away everything that was valuable; and so it was with the people that followed after our army at Chancellorsville, and at Pittsburg Landing, and at Stone River, and at Atlanta, stripping the slain. But the northern and southern women—God bless them!—came on the field with basins, and pads, and towels, and lint, and cordials, and christian encouragement, and the poor fellows that lay there lifted up their arms and said, "Oh! how good that does feel since you dressed it!" and others looked up and said: "Oh, how you make me think of my mother!" And others said: "Tell the folks at home I died thinking about them!" And another looked up and said: "Miss, won't you sing me a verse of 'Home, Sweet Home,' before I die?" And then the tattoo was sounded, and the hats were off, and the service was read, "I am the resurrection and the life;" in the honor of the departed the muskets were loaded and the command given, "Take aim—fire!" And there was a shingle set up at the head of the grave with the epitaph of "Lieutenant ——, in the Fourteenth Massachusetts Volunteers," or "Captain ——, in the Fifteenth Regiment of South Carolina Volunteers." And so to-night, across this great field of moral and spiritual battle, the angels of God come walking among the slain, and there are voices of comfort, and voices of hope, and voices of resurrection, and voices of heaven.

Oh the slain! the slain! Christ is ready to give life to the dead. He will make the deaf ear to hear, and the blind eye to see, the pulseless heart to beat, and the damp walls of your spiritual charnel-house will crush into ruin at his cry, "Come forth!" I verily believe there are souls in this house who are now dead in sin, who in half an hour will be alive forever. There was a thrilling dream, a glorious dream—you may have heard of it. Ezekiel closed his eyes and he saw two mountains, and a valley between the mountains. That valley looked as though there had been a great battle there, and a whole army had been slain and they had been unburied; and the heat of the land and the vultures coming there, soon the bones were exposed to the sun and they looked like thousands of snow drifts all through the valley. Frightful spectacle! Bleaching skeletons of a host! But Ezekiel still kept his eyes shut; and so there were four currents of wind that struck that battlefield, and where those four currents of wind met, the bones began to rattle, and the foot came to the ankle, and the hand came to the wrist, and the jaws clashed together, and the spinal column gathered up the ganglions and the nervous fiber, and all the valley wriggled, and writhed, and throbbed, and rocked, and rose up. There, a man coming to life; there, a hundred men, there, a thousand; and all falling into line, waiting for the shout of their Commander. Ten thousand bleached skeletons springing up into ten thousand warriors panting for the affray. I hope that instead of being a dream it may be a prophecy of what we shall see here to-night. Let this north wall be one of the mountains, and the south wall be taken for another of the mountains, and let all the aisles and pews be the valley between, for there are thousands here to-night, without one pulsation of spiritual life. I look off in one direction, and they are dead. I look off in another direction, and they are dead. Who will bring them to life? Who shall rouse them up? If I should halloo at the top of my voice I could not wake them.

Wait a moment! Listen! There is a rustling. There is a gale from heaven. It comes from the north, and from the south, and from the east, and from the west. It shuts us in. It blows upon the slain. There a soul begins to move in spiritual life; there ten souls; there a score of souls; there a hundred souls. The nostril throbbing in divine respiration, the hands lifted as though to take hold of heaven, the tongue moving as in prayer and adoration. Life—immortal life—coming into the slain. Ten men for God—fifty, a hundred, a regiment, an army for God. Oh, that we could have such a scene here to-night. In Ezekiel's words, and in almost a frenzy of prayer, I cry, "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon the slain!"

What an amazing pity that any man should go from this house unblessed, when such a large blessing is offered them at less cost than you will pay for a pin—"without money and without price!" I have driven down to-night with the Lord's ambulance to the battle-field where your soul lies exposed to the darkness and the storm, and I want to lift you in and drive off with you toward heaven. Oh, christians, by your prayers help lift those wounded souls into the ambulance, and forbid that any should be left on the field, and that at least eternal sorrow and remorse and despair should come up around their souls, like the bandit Philistines to the field of Gilboa, stripping the slain.

Consumption Cured.
